CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

FORTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 994 add the following:

"For the support and civilization of the Navajo Indians, including payment of employés, $40,000."

Mr. JAMES. This is the same amount appropriated in the last appropriation bill, and the amount asked for in the estimates, but which have been left out, and nothing has been appropriated in this bill.

Mr. RYAN. They do not want it. I do not think we ought to increase the appropriation for the Navajo Indians, a tribe quite willing and able to support themselves without any additional appropriation.

Mr. JAMES. There is no appropriation made for them at all.

Mr. RYAN. They are supporting and maintaining themselves and getting along well.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that to be true, and if it be true why should we give them an appropriation which they do not ask? Is it not true that when you give to a tribe of Indians, or indeed to any people in the world, large charitable contributions you only demoralize them by rendering them incapable of taking care of themselves and making progress in the arts of civilized life?

Mr. JAMES. It seemed to be necessary in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior and the committee at the last session of Congress to insert a paragraph into the bill making a similar appropriation. It was the opinion of the gentleman having charge of the bill at that time that the Navajo Indians were entitled to something. I have merely moved to insert the same amount.

Mr. KEIFER. What for?

Mr. JAMES. For purposes of civilization—educational purposes.

Mr. KEIFER. They have never asked anything for food or clothing.

Mr. RYAN. Let us have a vote on the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. RYAN. That is what I supposed. It is for the support and civilization of a tribe of Indians which has been supporting itself in the past. I think it bad policy for the Government to commence supporting a tribe of Indians which has hitherto relied successfully on its own resources. If we commence supporting these Indians we will soon have to support them altogether. They will soon begin to lean on the Government for support, whereas heretofore they have been taught to lean on themselves, and have done it successfully. I do not think it good policy to adopt the amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do we owe them anything?

Mr. RYAN. No; we do not owe them anything. Of course my friend does not offer this amendment to carry out any treaty stipulation; it is merely a gratuity.

Mr. HISCOCK. Was anything appropriated last year?

Mr. JAMES. Did they not have $40,000 last year?

Mr. RYAN. I do not remember.

Mr. CHACE. Yes; it is in the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. RYAN. What is it for? Is the gentleman proposing to read from the bill?

Mr. CHACE. No; from the estimates. Here it is. The estimates say: "For the support and civilization of the Navajo Indians, including employés, last year, $40,000."

Mr. KEIFER. What was it for?

Mr. RYAN. I think that was for a special purpose.

Mr. ELLIS. Yes; for irrigating purposes.

Mr. RYAN. It was to enable them to do some irrigation for the purpose of carrying on their farming operations.

Mr. ELLIS. As well as for the purchase of stock.

Mr. RYAN. Yes; also for the purchase of some stock. I wish to say also that the appropriation provided last year was out of some funds of their own in the Treasury of the United States, and it was appropriated at their own solicitation.

Mr. KEIFER. I only wish to add to what has been stated by the gentleman from Kansas that my recollection is that these Indians have in no instance asked anything toward their support. They are the model Indian tribe of the West; they are an example for all the others, and as long as they can maintain themselves as they have been doing in the past we ought not to give them anything. But we ought to do everything we can to protect them in their reservation.

Last year we put in the appropriation the sum of $5,000, which was specially set apart to survey the boundaries of their reservation, so as to define them in such a way as to cut off encroaching settlers.

They also said they wanted out of their own funds a sum appropriated to enable them to build a dam across a cañon, so they might collect water and use it in the proper season of the year by irrigation for agricultural purposes.

They have vast herds of sheep. They live on mutton largely, and if they are not encroached upon they are going to be a rich tribe of Indians. They make what is known as the Navajo blankets, which are sold at the highest price in the markets. Any person would be glad to get one. My friend near me says he paid $20 for one.

A MEMBER. Fifty dollars.

Mr. KEIFER. Fifty dollars he says he paid for one. They are equal to maintaining themselves, and I do not wish this appropriation put upon this bill in that form. These are people who are proud to be able to maintain themselves, and I do not want this appropriation put upon this bill in the form proposed here. If there is any special aid we can extend to them I would be glad to know what it is, and will vote in that direction. I am one of the last to vote against an appropriation that is needed for any Indian tribe. But the Navajo Indians may be held up before all of the other Indians as a model tribe in being able to take care of themselves, and I hope no such provision as this will be adopted. Many of that tribe, I may say, go into the white settlements, work for the settlers, earn money, and I am told that they are quite provident with it.

The amendment of Mr. JAMES was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of Joseph's band of Nez Percé Indians, $18,000.

Mr. JAMES. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to provide for the removal of these Indians. They are now in the Indian Territory but are to be removed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 996 insert "and for their removal to Idaho, $10,000;" in all, $28,000.

Mr. ELLIS. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if that is recommended by the Department?

Mr. JAMES. I think so. I have not the recommendation before me, but my impression is that it has been recommended.

Mr. ELLIS. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. JAMES. I have communicated with the Indian Office by telephone with the gentleman in charge of this bill, who informs me that they are to be removed.

Mr. RANDALL. That was a provision in the appropriation bill of last year.

Mr. JAMES. They have not yet been removed.

Mr. ELLIS. I make the point of order against the amendment that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Transportation of Indian supplies: For this amount, for necessary expenses of transportation of such goods, provisions, and other articles for the various tribes of Indians provided for by this act, including pay and expenses of transportation agents, $275,000.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I move the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in after line 1120.

The Clerk read as follows:

For an emergency fund to be applied in case of necessity, for the relief of extraordinary cases of distress among the Indian tribes, and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in his discretion, $50,000.

Mr. ELLIS. I reserve the point of order upon that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I do not know, sir, but that the amendment may be amenable to the point of order if it be insisted upon. But we have had numerous examples for two years in succession of very grave disasters which have taken place, resulting in many deaths from unforeseen emergencies for which no fund was applicable. I trust that the point of order may be withdrawn so that we may consider the advisability of some such provision as that contemplated in the amendment.

For my own part I am willing to trust the Secretary of the Interior and the Indian Department in the application of said fund. It seems to be in the highest degree desirable that there should be reposed somewhere under some authority a small, a moderate fund, to be applied in cases of unforeseen emergencies to alleviate distress and prevent disaster. Such cases may arise at any time, and there should be some provision against them.

I will not detain the committee, but I trust the point of order will be withdrawn so that we may consider the amendment upon its merits.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CUTCHEON. It is a good amendment for all that.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the balance of the amount of $1,250 appropriated, in the act making appropriations to supply deficiencies for the fiscal year 1884 and prior years, to pay the expenses of the delegates representing the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians while in Washington attending to the business of the band or tribe during the year 1884, and not expended for such purpose, is hereby authorized to be used to pay the expenses of said delegation, including traveling expenses to and from Washington, during the year 1885.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to this paragraph.

Insert after line 1134:

"That the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury to the credit of the Eastern band of Cherokee Indians for the purpose of paying the services and expenses of former delegates of said Eastern band of Cherokees who have visited the city of Washington on business of the band, and to pay debts of the band: Provided, That no portion of said appropriation shall be paid for the debts of said band or expenses of delegates until the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior shall approve the same."

Mr. VANCE. I presume there is no objection to this amendment. It only makes provision for the payment of the debts of this band of Indians out of their own fund, and it is very necessary that this provision should be made for the benefit of the Indians. They have quite a boundary of land, and the taxes have not been paid in some instances, and the lands have been levied upon. The Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs approve of this appropriation, and it is necessary for the comfort and protection of the North Carolina Cherokees that this provision should be made.

Mr. RYAN. I am hardly prepared to say whether it is right or not. I think the gentleman from North Carolina ought to have presented it to the committee and had it carefully considered.

This is to pay some expenses created by persons who have assumed to be or were in fact delegates visiting the city of Washington in the interest of that tribe at some time heretofore. There has been some controversy as to who were the proper delegates. It has been assumed by some representatives of that tribe here in the city that their delegates heretofore have been self-constituted delegates, and did not represent the tribe. In view of the uncertainty concerning this matter, I doubt the propriety of adopting the amendment.

Mr. VANCE. I will say for the information of the gentleman from Kansas there is no doubt about this matter. It has been thoroughly investigated by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It has been known to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior for several years that agents and delegates were sent here from the North Carolina Cherokees, duly accredited on the part of the annual meeting of the council of the band. Each year the council holds a meeting, and they have sent year after year their delegates, who have never been paid. The present delegation has been paid, or the provision has been made for the payment of those that are now in the city. It is a matter of vital importance to these Indians. Here is the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which if gentlemen desire it I will have read, stating this is necessary. I assure my friend from Kansas there is no doubt at all about the matter. It is entirely satisfactory. And I call his attention to the fact that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior have to pass upon every claim before it is paid.

Mr. ELLIS. If the provision is carefully guarded in that way, I think it can not be objected to.

Mr. RYAN. Is it approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. VANCE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ELLIS. And is the money to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs?

Mr. VANCE. Yes, sir; I have just stated that.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to pay to Franz and Charles Huning, out of any funds belonging to the Navajo Indians, $6,000; the same being a claim for damages caused by depredations of said Indians, and examined, approved, and reported to Congress by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I wish to inquire if this claim has been acted on by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and recommended by them.

Mr. ELLIS. Every one of these claims has been examined and approved by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For support and education of one hundred and twenty Indian pupils at the school at Hampton, Va., $19,000.

Mr. LYMAN. I offer the amendent which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 1224 and 1225 strike out "$19,000" and insert "$20,040."

Mr. LYMAN. This amendment is offered to correct what appears to be a clerical error.

Mr. RYAN. I suppose there will be no objection to it.

Mr. ELLIS. The amendment is right.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. MANZANARES. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 1225 insert the following:
"For the purpose of establishing an industrial school for the education of Indian youth and the erection of the necessary buildings at Santa Fé, N. Mex., $25,000."

Mr. MANZANARES. Mr. Chairman, my experience and knowledge of this Indian question is that if the Government will more liberally extend educational facilities to the Indians, employ the best and most practical civilizing agencies, and in the proportion of these increased facilities for their civilization curtail their rations and other annuities, which only tend to make them indolent and depraved, and instead assign them a sufficiency of lands and teach them and compel them to work and earn their own livelihood, I believe that in a very short time by adopting this policy the Indians will become self-supporting, and at a not much longer period they will become useful citizens of our country. Therefore I advocate the increase of appropriation for the education and civilization of the Indians and the curtailing of their rations, which act alone would compel them to work, and in this way gradually become self-sustaining. As an illustration of this plan of civilizing them, I would refer you to the present condition of the Pueblo Indians, of New Mexico, whom the Spaniards taught to work, partially educated, and subjected them to live in towns, and are to-day self-supporting, thriving, industrious, and a law-abiding people.

There are in New Mexico, outside of what may be termed the wild tribes of Indians, some fifteen pueblos or Indian towns or communities within a radius of fifty miles from the city of Santa Fé. The children of the pueblos, as well as those of the wild tribes, could avail themselves of the benefits to be derived from such an institution if established. In this connection I will state, for the information of Congress, that the people of the city of Santa Fé have already assigned and donated twelve acres of excellent land for the building of such institution, and its establishment has been recommended by the Indian Bureau; and I hope the committee will grant me this small appropriation for such a commendable object.

Mr. ELLIS. I believe that this appropriation should be made. I believe that $25,000 could not be better expended than on a school at Sante Fé. You will reach the Pueblos of New Mexico, and you will also reach the Navajoes, both of which tribes are self-supporting, both of which are industrious, both of which only wait to be taught to work. The city of Santa Fé, as my friend from New Mexico says, has already dedicated twelve acres of land in the heart of the city for this purpose. There is already a school, and it is the earnest desire of those people to incorporate this Indian industrial feature into the school already established. I believe it would be money well expended, and support the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For payment, out of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for support of schools for the year 1884, to the Indian industrial school for boys on the Flathead Indian reservation, for clothing, subsisting, maintaining, and educating twenty Indian pupils in excess of the number provided for by contract with the Indian Department, during the twelve months beginning July 1, 1883, and ending June 30, 1884, $2,000.

Mr. ELLIS. The Committee on Appropriations have instructed me to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 1247 insert as follows:
"For payment, out of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for support of schools for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, to Lincoln Institution, Philadelphia, for the education, support, and transportation of thirty-four pupils in excess of the number cared for at that institution under written authority from the Interior Department during the quarter ending June 30, 1884, $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For transportation of children to and from Indian schools, and also for the transportation of Indian children from all the Indian schools, and placing of them, with the consent of their parents, under the care and control of such suitable white families as may in all respects be qualified to give such children moral, industrial, and educational training, under arrangements in which their proper care, support, and education shall be in exchange for their labor, $25,000.

Mr. ELLIS. The Committee on Appropriations direct me to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 1266, 1267, and 1271, strike out the word "children," and in lieu thereof insert the word "pupils."

Mr. ELLIS. This amendment is made necessary because the accounting officers of the Treasury refused to pay for certain Indians that were a little above children as regards age. The paragraph is made to include all pupils taken care of at these schools.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I offer the following amendment:

After line 1274 insert:
"To enable the Indian Bureau to pay wages to students of the several industrial Indian schools for labor performed at such schools, under such regulations as may be established by the Indian Bureau, for the purpose of encouraging habits of industry and labor, $10,000."

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask the gentleman from Arkansas to withhold his point of order for a moment.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I will withhold it, Mr. Chairman, but I want to save it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that in educating these Indians the primary object in view should be to fit them for ultimate self-support, and that above and beyond every other consideration should be the inculcation of habits of labor and industry which will enable them when they go out from school to gain a livelihood for themselves in life's pursuits. In connection with most of these industrial schools for the Indians there are greater or less tracts of land for farming purposes.

On page 4 of the report of the superintendent of Indian schools he states that some dissatisfaction arose at the Indian school in Kansas among the older boys because the superintendent did not pay them for working, which he was prevented from doing by the act making the appropriation. This dissatisfaction caused some of the boys to leave without permission and return to their homes. Those who returned to the Cheyennes and Arapahoes were collected together and sent back under police escort by the agent. I cite this instance simply as an illustration of the importance of the object I aim at, which is to provide that the superintendent of the schools may, under proper regulations and under proper circumstances, encourage habits of labor and industry among the Indians by offering them rewards. We want to teach the Indians above all things to become property-holders and to take care of the property they may acquire. In order that we may commence at the foundation with the youth who are now being educated at these schools, I think it would be most desirable that they should be encouraged to habits of industry by receiving remuneration for their labor. I believe that $10,000 could not be more wisely expended than in the manner proposed by this amendment. I hope, therefore, that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] will withdraw his point of order and let a vote be taken on the amendment.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I must insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

After line 1274 insert:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized and directed to reimburse the Miami Indians of Kansas for the amount of money improperly taken from said Indians and paid to other Indians, in violation of the treaties of 1854 and 1858; including attorneys' fees necessarily paid."

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I do not know anything about this proposition, but I reserve the point of order.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I will explain the amendment very briefly. I hope that the gentleman from Arkansas will not object to giving back to these Indians what properly belongs to them; and that is all that this amendment proposes. By the treaties of 1854 and 1858 certain lands were ceded to the United States upon condition that certain moneys were to be paid to these Indians, and the stipulation in the treaty provided that only those Indians named in the treaty should participate. In violation of that treaty other Indians were put on the rolls, and money was paid to them for five or six years. The Secretary of the Interior discovered that this money was improperly paid to the other Indians and dropped them from the rolls; but these Indians were never reimbursed the amounts that had been improperly paid out of their funds to those other Indians. Now, if the Secretary of the Interior does not find that this money is due to these Indians he is not to pay it. If he does find it due it ought to be paid, as I am sure every man on this floor will admit. That is all there is in this amendment.

Mr. ELLIS. Is there anything from the Department upon the subject?

Mr. STEELE. Yes, sir; it is purely a matter for Department decision; and if the Department does not find that this money is due to these Indians, then they are not to have a cent of it.

Mr. ELLIS. But has the Department asked that this appropriation should be made?

Mr. STEELE. It did at the last session. I do not know just what the amount is, but whatever amount the Secretary of the Interior shall find to be due is all that is asked. I hope there will be no objection to an amendment of this character.

Mr. ELLIS. If the gentleman will modify his amendment so as to direct the Secretary of the Interior to report all the facts to the House, or to Congress, on or before the next session, I shall not object. But the amendment as it stands is too indefinite. I do not know what money is involved—I do not know anything about it.

Mr. STEELE. The amendment specifies moneys improperly paid out of the amount granted to these Indians by the treaties of 1854 and 1858.

Mr. ELLIS. Who is to pay it? Out of what fund is it to come?

Mr. STEELE. Out of the contingent fund of the Treasury Department, I suppose—out of "any other moneys not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. ELLIS. I regret that the amendment is too vague in its terms and I am too unfamiliar with the subject to permit me to assent to it.

Mr. STEELE. The treaty of 1854 provided that these Indians should have an annuity up to the year 1880; and no Indians not included in the treaty were to participate in that annuity. But in violation of that provision, other Indians were put on the roll and did participate for five or six years. The Secretary of the Interior, upon discovering that these persons were improperly on the roll, dropped them; but these Indians properly entitled to the annuity have never been reimbursed for the money thus diverted from them.

Under this amendment, if the Secretary of the Interior does not find the facts to be as I state them, does not find that these Indians are entitled to the money, nothing will come of this amendment. I hope the gentleman from Louisiana will permit the amendment to be adopted.

Mr. ELLIS. I am willing to withdraw the point if the gentleman will consent to modify the amendment so as merely to require the Secretary of the Interior to report all the facts to Congress at its next session.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I do not know that I apprehend precisely the amendment; but as I understood it it involves an expenditure to be made before the next meeting of Congress. The modification suggested by the gentleman from Louisiana would, as I understand, require the Secretary of the Interior to report the matter back to Congress so that an appropriation may be made next year.

Mr. ELLIS. Yes, sir; to report all the facts.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I have no objection to that; but I do object to making any appropriation now in the absence of specific and definite information.

Mr. STEELE. I will modify my amendment as the gentleman from Louisiana suggests, so as to provide that the Secretary of the Interior be requested to report back——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will please submit his amendment in writing.

Mr. ELLIS. I trust that by unanimous consent the Clerk may go on with the reading of the bill; we can recur to this matter when the gentleman has completed the modification of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, that arrangement will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That whoever shall furnish to any Indian, by barter, sale, gift, or exchange, any gun, rifle, pistol, or ammunition or munitions of war, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not less than one hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, and be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years: Provided, That this provision shall not apply to the civilized tribes of the Indian Territory; and that the Secretary of the Interior may issue such permits to Indians for the purchase of arms and ammunition for sporting purposes as he may deem proper: And provided further, That the President of the United States may, in his discretion, disarm such Indians as in his judgment may seem best to preserve peace and prevent depredations. All arms thus taken shall be received by the Secretary of War, who shall report all arms received by him, from what tribe taken, and the just value of said arms; and Congress shall appropriate the requisite funds to pay for all arms taken, and said sum shall be paid to said tribe, and, as near as may be, to the original owners of said arms, or their heirs.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. This section in line 7 speaks of "the civilized tribes of the Indian Territory." I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Louisiana whether this phraseology is designed to embrace simply the five civilized tribes. If so, I think that in order to avoid any question of construction, the word "five" should be inserted. I move that amendment.

Mr. RYAN. I suggest to my colleague on the committee [Mr. ELLIS] that this amendment is proper.

Mr. ELLIS. I think it is right. I supposed the word was already in.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I move then to insert before the word "civilized," in line 7, the word "five."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That section 2139 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended and re-enacted so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2139. No ardent spirits shall be introduced, under any pretense, into the Indian country. Every person who sells, exchanges, gives, barters, or disposes of any spirituous liquors or wine to any Indian under the charge of any Indian superintendent or agent, or introduces or attempts to introduce any spirituous liquor or wine into the Indian country, shall be punishable by imprisonment for not less than six months nor more than two years, and by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $1,000; but it shall be a sufficient defense to any charge of introducing or attempting to introduce liquor into the Indian country that the acts charged were done by order of or under authority from the War Department, or any officer duly authorized thereunto by the War Department; but no part of this section or of section 2140 of the Revised Statutes shall be a bar to the prosecution of any officer, soldier, sutler, or storekeeper, attaché, or employé of the Army of the United States who shall barter, donate, or furnish in any manner whatsoever liquors, wines, beer, or any intoxicating beverage whatsover to any Indian."

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I move to amend the section just read by striking out in line 11 the words "less than six months nor," and in line 12 the words "less than $50 nor;" so as to make the clause read: "Shall be punishable by imprisonment for not more than two years and by a fine of not more than $1,000."

Mr. Chairman, I shall occupy the time of the committee very briefly on this amendment. I had hoped, after the illustrations which I endeavored to give yesterday on this subject, the propriety of this amendment would at once appear to the committee, and no argument in its support would be necessary. There are some facts which I desire to impress upon the minds of members. It seemed not to be understood yesterday by some gentlemen that under the Revised Statutes, as they now stand, the mere introduction of liquor into the Indian country is an offense.

By express provision the introduction, or attempted introduction, as well as the sale of liquor in the Indian country, to an Indian, is made a distinct offense. I wish it plainly understood that, so far as I am concerned, I do not object to that provision of the statutes. I believe, with the Committee on Appropriations, that it is a proper prohibition. I wish it further understood that I do not object to the maximum penalty; I do not care how high the punishment may be fixed. But I insist that there should be no minimum penalty provided by law, because, as I undertook to illustrate yesterday, there must occur in various ways technical violations of the statute; and we can safely trust to the wisdom, the sound judgment, and the experience of the Federal judiciary to graduate the penalty under the law to the nature and character of the offense as developed on the trial. Under the United States statute every man is a witness, all parties are witnesses. In this way, and with the assistance of the testimony, the judge can always get at the substantial facts in every case. I say it is safer and wiser and better, in view of this fact, to leave the graduation of the penalty to the judge presiding, as is now the law.

There are one or two provisions of the law which are an improvement on the law as it originally stood. I sanction them because they tend to close down tighter the gates against the introduction of whisky or liquor of any description into the Indian Territory. I approve of all of them. I make no apologies for parties who intentionally introduce whisky into the Indian Territory. What I do advocate is that we shall exercise some humanity, and when we come to punish parties who unintentionally have violated the law, I say in this regard we can safely refer that question to the wisdom, the justice, and the sound discretion and vast experience of the Federal judiciary. That is all I contend for.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman tell us how they can unintentionally violate the law?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. That is precisely what I undertook to state yesterday, and I gave several illustrations. My friend from Texas who sits in my rear, and who knows personally what I am about to state, will not dissent from the statements I make. The line dividing the Indian Territory from the State of Arkansas runs along parallel for perhaps one hundred miles with the great highway or thoroughfare over which emigration passes into Texas and returns to the State of Missouri and to the States farther east. At one or more places this public road crosses the Territory's line. Take an Illinois or Missouri emigrant en route to Texas over this thoroughfare. He does not know, can not know, when he will cross the line. If by accident he should cross the line with a pint of liquor, purely for his own use, he violates this statute. But if he knew the Territory line, perhaps he never heard of this law. But it makes no difference that he did not know when he entered the Territory or that he was ignorant of the existence of this law; he is, nevertheless, under the uniform rulings of the courts, guilty. The moment they cross the line of the Indian Territory they are subjected to the penalty under this statute, if it becomes the law. This law says this emigrant who unintentionally, unknowingly, unwittingly violates this law, who is as innocent as the unborn child, shall be put in jail for six months and have imposed upon him a fine of $50; for that is the minimum of punishment provided.

Mr. KEIFER. Has any one been prosecuted under such a condition of facts?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I stand here to bear testimony to infinitely worse cases.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I will give the gentleman even a stronger case than that, if he pleases. Some ten or twelve years ago the United States deputy marshal, who, under the law as it then stood, was entitled to one-half the proceeds of property confiscated when used in introducing liquor in that country, contrived to have whisky put into a wagon of a man who drove on into the Indian Territory with his wagon containing the whisky without having any knowledge of that fact. This man, as I heard the case, was arrested, his property confiscated, although unintentionally and unknowingly and unwittingly carrying this whisky into the Indian Territory. But under this provision he would also be put into jail for six months and fined $50. They do not inquire into the intent, or go beyond the act of introduction. They hold the act itself of introducing it constitutes the offense. That has been the uniform decision of the court for the last fifteen years, from my personal knowledge.

Mr. ELLIS. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Arkansas to submit an amendment covering that point.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Why not let the court have the control of the graduation of the penalty in that country. And I say with much deference to them they are sometimes too rigid in the enforcement of the penalty against these parties.

Mr. ELLIS. I do not think it too much.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. But gentlemen who know more of these things than my friend from Louisiana will differ with him on questions of this sort. But we need not get up any difference on that point. If the judge discharges his duty, imposing two years' imprisonment and $1,000 fine on any one who is intentionally guilty, is not that sufficient under the law? Can not we trust our judges? Sir, no complaint comes of the judge of the western district of Arkansas, who presides over the court there, that he is not rigid enough in the enforcement of the statute. To fix the penalty upon the ground that our judiciary will not impose sufficient penalty for the offense, is to doubt their integrity or their capacity to discharge the duty which they are called upon to discharge.

Mr. LONG. I should doubt their capacity if they found a man guilty under the circumstances suggested by the gentleman.

Mr. HISCOCK. Was the man convicted in the case where the whisky was concealed in his wagon and it was carried into the Indian Territory without his knowledge?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. That is my recollection. I know—I am positive I know—that this very case was developed in the courts at that time. I may be in error as to its final disposition.

Mr. HISCOCK. I can understand about a question of fact in the case where some one might have sworn or tried to prove the man did not know he had it in his wagon, but under the idea that any court held, under the facts as stated, and then imposed a fine and imprisonment, we have a right to doubt the capacity and every other attribute of the judge.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I gather the distinction you make. The facts I have stated may have been developed, and yet the finding have been otherwise. But even in the case put, if the judge had doubts and did not choose to set aside the verdict he would have no discretion as to the punishment. But I put this extreme case to illustrate, simply. It would not likely occur again or often under any condition of things.

But, unfortunately, my friend fails to make one distinction which is very clear. Let me illustrate it now: We have a statute in our State, and I apprehend that it will be found generally throughout the States, a statute prohibiting the selling of liquor to minors, if you please. Well, a man goes into an establishment licensed to sell liquor and is willing to make oath that he is of legal age. His friends stand by and say that he is of age. The beard has grown upon his face and he has every appearance of being a man in the legal sense of the word, and the liquor is sold to him; but the courts hold that the man who sells him liquor does it at his peril notwithstanding the assurances of himself and friends and the appearances in his favor.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. The courts of Pennsylvania do not so hold.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Our courts so hold and have always so held. They hold the same with reference to the solemnization of the rites of matrimony. The law prohibits the solemnization of matrimony between minors without express consent of parents or guardians. A minister of the gospel may avail himself of all the safeguards which he can to assure himself that a couple who present themselves before him are of the age required by the law. But it makes no difference; he marries them at his peril; and if it shall afterward appear that they were not of legal age he is amenable to the penalties provided by the statute. He performs the act at his own risk and must endure the consequences. So it is with this statute. It is not the intent that constitutes the offense, but it is the simple introduction of the liquor, regardless of the object or intent, that constitutes the offense.

Mr. HISCOCK. But in the case stated it was not a question of intent but a question of guilty knowledge.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. But that does not alter the case.

Mr. HISCOCK. You cited a case where a man carried this whisky in his wagon in ignorance of the fact that it was there. You illustrate your point by stating that it was put surreptitiously into his wagon and without his knowledge.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I gave also a case where an immigrant, if you please, traveling along the borders between the Indian Territory and the State with liquor in his wagon, shall, without knowing it, cross into the Indian Territory, or without any knowledge of the existence of an intercourse law. There guilty knowledge is also involved. In that case he neither intended any wrong nor knew that he was in the Territory. And yet he is as guilty under the law—not morally, it is true—as if he had intended the one and known the other. He may have no knowledge of the State line; he may not be aware of the point where the road crosses into the Indian Territory; but the moment he passes the line he subjects himself to the penalty.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I should like to have the indulgence of the committee for a moment longer.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, this proposition has already been discussed at the opening of the debate on this bill for forty minutes.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I simply want to add a single sentence, if the gentleman from Louisiana will yield to me for a moment; not on this particular subject.

Mr. ELLIS. Very well.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. In justice to myself, and in justice to the court as now organized, I wish to state that the extreme cases mentioned did not occur in recent years, but in years gone by—twelve or fifteen. That is all I wanted to say, except that I put the most extreme cases that I either knew or had heard mentioned, so that gentlemen may see the force of the point I make.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. What provision would the gentleman from Arkansas insert?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I would strike out the minimum penalty and let the maximum remain.

Mr. ELLIS. If the gentleman from Arkansas will propose an amendment which looks to cure the evil of which he speaks, I will cordially co-operate with him; but I shall oppose striking out the minimum punishment inflicted by this provision.

It is easy, sir, for us to say amend this bill so as to require evidence of guilty intent on the part of the man who crossed the borders of the Indian Territory for the purpose of selling or bartering liquor to the Indians. I say it is easy to make that assertion, but how will you apply the remedy?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. If the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. ELLIS. Let me continue for a moment. If the gentleman will say "no ardent spirits shall be introduced, under any pretense, into the Indian country for sale or gift or barter to any Indian," that, I take it, will cure the defect of which he speaks.

Mr. SPRINGER. For the purpose of sale, gift, or barter.

Mr. ELLIS. For any such purpose; either gift, barter, or sale, to the Indians. But this minimum punishment should stand.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. In what line does the gentleman suggest the amendment?

Mr. ELLIS. I would suggest, if the gentleman wishes to incorporate it, that it should go in line 5, section 2139.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That will do, I think.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I ask the gentleman to repeat the amendment again.

Mr. ELLIS. "No ardent spirits shall be introduced, under any pretense, into the Indian Territory for sale, or gift, or barter to any Indian." That, I think, will cure the evil the gentleman refers to.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Let me interrupt the gentleman for a moment. I desire to come to the point at issue here.

I am only anxious to place this amendment in such a shape that there can be no misconstruction of the law. But I will say to the gentleman from Louisiana that amendment goes further than I am willing to go.

Mr. ELLIS. There is no intention, of course, to keep it out of Arkansas. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I hope my friend will allow a suggestion.

Mr. ELLIS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I did not hear, and hence did not appreciate, the gentleman's humor; but the amendment suggested by him goes too far, and I think it would be a very unsafe one to adopt, because then the question of purpose is involved and there will arise all sorts of subterfuges, excuses, and pleas to be submitted to the juries, and the difficulty of enforcing the law greatly increased. It is a dangerous provision to insert; it would be very unsafe, in my judgment, and is certainly more than I want or would support if offered by him.

Better absolutely prohibit its introduction for all purposes, but leave the penalty to be fixed by the court, so that mere technical violations may be nominally punished, and flagrant cases to the extent of the law.

Mr. ELLIS. Well, jury trials are always uncertain; but I have more respect for the intelligence of the juries that will be impaneled to try these cases than to believe they will turn any man loose to whom guilty knowledge can be traced. That ought to be required. Guilty knowledge is the soul of every offense.

But I shall oppose taking away the minimum punishment provided here. The man who will deliberately sell to the Indians whisky when he knows the effect is murder, depredation, lawlessness, undoing everything we are endeavoring to do by our civilizing agencies, can have no punishment too severe. What does it do with the civilized man? It makes a brute of him. What does it do with the savage but to make him a double, yea, tenfold savage? And, as I said the other day, it is useless to go on with these civilizing agencies, to be drafting on our Treasury for schools, missions, all the agencies by which we are trying to raise up the Indian and make a man of him, if you permit people to put that into his mouth which steals away his brains, which steals away his manhood, quenches the fire of whatever humanity may have been kindled there, and reduces him to the savage again. There is no punishment too severe for such an offense, and it should not be left to the discretion of lenient judges. I mean no reflection on the bench, but all our experience shows us there may be lenient judges who are perhaps a little influenced by the proceeds of such traffic.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask the gentleman from Louisiana whether he has not made an argument, and a strong argument, why this section should not be amended at all but remain as it is?

Mr. ELLIS. I believe the section should stand exactly as we have reported it.

Mr. HENLEY. I desire to say in respect to this amendment that in the administration of the revenue laws of our country it has been constantly held by our courts that the matter of intent cuts no figure at all so far as the penal consequences that are in those laws are concerned. And I wish further to say that neither of the gentlemen who have spoken against this amendment seems to be read up or advised as to what is the tendency of the opinion, of the most advanced opinion, of modern jurists in respect to this question about prescribing procrustean limits, minimum limits, in regard to misdemeanors.

Gentlemen will find that the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas is in the direction of the best considered opinion upon that question, and that is that in regard to misdemeanors—and that is what we are dealing with in this bill—there should be no minimum punishment prescribed; that in regard to offenses which do not involve that high degree of turpitude, such as felonies, &c., more should be left to the discretion of the judge. And unless I have misread the authorities and wholly misconceived the tendency of modern and current thought upon this question, gentlemen in opposing this amendment are arraying themselves against what, as I have said before, is the general modern disposition in regard to this matter. I am in favor of the amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment offered by Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas, there were—ayes 36, noes 69.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. A quorum has not voted.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 102.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and the Speaker took the chair.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 3258) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Saint Croix River at the most accessible point between Stillwater and Taylor's Falls, Minn.; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 288) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the annual report of the health officer of the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PETERS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 4681) for the relief of Yost Harbaugh.

Mr. HOLMES, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 181) to declare forfeiture of certain lands granted to aid in the construction of a railroad in Oregon; and

A bill (H. R. 1565) to authorize the appointment of a commission by the President of the United States to run and mark the boundary line between a portion of the Indian Territory and the State of Texas in connection with a similar commission to be appointed by the State of Texas.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. KEIFER. I inquire of the gentleman from Louisiana why in line 7 and also in line 9 of this section the word "beer" is omitted. I see it is used in line 22. If it is a mere omission I think it ought to be inserted.

Mr. ELLIS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. KEIFER. Then I suggest that in line 7, after the word "liquors," the word "beer" be inserted; and also in line 9, and at line 14, before the word "liquor," I suggest that the word "intoxicating" be inserted; and that in the same line, after the word "liquor," the words "beer or wine" should be inserted.

Mr. ELLIS. I agree to that.

Mr. DINGLEY. I suggest that in each place we adopt the same language as in line 23: "or any intoxicating beverage."

Mr. KEIFER. I have no objection to using the more comprehensive word suggested by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I would suggest that the expression be used "spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors of any description."

Mr. KEIFER. I think the language used here is in harmony with that used in all our other statutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Ohio repeat his amendment, that the Clerk may get it accurately?

Mr. STEELE. While the gentleman from Ohio is perfecting his amendment, I will offer an amendment.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that when we are through with this we come back to the section last under consideration?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Very well.

The Clerk read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE], as follows:

After line 1274 insert the following:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized and directed to report to Congress on or before December 6, 1885, the amount due the Miami Indians of Indiana and Kansas for moneys due to said Indians and paid to other Indians in violation of the treaties of 1854 and 1858, including attorneys' fees necessarily paid by said Indians."

Mr. ELLIS. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the point of order made some time ago in relation to this amendment by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] withdrawn?

Mr. ELLIS. It is withdrawn.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will now return to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER], and the Clerk will read the amendment as perfected.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the seventh line of section 9, after the word "liquors," insert the word "beer;" strike out the word "or" thereafter; after the word "wine," insert the words "or any intoxicating beverage." Then, in line 9, after the word "liquor," insert the words "or beer;" striking out the word "or" and inserting after the word "wine," in the same line, the words "or any intoxicating beverage." In line 14, after the word "introduce," insert the word "spirituous," and after the word "liquor" insert the words "beer, wine, or any intoxicating beverage;" making it read: "Dispose of any spirituous liquors, beer, wine, or any intoxicating beverage to any Indian under the charge of any Indian superintendent or agent, or introduces or attempts to introduce any spirituous liquor, beer, wine, or any intoxicating beverage into the Indian country," &c.

Also, "but it shall be a sufficient defense to any charge of introducing or attempting to introduce spirituous liquor, beer, wine, or any intoxicating beverage into the Indian country," &c.

Mr. KEIFER. That is the amendment I propose, and I do not think there can be any objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to be inserted as an additional section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] desire to amend the section as it now stands?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then that amendment should be presented in advance of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON].

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I desire to amend by inserting in line 21, before the word "barter," the word "knowingly;" so that it shall read, "who shall knowingly barter," &c.

Mr. Chairman, I state very frankly to the committee that I offer this amendment having some little doubt in regard to it. It will be observed that the last part of the section under consideration is new law. It will be understood that under the law as it now exists and under this law the Secretary of War very properly has the right to permit any of these liquors to be introduced into that country. As a matter of fact and in practice these liquors have been sold there at all the Army posts to soldiers and officers in the Army—I do not mean universally, but they have been sold there under certain prescribed rules and regulations with which I am not familiar. There is, however, this fact in connection with the matter: the sutler in the sale of these articles is compelled, upon his peril, not to sell them to Indians. That is the case under the provisions of the law as it now stands, and under the regulations of the War Department as heretofore and still existing.

Now, the question is this: In that Indian country you will find hundreds of men of whom you can not tell whether they have Indian blood in their veins or not; unless you know them you can not tell whether they are white men or Indians. Why, sir, the recent governor of the Chickasaw Nation was a man of a good deal fairer skin than many gentlemen who sit upon this floor. It is impossible for an Army officer or a sutler who goes out there a stranger to tell just how much Indian blood there is or may be in the veins of such a man; but if there is a drop, and his tribal relations are established, then this law becomes applicable to the sutler if he sells the man liquor. Now, the object of my amendment is to make him punishable in such a case only where he sells to an Indian knowingly. But, as I said awhile ago, I have some little doubt about the policy of the amendment, because it may possibly open the way to deception and subterfuge, and induce men to pretend that they did not know that the persons to whom they sold liquor were Indians, when in point of fact they did know. Still, on the whole, I think it is wiser to put this amendment in the bill, because liquor is allowed to be taken out there and sold for medical purposes, under the Army regulations, and a mistake might occur and a sutler might be punished under the law as it now stands, when in fact he had not knowingly committed any offense.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, I must oppose this amendment. I do not think a sutler will have any difficulty in distinguishing Indians from other men, unless he is color-blind. [Laughter.] I want this law enacted, and I want the man who sells liquor out there to sell it at his peril; I want him to know beyond a doubt before he sells it that he is not selling to an Indian. I do not want any amendment introduced which will provide a subterfuge behind which any guilty party may shelter himself. The effect of this portion of the bill as reported is in the direction of humanity, in the direction of civilization. I feel that we should leave no stone unturned to suppress this traffic, and I must therefore oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I move to amend by adding to the bill, as a new section, the provision which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That immediately upon and after the passage of this act all Indians within the provisions of this act committing against the person or property of another Indian any of the following crimes, namely, murder, manslaughter, rape, assault with intent to kill, aggravated assault and battery, arson, burglary, and larceny, within any Territory of the United States, and either within or without an Indian reservation, shall be subject therefor to the laws of such Territory relating to said crimes, and shall be tried therefor in the same courts and in the same manner and not otherwise, and shall be subject to the same penalties as are all other persons charged with the commission of said crimes respectively. And the said courts are hereby given jurisdiction in all such cases. And all such Indians committing any of the above crimes against the person or property of another Indian within the boundaries of any State of the United States, and either within or without an Indian reservation, shall be subject to the same laws, tried in the same courts, and in the same manner, and subject to the same penalties as are all other persons committing any of the above crimes within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States. And the Federal courts for the proper judicial district are hereby given jurisdiction in all such cases: And provided further, That from and after the passage of this act any Indian or Indians may hereafter prosecute in any court any civil action at law or equity in like manner as others are permitted to do. And in all actions in said courts Indians shall not be rejected as witnesses on account of their race or nation.

Mr. ELLIS. I reserve a point of order upon that amendment.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I believe it is not necessary for me to say that this amendment is in the direction of the thought of all who desire the advancement and civilization of the Indian tribes. It is recommended very strongly by the Secretary of the Interior in his annual report. I believe we all feel that an Indian, when he commits a crime, should be recognized as a criminal, and so treated under the laws of the land. I do not believe we shall ever succeed in civilizing the Indian race until we teach them regard for law, and show them that they are not only responsible to the law, but amenable to its penalties.

I would not offer this amendment at the present time and in connection with this appropriation bill if I thought there existed the least chance or opportunity of its becoming law in any other way. If I believed it possible that a bill of the Committee on Indian Affairs, upon which, as I understand, a like amendment is intended to be proposed, could be taken up and passed at this session, I would not now submit this proposition. But I believe this is the only opportunity that will be afforded during this Congress for this or similar legislation.

We all remember the case of Crow Dog, who committed the murder of the celebrated chief Spotted Tail. He was arrested, tried by a Federal tribunal, and convicted of the murder, but the case being taken to the Supreme Court of the United States upon habeas corpus, it was there decided that the United States courts had no jurisdiction in any case where one reservation Indian committed a crime upon another. Thus Crow Dog went free. He returned to his reservation, feeling, as the Commissioner says, a great deal more important than any of the chiefs of his tribe. The result was that another murder grew out of that—a murder committed by Spotted Tail, jr., upon White Thunder. And so these things must go on unless we adopt proper legislation on the subject.

It is an infamy upon our civilization, a disgrace to this nation, that there should be anywhere within its boundaries a body of people who can, with absolute impunity, commit the crime of murder, there being no tribunal before which they can be brought for punishment. Under our present law there is no penalty that can be inflicted except according to the custom of the tribe, which is simply that the "blood-avenger"—that is, the next of kin to the person murdered—shall pursue the one who has been guilty of the crime and commit a new murder upon him.

Mr. BUDD. Why not insert in the amendment, after the words "another Indian," the words "or any other person?"

Mr. CUTCHEON. Indians are already capable of being convicted and punished for a crime committed upon any other person than an Indian.

Mr. BUDD. But it is not done.

Mr. CUTCHEON. If, however, an Indian commits a crime against an Indian on an Indian reservation there is now no law to punish the offense except, as I have said, the law of the tribe, which is just no law at all.

Mr. ELLIS. The language suggested by the gentleman from California [Mr. BUDD] will not hurt the amendment.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I have no objection to the amendment at all, and will accept it as a modification. I think this provision ought to be inserted in this bill; otherwise I fear it will not become law during this Congress.

Mr. ELLIS. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will consent to strike out the phrase "aggravated assault and battery."

Mr. CUTCHEON. I consent to that. We already have among the Indians the court of Indian offenses for the punishment of trivial violations of law. That court can take care of cases of assault and battery.

Mr. ELLIS. With these modifications I believe the proposition is correct; and I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I renew the point for the present; and ask that the amendment be read as modified.

The Clerk read the amendment as modified.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. This amendment is so long and the subject so important, that unless I can have an opportunity to investigate the proposition I must insist upon the point of order. If the question can be waived for a few moments while other business is proceeded with, I am perfectly willing.

Mr. BUDD. I desire to suggest another modification of the amendment—to strike out the words "and not otherwise." The effect of this modification will be to give the courts of the United States concurrent jurisdiction with the Indian courts in the Indian country. But if these words be not struck out, all jurisdiction of these offenses will be taken from the existing tribunals of the Indian country. I think it sufficient that the courts of the United States should have concurrent jurisdiction in these cases.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas insist upon the point of order?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I must insist upon it, unless I can have an opportunity for further examination of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. RYAN. I ask that the amendment I send up be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as an additional section to the bill:

"SEC. 20. That the President is hereby authorized and required to open negotiations with such of the Indian tribes located in the Indian Territory as in his judgment are in possession and control of a greater quantity of land than their interests require for the concession of their surplus lands to the Government, at such price as may be equitable, for the purpose of opening such surplus lands to settlement under the homestead laws of the United States, and especially to open negotiations with the Creeks, Seminoles, and Cherokees for the purpose of opening to settlement under the homestead laws the unassigned lands in said Indian Territory ceded by them respectively to the United States by the several treaties of August 11, 1866, March 21, 1866, and July 19, 1866; and for that purpose the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; his action hereunder to be reported to Congress."

Mr. HOLMAN. For the present I wish to reserve the question of order on that amendment. I think it is too broad.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I ask the gentleman to limit his amendment. I hope he will be willing to restrict it to the lands ceded to us by the Creeks, Cherokees, and Seminoles.

Mr. RYAN. I will so modify my amendment as to confine negotiations with the Seminoles, Creeks, and Cherokees to the lands ceded to the United States in 1866. The gentleman from Texas thinks it ought to be limited to those tribes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then the appropriation should be reduced to $5,000.

Mr. RYAN. I am willing, therefore, to reduce the appropriation to $5,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman modify his amendment as suggested?

Mr. RYAN. I do.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The point of order made against my amendment has been withdrawn by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. If the gentleman from Michigan will strike out one line of his amendment which confers jurisdiction on the Federal court for offenses committed in the States, I will withdraw my objection. The States govern that, except in classes of cases.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be taken up when the matter pending before the committee has been disposed of.

Mr. HOLMAN. I renew the point of order, as I believe it should be carefully considered.

The CHAIRMAN. To which amendment does the gentleman refer?

Mr. HOLMAN. To the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON].

Mr. RYAN. I have made a modification of my amendment, as suggested by the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Indiana, and ask now that it be reported as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the President is hereby authorized, requested, and required to open negotiations with the Creeks, Seminoles, and Cherokees for the purpose of opening to settlement under the homestead law the unassigned lands in said Indian Territory ceded by them respectively to the United States by the several treaties of August 11, 1866, March 21, 1866, and July 19, 1866; and for that purpose the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; his action hereunder to be reported to Congress.

Mr. RYAN. I ask for a vote on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on his point of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am satisfied with the proposition as modified, except as to the word "required."

Mr. RYAN. I do not care about that, as it is immaterial.

Mr. HOLMAN. Modify it, then, by striking out the word "required" and inserting the word "authorized."

Mr. RYAN. I will modify the amendment in that way.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. RYAN'S amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I now offer the amendment, as an additional section, against which the gentleman from Arkansas made the point of order, but which he has now withdrawn.

Mr. BUDD. It has been read.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Not in the present modified form.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That immediately upon and after the date of the passage of this act all Indians within the provisions of this act committing against the person or property of another Indian or other person any of the following crimes, namely, murder, manslaughter, rape, assault with intent to kill, arson, burglary, and larceny, within any Territory of the United States, and either within or without an Indian reservation, shall be subject therefor to the laws of said Territory relating to said crime, and shall be tried forthwith in the same courts, and in the same manner, and shall be subject to the same penalties as are all other persons charged with the commission of said crimes respectively, and the said courts are hereby given jurisdiction in all such cases, and the said Indians committing the above crimes against the person or property of any other Indian or other person within the boundaries of any State of the United States, and either within or without any Indian reservation, shall be subject to the same laws, tried in the same courts, and in the same manner, and subject to the same penalties as are all other persons committing any of the above crimes within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States: Provided further, That from and after the passage of this act any Indian or Indians may hereafter raise in any court any civil action at law or in equity in like manner as others are permitted to do; and in all actions in said courts Indians shall not be rejected as witnesses on account of race or nation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve the point of order simply to inquire whether this proposition has been considered by the House or the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I will ask the gentleman from California [Mr. BUDD] to make a statement in that regard. Now, the Secretary of the Interior, in his last annual report, uses the following language:

I again desire to call attention to the necessity for legislation for the punishment of crimes on the Indian reservations. Since my last report the Supreme Court of the United States decided in the case of "Ex parte Crow Dog," indicted for murder, that the district court of Dakota was without jurisdiction, when the crime was committed on the reservation by one Indian against another. If offenses of this character can not be tried in the courts of the United States, there is no tribunal in which the crime of murder can be punished. Minor offenses may be punished through the agency of the "court of Indian offenses," but it will hardly do to leave the punishment of the crime of murder to a tribunal that exists only by the consent of the Indians of the reservation. If the murderer is left to be punished according to the old Indian custom, it becomes the duty of the next of kin to avenge the death of his relative by either killing the murderer or some one of his kinsmen—

That is Indian law—not a very inviting kind of law where one murder is to be punished by the commission of one or more additional murders—

The laws of the State or Territory wherein the reservation is situated ought to be extended over the reservation, and the Indians should be compelled to obey such laws and be allowed to proclaim the protection thereof.

I now yield to the gentleman from California to answer the question of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BUDD. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is understood that the point of order is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the point of order to be reserved.

Mr. BUDD. I desire to state to Judge HOLMAN, and to the committee, that last year I offered an amendment having in view the same object as this amendment, which allowed an Indian who committed any crime to be punished in the courts of the State or Territory in which the crime was committed. It was passed by this House, without any objection, as an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill. It went to the Senate, and that provision was stricken out. It then went to the committee of conference, and there was an understanding, as was stated on the floor of the House by the gentleman from Louisiana, now in charge of this bill, that at this session of Congress a bill, or section of this character, should, by the agreement of the conference committee, be enacted or incorporated into the appropriation bill providing that it punish felonies only.

The objection by the Senate committee to my amendment was that it punished misdemeanors as well. It will be found in the RECORD of the last session, on the day when the conference report was concurred in by this House, that the gentleman from Louisiana, in answer to a question from myself, stated that they believed the amendment was a proper one, that it was in the right direction, but that it punished misdemeanors and offenses by one Indian upon another of a minor character that ought not to be so punished, and that it was understood if the same amendment was offered at this session of Congress so as only to punish felonies it would be acceptable to the committee and be adopted.

I believe Judge HOLMAN was himself one of the committee of conference on the part of the House at that time, and, if so, he will remember the transaction to which I now refer. If not, I will refer him to the RECORD on the day on which the conference report was adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I remember the fact mentioned by the gentleman from California; and while I do not propose to press the question of order, I regret that this legislation comes year after year upon appropriation bills, without taking the voice of the committee who are especially familiar with the subject.

I feel much safer in legislating upon a subject of this character if I have the aid of the reports from the Committee on Indian Affairs, or the committee intrusted with the particular subject of appropriation.

I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I renew it temporarily.

I want to invite attention to another amendment that I think my friend will consent to, if I can put it in such shape as will be acceptable to the committee.

In the sixth line of the proposed amendment we find these words:

And either within or without an Indian reservation shall be subject therefor to the laws of such Territory relating to such crimes.

Now, in the Indian Territory they have no laws except the Indian laws, and of course Congress does not intend, I imagine, to confer jurisdiction upon the Federal courts to enforce the Indian statutes. That language, therefore, in my judgment, has no applicability to the Indian Territory, and should be excluded. We would certainly never undertake to enforce the Indian laws or the laws of the Indian Territory by the Federal judiciary. No Federal court has any civil jurisdiction, of any description whatever, over the five civilized tribes of the Indian Territory.

My friend Governor THROCKMORTON proposes to ask the committee to adopt an amendment extending these laws to the Indian Territory, within certain prescribed limits; for instance, as to their applicability upon actions of debt on contract and for torts committed upon personal or real estate.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I regard the amendment which I have proposed as of so much importance and so valuable that I am willing to accept the proposed amendment of the gentleman rather than jeopardize the passage of the section I propose.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Michigan if he believes that all of these Indian tribes are in such a condition of civilization as that they should be put under the criminal law?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I think if they are not in that condition they will be civilized a great deal sooner by being put under such laws and taught to regard life and the personal property of others.

Mr. BUDD. This provision is as much for the benefit of the Indians as it is for the whites; because now, as there is no law to punish for Indian depredations, the bordermen take the law into their own hands, which would not be the case if such provision as this was enacted into law.

Mr. HISCOCK. That may all be true; but when we bring in a bill here year after year appropriating many millions of dollars to support and care for these Indians, and treat them as irresponsible persons, it seems to me that policy is not in the line of the policy indicated by this amendment, which proposes to extend to them the harsh provisions of the criminal law.

Mr. BUDD. We would like to change the policy of the Government in that respect.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then you had better defeat the present bill.

Mr. BUDD. We can do it in the way we propose here without defeating the bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. We want to change the law a little in the direction of law and order.

Mr. RYAN. And civilization.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes, and the civilization of the Indians.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Has the point of order been withdrawn?

The CHAIRMAN. It is still reserved against the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan; but an effort, as the Chair understands, is now being made to modify the amendment, so that the point of order may be withdrawn.

Mr. BUDD. It has been withdrawn, as I understand it, to allow Governor THROCKMORTON to offer an amendment.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I would like to read the amendment I propose, to see if the gentleman offering the amendment, as well as the gentleman in charge of this bill, will accept it:

Provided further, That the district court of the United States for the western district of Arkansas shall have civil jurisdiction over the five civilized tribes of the Indian Territory in cases of debt on contract or torts committed on the personal property of any person in or out of said Indian Territory.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. In view of the large number of amendments that are being proposed——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that they are not now pending; they are only submitted by way of suggestion.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I was about to remark that in view of the large number of amendments that are proposed it seems to me we have proof enough that this whole question should go to the Committee on Indian Affairs and be reported from that committee. Some of these amendments are evidently crude, being suggested on the spur of the moment.

Mr. BUDD. It is a step in the right direction.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I fear that with all these amendments we are likely to take a good many missteps rather than one step in the right direction.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] insist on the point of order?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I may suggest that it ought really to be insisted on, but I do not like to do it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. We can not get this in any other way except on an appropriation bill. I accept the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THROCKMORTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the amendment as modified.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I think it will be found to be all right when all is read together.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That immediately upon and after the date of the passage of this act all Indians within the provisions of this act committing against the person or property of another Indian or other person any of the following crimes, namely, murder, manslaughter, rape, assault with intent to kill, arson, burglary, and larceny, within any Territory of the United States, and either within or without an Indian reservation, shall be subject therefor to the laws of such Territory relating to said crimes and shall be tried therefor in the same courts and in the same manner and shall be subject to the same penalties as are all other persons charged with the commission of the said crimes, respectively; and the said courts are hereby given jurisdiction in all such cases, and all such Indians committing any of the above crimes against the person or property of another Indian or other person within the boundaries of any State of the United States and either within or without an Indian reservation, shall be subject to the same laws, tried in the same courts and in the same manner, and subject to the same penalties as are all other persons committing any of the above crimes within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States: And provided further, That from and after the passage of this act any Indian or Indians may hereafter prosecute in any court any civil action at law or equity in like manner as others are permitted to do, and in all actions in said courts Indians shall not be rejected as witnesses on account of their race or nation: Provided further, This act shall not be so construed as to confer jurisdiction upon either the State or Federal courts to execute the laws of any of the five civilized tribes in the Indian country: Provided further, That the district court of the United States for the western district of Arkansas shall have civil jurisdiction over the five civilized tribes of the Indian Territory in cases of debt on contract or torts committed upon the personal property of any person either in or out of said Territory.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I wish to inquire, before I make the point of order, whether this proposed amendment conflicts with any treaty stipulations?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I think that ought to be known positively. I do not, however, insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas withdraw his point of order?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Will the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THROCKMORTON] add to his amendment the words "and white persons," so that white people as well as the Indians shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the court?

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I agree to that suggestion. I will modify my amendment by inserting, after the words "over the five civilized tribes," the words "and white people."

Mr. CUTCHEON. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] withdraw the point of order?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] as subsequently modified.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 68, noes 2.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, before moving that the committee rise I desire to express my regret that on yesterday in the course of the discussion upon this bill I was betrayed by infirmity of temper into language which I very greatly regret. I desire, therefore, to withdraw such language and to make my acknowledgments to you, sir, and to the committee. [Applause.]

Now, sir, I move that the committee rise and report the bill with amendments to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire also to say that if through the infirmity of temper I used on yesterday any words that were improper I cheerfully withdraw them. [Applause.]

The motion that the committee rise was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WELLBORN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7970) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. ELLIS. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendments?

No separate vote was demanded.

The amendments were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, before moving the previous question on the passage of the bill I desire very briefly to pay my respects to Mr. Painter. I had promised that unless I could convict him of misstatement, if nothing worse, I would apologize to him. I have his letter here. I have seen that letter this evening for the first time. I had heard that there was such a letter published in the New York Tribune, and certain Hartford and Boston papers, the Christian Union, of New York, and some other papers which were sent to me, all referred to this letter of Professor Painter. I made an endeavor to get the letter a few days ago by searching the files of the New York Tribune, but the clerk of the Committee on Appropriatians, who was sent for it, failed to find it. Mark you, this letter is dated December 24, whereas it was not published until January 5.

The first misstatement made in that letter by Mr. Painter is as follows:

You had, only the evening before, repeated to me the explicit promise made by you and Mr. RYAN to the committee of the Indian Rights Association on the 12th instant, that you would, just as soon as the estimate reached your committee, introduce and secure the passage of a joint resolution appropriating the sum asked for.

Mr. Speaker, I did not make, nor did Mr. RYAN, in my presence, make any such promise. About the 12th of December we were waited upon by a delegation of the Indian Rights Association, among whom was Mr. Painter. They represented the necessities of the Indians and we listened, and the interview was protracted to half an hour or more. We told them that just as soon as the estimates reached us regularly from the Indian Office through the Treasury Department we would give them immediate consideration. That was on the 12th of the month. One the 17th, five days afterward, the letter of Secretary Mc-

Culloch was written. It was transmitted to the House on that day, and by the stamp of the committee upon it I see that it reached the committee on the 19th of December.

On the 20th of December, before there was time to call the committee together or to consider this subject at all, the House adjourned for the Christmas holidays. On that very day, the 20th, Mr. Painter followed me and spoke to me several times about this matter, and I finally told him, in the area in front of your desk, Mr. Speaker, that I could attend to my own business without any further suggestions from him. That interview affords the key to and explains the animus of Mr. Painter's letter. We never did promise Mr. Painter, or any one else, to legislate in any manner whatever; we simply said that as soon as the estimate reached us we would give it consideration, and this constitutes misstatement number one. The estimate did reach us on the 19th of December last. We could not consider it during the Christmas holidays; but while Mr. Painter was nursing his wrath and concocting untruths, and while the printers of the Tribune were setting up Mr. Painter's concoction, I was considering the estimate and preparing the work necessary to this appropriation, which passed on the morning of the 6th of January, only two days after the reassembling of Congress. And yet this "most Christian gentleman" has the brazen effrontery to charge me with purposely delaying the relief needed by the Montana Indians, when he knew there was no suffering, and would not be until after the 1st of April, and that the Department had intimated the appropriation would be in time if made by the 15th of January.

The next misstatement in Mr. Painter's letter is this:

The deficiency created by the action of your committee.

Professor Painter should have known better than that. The deficiency referred to here which occasioned the suffering among the Indians last year was in the appropriation made by the Forty-seventh Congress. It was the appropriation for 1884. There has been no suffering under any appropriation which I have ever sent for the relief of the Indians, not one single case of starvation or suffering; for all the suffering occurred under the appropriations for 1884, with which I had nothing to do. That appropriation bill was prepared by my honored friend from Kansas [Mr. RYAN], assisted by a gentleman then a member from Wisconsin [Mr. Caswell] and by Mr. LE FEVRE, of Ohio, in the Forty-seventh Congress, when Mr. KEIFER was the Speaker. I had nothing to do with that appropriation bill, and Mr. Painter's assertion that this suffering resulted from the delinquency or the inhumanity of my committee is utterly and totally false; and he can not plead ignorance here, for he has been before these committees four or five years, so that this misstatement, calculated to malign and to injure, was willfully made. He goes on to say in this letter:

The deficiency created by the action of your committee was $84,000.

Then follows another falsehood; ay, three in one paragraph! He says:

The President called the attention of Congress to the facts as communicated to him by the Secretary of the Interior, who asked for $138,000 to meet the emergency.

That, Mr. Speaker, is wholly and entirely false. I hold in my hand the estimate which was sent to Congress. It is Executive Document No. 18, Forty-eighth Congress, first session. It asks for an appropriation of $50,000. There were three items for which appropriations were asked: (1) Amount necessary to pay indebtedness incurred on account of pay of interpreters for the fiscal year, &c., $20,000; (2) Telegraphing and purchase of Indian supplies, $5,000 (a deficiency); (3) For the support of the Indians in Montana, $50,000. But along with the estimates for this deficiency were printed the amounts which had been appropriated by the bill under these heads. The amount appropriated for these three items was $138,000; while the deficiency asked for the Indians was $50,000; and there is where this "intelligent, most reliable, most well-informed, and most Christian gentleman" gets his figures.

Every dollar of the deficiency was appropriated at once. So soon as it was brought to our attention we assembled immediately, and the matter was brought before this House, and the whole amount asked was appropriated. I remember well that the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] came to me with this very document in his hand, and, pointing to the figures which represented the entire appropriation, asked me if $138,000 was not called for. He was looking at the column of figures which set forth the total amount already appropriated. I pointed him to the correct column, showing that only $50,000 was asked for by the Department. That sum was immediately given by a practically unanimous vote of the House. That bill went to the Senate, and before its consideration there was had the Department sent to the Senate another estimate, increasing the deficiency estimate. The Senate increased the amount of the House appropriation to $100,000, and when it came back to the House and I saw for the first time the increased estimate of the Department I at once moved concurrence in the Senate amendment, which was carried.

But yet Mr. Painter goes on to say:

If you are doubtful as to your responsibility for the non-concurrence of the House in this amendment, I will respectfully refer you to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for February 1, 1884, pages 823 and 824.

He seeks to make me responsible for the omission of a former committee and for delay for which I was not responsible, but for which the Department of the Interior was responsible, in not sending to this House the correct estimate at once, and also in not asking us to dispense with the usual delays and formalities of advertising for the purchase of the emergency supplies.

Then Mr. Painter goes on to say:

Your assertion, made with great positiveness and reiteration, that your committee had given every dollar that had been asked for by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs caused the House to reject the Senate amendment; and a delay ensued before you were forced to correct the mistake, which was fatal to many poor starving Indians.

At the time that I asked the House to non-concur in the Senate amendment I had not seen the increased deficiency estimate sent only to the Senate. I knew we had voted every dollar asked of the House, and I thought the Senate had doubled the House appropriation without proper consideration. As I have just stated, this mistake was promptly corrected so soon as I saw the increased estimate.

Originally there was some delay in looking into this matter, but in this I was not wholly to blame. Certainly the neglect was not intentional. The causes of that delay were chiefly to be found in the fact that the committees and subcommittees were not announced; for you will remember, Mr. Speaker, that you did not announce the committees until the day the House took its holiday adjournment, and the subcommittees were not announced until the reassembling of Congress after the holidays. So soon as the Indian bill was assigned to me and this matter was brought to my attention the appropriation was reported by me to the committee, and by its order to the House, and passed. There was no delay so soon as I knew the facts, for when the Senate returned to us the bill amended, and I found that the Department had made to them a renewed and greater demand, it was most cheerfully concurred in. And the Indians had all the while been suffering since November, not under any bill that I had framed, as Mr. Painter declares, but under a bill prepared in the Forty-seventh Congress, and with the preparation of which I had not the slightest thing to do.

Mr. CHACE. Now, will the gentleman excuse me right there, because my memory differs from his. If I remember aright, the Secretary of the Interior had made a demand for $138,000, which I brought to the gentleman's attention, and he said to me, "You let this matter go to the Senate; let them amend it, and we will not object."

Mr. ELLIS. I have no recollection of any such thing. If the gentleman will examine the column of figures of the document No. 18, which I send him, he will find out where he, as well as this most Christian gentleman, Mr. Painter, obtained his information.

Mr. CHACE. This is none of my quarrel, but that is my recollection.

Mr. ELLIS. Then he goes on to say——

Mr. CHACE. Very well; this document calls for $138,000.

Mr. ELLIS. I beg your pardon; read it again, and you had better send it to Mr. Painter and let him read it. [Laughter.] Does the gentleman from Rhode Island discover his error? [A pause.]

Mr. CHACE. I see that this does not call for $138,000.

Mr. ELLIS. That is exactly the document upon which the action of the House, led by me, was based. It calls for $50,000 for these Indians. We gave it all; but yet Painter stoutly affirms that I cut down the estimates.

Then he goes on:

At Fort Belknap the suffering would have been just as great but for the fact that it was near a large military post, and that the men——

Mr. Speaker, I am ashamed to read this paragraph penned by this Christian gentleman, but he thrusts it upon the attention of the country in the public prints to fasten upon me its infamy as its author. He says in effect that the men brought their wives and daughters there and made merchandise of them. He attributes the responsibility of that to me, this Christian gentleman! Why, sir, had he been informed as to those Indians, had he read the history of the people of whose cause he is the self-constituted advocate, he would have found in the records of the Lewis and Clarke expedition of 1804 that when the expedition reached that northwestern country and went on to the mouth of the Columbia River, the very queens, the wives of the kings of the tribes, brought there their females for merchandise. This most Christian gentleman is as ignorant as he is mendacious in seeking to impress upon the country the idea that the traffic in females is new among the Indians, or in this case was necessitated by want and starvation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have this to say: In the committee, among my associates, I fear I am almost considered a "crank" on this Indian question. I have advocated their cause with a zeal that has at times seemed almost a passion. I have held that the United States should to the very letter fulfill every treaty stipulation made with the Indian. I have urged in behalf of his civilization and development the most liberal appropriation of money for educational purposes. The appropriation for such purposes this year is increased about $45,000 or $48,000 over the appropriation in the current year's bill, and nearly $250,000 over the appropriation for the last fiscal year.

Now let us see about this cutting down of estimates for support. In 1884 the estimates of the Department under which this suffering occurred were $417,000. The Committee of the Forty-seventh Congress responded with an appropriation of $243,000. This was done when my friend and colleague on the committee [Mr. KEIFER] was Speaker, and when the bill was prepared by my honored friend from Kansas [Mr. RYAN], and, with the lights before us then, prepared most judiciously and wisely I believe, and in perfect accord with the settled policy of Congress to gradually cut down the supports and teach the Indian to become self-supporting.

Now, what was the extent of my cutting down the estimates? The estimates for 1885 were $391,000. I responded with an appropriation of $246,000. I do not include in this the deficiency appropriations. To-day, for the year 1886, the estimates are $390,000, and the amount proposed to be appropriated by this bill is $346,000. So much for the ruthless cutting down of estimates as alleged by Mr. Painter. It will be seen that if this has been done in the past, it has not been done in nearly so great a degree by myself in the preparation of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I have nothing more to say in regard to this matter. These personal matters are most offensive to me. I shrink from them. I have tried to do my duty. I said in the outset that unless I convicted this gentleman of misstatements I would apologize to him most humbly. I have no apology to make to Mr. Painter. I think the House and the country and the public journals that he has deceived will concur in excusing me from apology to Mr. Painter. Mr. Speaker, I commend him again to a study of the story of Ananias and to a careful consideration of the ninth commandment. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, I only care to add a word to what has been well said by my colleague, and that is that the appropriations made for these Indians for the fiscal year 1883 seem to have been sufficient. No deficiency was asked for, and of course no deficiency was appropriated.

These Indians consist of several tribes. First, the Blackfeet, Bloods, and Piegans. The estimate made by the Department for 1884 was precisely the same as for 1883 for this tribe of Indians. The amount appropriated for 1884 was precisely the amount appropriated for the preceding year for these Indians.

Take another tribe, the Crows. The amount estimated for 1884 was precisely the same amount estimated for the year preceding. The amount appropriated for their support for 1884 was precisely the same amount appropriated for 1883.

Take another tribe, the Assinaboines, of Montana. The estimate for these Indians for 1884 was precisely the same as for 1883, and the amount appropriated for 1884 was precisely the same amount appropriated for the preceding year.

Take another tribe, the Gros Ventres, in Montana. There the amount estimated in 1884 was precisely the same amount estimated in the preceding year. The amount appropriated was but $2,000 less.

Take the Indians at Fort Peck agency. The amount estimated for those Indians for 1884 was precisely the amount estimated for the preceding year, and we gave them but $5,000 less in 1884 than in 1883.

So that with the light we had before us when we prepared the bill for 1884 we had every reason to believe the appropriations made for 1883 would be ample and sufficient. But a contingency happened after that which could not have been well foreseen by the committee, namely, among some of the tribes game began to and did almost wholly disappear, and their crops were an absolute and total failure. These things could not well have been anticipated. The result was that when the Forty-eighth Congress assembled it was called upon to vote a deficiency, and a deficiency of $100,000 was appropriated.

That ground has been all gone over by my estimable colleague, whom I have always found zealous to do justice to the Indians and to every other interest, and I need not go over it again. [Applause.]

Mr. ELLIS demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the vote on the passage of the bill must be taken by yeas and nays.

Mr. WASHBURN. Can not that be dispensed with by unanimous consent?

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 240, nays 7, not voting 77; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. ELLIS, by unanimous consent the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following gentlemen were announced as being paired on all political questions until further notice:

Mr. RANKIN with Mr. BRAINERD.
Mr. MORRISON with Mr. PAYNE.
Mr. SHAW with Mr. LAIRD.
Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, with Mr. KELLOGG.
Mr. ARNOT with Mr. BELFORD.
Mr. FYAN with Mr. HOOPER.
Mr. DUNN with Mr. CHALMERS.
Mr. HARDY with Mr. WADSWORTH.
Mr. CARLETON with Mr. RICE.
Mr. FIEDLER with Mr. ELLWOOD.
Mr. FORAN with Mr. HITT.
Mr. JONES, of Alabama, with Mr. BURLEIGH.
Mr. MULLER with Mr. HOWEY.
Mr. GREEN with Mr. BRUMM.
Mr. COX, of New York, with Mr. KELLEY.
Mr. ADAMS, of New York, with Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota.
Mr. BROADHEAD with Mr. BOWEN.

The following were announced as being paired for to-day.

Mr. FERRELL with Mr. MILLIKEN.
Mr. THOMPSON with Mr. HOLTON.
Mr. SPRINGER with Mr. DUNHAM.
Mr. TALBOTT with Mr. OCHILTREE.
Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, with Mr. MCCOID.
Mr. BLAND with Mr. LACEY.
Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. JOHNSON.
Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. SMITH, of Iowa.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. ELLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF NATALBANY RIVER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of a preliminary examination of Natalbany River, Louisiana, with estimate of the cost of improving the same; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the Chief of Engineers referring to Senate bill 420 and House bill 5278 for the relief of the Union Metallic Cartridge Company; which was referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

POSTMASTERS' LOSSES BY FIRE, ETC.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8031) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the Postmaster-General to adjust the claims of postmasters for losses by burglary, fire, or other unavoidable casualty," approved March 7, 1882; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unananimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. FERRELL for one week, on account of sickness in his family.

And then, on motion of Mr. WARNER, of Ohio (at 5 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARBOUR: Petition of John Henry Harrover, asking for compensation for personal injuries sustained during the late war—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BUDD: Petition of janitors of stations, District of Columbia, for an increase of salary—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. PAYSON: Petition of George P. Mulcahy and others, of Wheaton, Traverse County, Minnesota, for restoration of indemnity lands—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. ROSECRANS: Concurrent resolution of the Legislature of California, requesting Congress to pay California Indian war debt—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. A. H. SMITH: Remonstrance of J. E. Wittmer and 50 others, citizens of York County, Pennsylvania, against the ratification of the treaty with Spain—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. E. B. TAYLOR: Petition of Jason N. Watson, for a pension—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE: George R. Meneely & Co. and others, urging the passage of the reciprocity treaty with Mexico—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The following petitions for the passage of the Mexican war pension bill with Senate amendments were presented and severally referred to the Committee on Pensions:

By Mr. FUNSTON: Of citizens of Blue Rapids, Kans.

By Mr. LACEY: Of Elias D. Williams and 90 others, citizens of Barry County, Michigan.

By Mr. NUTTING: Of 26 citizens of Madison County, of 62 citizens of Oswego County, of 66 citizens of Oswego County, and of 84 citizens of Madison County, New York.

By Mr. G. W. RAY: Of citizens of Chenango County, of Delaware County, of Walton, Delaware County, and of Smithville, Chenango County, New York.

By Mr. SENEY: Of Samuel J. Browne and 145 others, of Hancock County, Ohio.

By Mr. TOWNSHEND: Of citizens of Franklin County, Illinois.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 23, 1885.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GEORGE. I present a resolution of the Federation of Labor Unions of the District of Columbia. It is very short, and I ask that it be read and laid on the table, as the bill to which it refers is now on the Calendar.

There being no objection, the resolution was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate of the United States:

Resolution adopted by the Federation of Labor Unions of the District of Columbia, Tuesday evening, January 20, 1885.

Whereas the House of Representatives has passed a bill (H. R. 2550) to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract; and

Whereas said bill having been favorably reported to the Senate of the United States from the Committee on Education and Labor of that body, and its consideration postponed until the second Thursday in December, 1884, and then again denied consideration; and

Whereas this measure having been unanimously indorsed by the workingmen of the country in their organized capacity in the belief that its passage would tend to increase their prosperity and happiness: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Federation of Labor Unions of the District of Columbia very respectfully, but very earnestly, petition the Senate to consider and pass House bill No. 2550 at an early day, so that its enactment into law may not be endangered by reason of the usual press of business during the closing days of the session.

Mr. LAPHAM presented a memorial of merchants and manufacturers of New York city, urging the immediate ratification of the proposed Spanish reciprocity treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PALMER presented the petition of Adam Duncan and other citizens of Houghton County, Michigan; the petition of D. F. McDonald, Henry Pratt, and other citizens of Houghton County, Michigan, and the petition of E. L. Wright and other citizens of Hancock, Mich., praying for the purchase by the Government of the two canals across Keweenaw Point, Mich., in accordance with the report of the Secretary of War; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ALLISON presented a memorial of the Cigar-makers' Union of Avoca, Iowa, and a memorial of the Cigar-makers' Union of Burlington, Iowa, remonstrating against the ratification of the Spanish reciprocity treaty; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PENDLETON. I present the petition of James M. Dalzell, of Caldwell, in the county of Noble, State of Ohio, representing that he was a private in Company H, One hundred and sixteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry; that he is entered on the pension-rolls of the United States at the rate of $6 per month; that he received no arrears of pension before January 1, 1883, because of the operation of the statute of limitation; that he is poor, has a large family, and desires that he be put upon the pension-roll by the action of the two Houses of Congress at the rate of $16 per month with arrears of pension from the date of his discharge. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented a memorial of the National Cigar Manufacturers' Association, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocity treaty with Spain; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. McMILLAN presented a petition of the Saint Paul (Minn.) Chamber of Commerce, praying for such legislation as will result in the United States acquiring title to and ownership of the Lake Superior Ship-Canal Companies and the Portage Lake and River Improvement Company's canals and water ways connecting the Keweenaw Bay with the waters of Lake Superior, in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Saint Paul (Minn.) Chamber of Commerce, favoring such a treaty with the Spanish Antilles as shall open their markets to the products of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BAYARD presented the petition of H. A. Du Pont and other citizens of Delaware, in favor of civil-service reform, and praying the repeal of the present laws fixing terms of four years for certain civil offices; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5249) to provide a criminal code for the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Mary E. Fillebrown, widow of Commodore Thomas Scott Fillebrown, praying for a pension of $50 a month, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 1747) granting a pension to Patrick O'Brian;

A bill (S. 1260) granting a pension to William J. Duley; and

A bill (S. 1780) granting a pension to Benjamin Goodwin.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1183) granting a pension to Hugh O'Neil, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2368) requiring the use of domestic material in the construction and repair of Government vessels, steam-boilers, and ordnance, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. WILSON. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4036) to increase the pension of Thomas Ward, to submit an adverse report thereon.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 499) granting a pension to Mary A. Knawber;

A bill (H. R. 3612) granting a pension to Hayden Reynolds; and

A bill (H. R. 5812) granting a pension to Ellen A. Vance.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2272) granting a pension to Andrew Franklin, alias Andrew McKee, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 79) to amend an act entitled "An act to confirm certain private land claims in the Territory of New Mexico," to report it back adversely. I ask that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. That is a bill which was introduced by myself by request. I ask that it be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on the Library, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT WATER-SUPPLY.

Mr. INGALLS. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the resolution offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] calling for information from the Secretary of War relative to the construction of the new reservoir in the District of Columbia, to report it back with a recommendation that the committee be discharged from its further consideration and that the resolution lie upon the table. The resolution is accompanied by a report upon the subject from Major Lydecker, the engineer commissioner of the District, which I ask may be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution and it will be laid upon the table, if there be no objection. The Senator from Kansas moves that the report of Major Lydecker, accompanying the papers returned by the committee, be printed. That order will be entered if there be no objection.

SAMUEL M. THOMPSON.

Mr. CULLOM. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2570) granting an increase of pension to Col. Samuel M. Thompson, to report it favorably with an amendment. I ask the consent of the Senate to take up the bill and put it upon its passage. I think there can be no possible objection to it. The person whose pension the bill proposes to increase is over 84 years old and is entirely dependent. I ask that the Senate pass the bill for his relief.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samuel M. Thompson, a private in the Mexican war under Col. E. D. Baker, and colonel of the Fourth Illinois Regiment of Volunteers in the Black Hawk war, and pay him a pension of $50 per month, in lieu of that which he now receives.

Mr. CULLOM. The amendment of the committee reduces the amount of pension to $25 from $50, as proposed in the original bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why should this bill be considered in preference to all other pension cases?

Mr. CULLOM. I was about to state that this man——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? Debate is not in order until the Chair has ascertained if there is objection to its consideration.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask consent to make a statement, and then I think there will be no objection to the bill being considered and passed this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Senator from Illinois will proceed. The Chair hears none.

Mr. CULLOM. The person who is provided for by the bill is over 84 years of age and absolutely dependent. He has no immediate family upon whom he can rely; and unless the bill is passed immediately it will not go through both Houses perhaps at this Congress. I hope the Senator from Missouri will withdraw objection to it on that account.

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall not object to its consideration, but I wish to hear the amendment.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Pensions was, in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to read:

And pay him a pension of $25 per month, in lieu of that which he now receives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is he now receiving?

Mr. CULLOM. He is now receiving a pension of $12 a month, which is not enough to support him. He is over 84 years old and entirely dependent.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have a bill pending before the Committee on Pensions which proposes to pension a man who is as old as this man, who is not drawing any pension, and I should be satisfied to place him on the pension-roll at $8 per month. His service antedates the service of this man. His injuries were received in a battle where the late President Lincoln commanded a company, and it was beside Captain Lincoln that this old soldier retreated from the battlefield where they had been fighting Indians and in which he had been wounded, and it was Captain Lincoln who dismounted from his horse and bandaged his wounds and saved him. That bill has been pending some time, and I see no necessity for this discrimination.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the Senator from Missouri to name the person to whom he alludes, and we will see if we can not get a report on the bill. But in this case, as a matter of fact, the person named was in the Black Hawk war as well as in the Mexican war. He is absolutely dependent for existence, and if the bill is to be passed at this Congress it ought to be acted upon at once. I should not ask the consideration of the bill if the man was not as old as he is and so absolutely dependent. I hope the Senator from Missouri will not oppose the passage of the bill, as it is only proposed to give this man just what is supposed to be sufficient to keep him from absolute distress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUITS FOR DAMAGES.

Mr. HARRIS. The Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7131) to authorize suits for damages where death results from the wrongful act or neglect of any person or corporation in the District of Columbia, directs me to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and also instructs me to ask for the present consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the substitute which the committee reports be read instead of the original bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. As the bill is short, I should like to hear the bill read so as to see the connection. The bill is short, I understand.

Mr. HARRIS Yes; it is a short bill. Let it be read first.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That whenever within the limits of the District of Columbia the death of a person shall be caused by the wrongful act, neglect, or default of any person or corporation, and the act, neglect, or default is such as would, if death had not ensued, have entitled the party injured, or, if the person injured be a married woman, have entitled her husband, either separately or by joining with the wife, to maintain an action and recover damages, the person who or corporation which would have been liable if death had not ensued shall be liable to an action for damages, notwithstanding the death of the person injured, even though the death shall have been caused under circumstances which constitute a felony: Provided, That in no case shall the recovery exceed the sum of $10,000.

SEC. 2. That every such action shall be brought by and in the name of the personal representative of such deceased person, and within two years after the death of the party injured.

SEC. 3. That the damages recovered in such action shall not be appropriated to the payment of the debts or liabilities of such deceased person, but shall inure to the benefit of his or her family, and be distributed according to the provisions of the statute of distributions in force in said District of Columbia.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to inquire of the Chair as to the parliamentary condition of the bill. Has the Senate agreed to consider it at the present time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate has.

Mr. HOAR. I hope it will be permitted to go over. I do not think it accomplishes as written the purpose for which it was drawn. My attention was drawn away when the bill was taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee reported it this morning and asked unanimous consent that it be now considered. The Chair asked whether unanimous consent was given and it was granted.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Massachusetts desires to look at the bill, I shall not insist upon proceeding with the consideration of it. If he desires it to go over I shall not insist.

Mr. HOAR. Before the bill goes over I will state my point to the Senator. A similar matter came up when I was a member of the other House.

I suppose it is well settled at common law that the death of a person injured by the tort or the tortious negligence of another is not itself a substantive subject of damages; that the recovery in such a case would be limited to compensation for the injury which the person injured suffered in his lifetime. That is, if a man were injured by the negligence of a railroad company and died, having lived in suffering for twenty-four or forty-eight hours, his administrator could not anywhere recover more (and at common law I suppose the action would die with the person) than for the twenty-four or forty-eight hours' suffering.

I suppose it is the purpose of this bill to do what similar statutes have done in many States of the Union and in England, to authorize the death itself to be an element of damage, of which the family shall reap the benefit to the limited extent described in the bill; but as I heard the bill read at the desk I am afraid it does not clearly accomplish that object, and that the point would still be open to the defendant to say that the act of Congress has authorized the recovering of damages after the death of the person injured and the distribution of those damages among the family to the exclusion of creditors, but has not authorized the fact of death itself to be taken into account in measuring the damages. That should be done, I think, to the limit of $5,000 or $10,000, or whatever may be considered a reasonable limit. It is $5,000 in my State. I see this bill proposes a limit of $10,000. For instance, if a man is instantly killed, so that he sustains no damage in his lifetime, or if the damage which he sustains is clearly trifling, I think still up to some amount to be fixed and limited the killing of the person should be a ground of damage to his surviving family. It occurred to me that the bill may require some amendment in that particular.

Mr. HARRIS. It was certainly the object of the committee to provide for the very case that the Senator from Massachusetts thinks it possible we have not sufficiently guarded. However, in view of the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts, I will ask that the bill as proposed to be amended be printed and go over until to-morrow, because if it is subject to the criticism the Senator from Massachusetts makes it is certainly desirable that the point should be distinctly and clearly covered.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Before the Senator from Tennessee withdraws the bill, I think possibly a word of explanation may satisfy the Senator from Massachusetts. I introduced a similar bill early in the last session, and I think it passed the Senate by a unanimous vote, exactly in the words in which this bill comes here to-day. It provides for nothing except that actions may lie where death ensues from the wrongful act, neglect, or default of a person or corporation. We all understand that actions lie for injuries, but that the action dies with the person injured. The bill changes no principle of the common law save and except that alone.

I will further state to the Senator from Massachusetts that the bill as now presented is an exact copy of the English statute, I think third Victoria, which has been passed by most of the States of the Union, with the single exception of the provision which limits the recovery to $10,000. It is the same as the bill that we passed last session and which went to the other House. The other House sends us back a bill——

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Virginia will allow me, I will state that my memory was exactly the same as the memory of the Senator from Virginia as to the fact that the Senate had passed the bill that we reported last summer, but upon examination I find that both the Senator from Virginia and I were mistaken. The Senate has not acted upon the bill that we reported last summer. I have examined the Journal to see.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. If I am mistaken in that I ask the pardon of the Senate; but I think yet I am not mistaken. I think I was very earnest in pressing that bill upon the attention of the Senate, and my recollection is that it was passed.

Mr. HARRIS. The bill is now upon the Calendar.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. However, that is what the bill provides for. It seems to me that we are about as ready to consider it now as we shall be at any other time. If I may be within the parliamentary usage in stating that the other House has but two more District days, I desire to be understood as making that statement as a reason why, if we propose to legislate on matters pertaining to the District of Columbia at all, we ought to do it as quickly and as promptly as possible.

If there be any objection to that simple change in the common law, then an objection will lie to this bill. If there be no objection to such a change, then there can be no objection to the bill. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if this statement is not satisfactory to him. Of course if it is not I will agree to let the bill go over.

Mr. HOAR. The statement of the Senator from Virginia, as I understand it, indicates that the bill is defective in the point which I pointed out, and, if so, I think the whole Senate will desire some change of phraseology. It is in entire sympathy with the purpose of the Senator that I make this suggestion, and not in opposition to it. I suppose it is true that legislation which passes by unanimous consent in the Senate is quite as likely to have some defect of expression as that which passes after severe scrutiny and discussion; and it is also true that the most careful draughters of bills here find frequently that some new view or some point which has not occurred to them is suggested by other Senators. I find it so in my own experience, I know, very often.

The point which I make I should like to repeat for the understanding of my honorable friend from Virginia, if he will kindly give me his attention one moment. Under this bill as it is proposed, although the person injured dies and an action is given to the administrator—it is not brought in the name of the person injured after his decease—I am afraid the rule of damages which the common law prescribes would be left unchanged; that is, in estimating the damages no account whatever can be taken of the fact of the death. In other words, it is not anything more a damage if the person dies than if he recovers. I think under the bill, if a person should be killed and the widow, the administratrix, brought a suit, the man having lived six hours after his injury, the court would tell the jury, "You can not take into consideration the fact that the man died and did not recover from the injury. That is not an injury to the man in his lifetime. You can only take into consideration his six hours' suffering, he having lived six hours after the injury before he died." I suppose the Senator wants what I want, and what I think the whole Senate wants; he wants to provide in fixing the limit of $10,000 that the fact of the man's being killed may be taken into consideration.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I will only say a single word further, by the courtesy of the Senate. I would not ordinarily be so certain that a bill accomplished the purposes and objects had in view were it not for the fact that I know this bill is a verbatim copy of the statute of which I have spoken, the English statute, and the statutes adopted by a large number of the States, and that as a law it has been passed upon by the appellate courts of a large number of the States and by the Supreme Court of the United States. The very question suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts was passed upon by the Supreme Court. It has been held here in the Supreme Court room that under that statute (and I may here parenthetically remark that it has been so held in England) damages are recoverable for the death as for the suffering before death, taking into consideration the pecuniary value of the life, and all damages that could possibly ensue under the old common law. The only change is the one which I suggested before, that the action subsists beyond the death.

With this, sir, I am willing to defer to the Senator from Massachusetts and give him the time he wants to consider the bill, but I do hope that it will be the pleasure of the Senate to consider it at as early a day as possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHERMAN in the chair). The Chair understands the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] as moving to lay the bill on the table until to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the amendment be printed, and I shall ask the Senate to-morrow morning to proceed with its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be ordered to be printed and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

STREETS OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. BROWN. The Committee on the District of Columbia were instructed by a resolution of the Senate "to inquire whether any additional legislation is necessary to enable the commissioners of the District to keep clean the streets in the city of Washington." We have consulted the commissioners and they respond that they do not need further legislation on the subject, but that they do need an additional appropriation of $5,000 on account of the increased area of the paved streets that are to be kept in order next year. As they will doubtless include that in their estimate and it will go before the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on the District of Columbia ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

The report was agreed to.

REMOVAL OF POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

Mr. GARLAND. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7872) to remove the political disabilities of Gabriel H. Hill, of Virginia, to report it without amendment and recommend its passage. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed (two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative).

Mr. GARLAND. I am also directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report favorably the bill (H. R. 7963) to remove the political disabilities of J. Pembroke Jones, of Virginia. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed (two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative).

Mr. GARLAND. The Committee on the Judiciary have had under consideration the bill (S. 2094) to remove the political disabilities of Louis Marquart. The committee in investigating this matter found that the person named does not labor under any disabilities; that his disabilities, so far as any existed, were removed by the act of the 13th of May, 1884; and they instruct me to report the bill back and recommend its indefinite postponement.

The bill was postponed indefinitely.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 4681) for the relief or Yost Harbaugh;

A bill (H. R. 181) to declare forfeiture of certain lands granted to aid in the construction of a railroad in Oregon; and

A bill (H. R. 1565) to authorize the appointment of a commission by the President of the United States to run and mark the boundary lines between a portion of the Indian Territory and the State of Texas in connection with a similar commission to be appointed by the State of Texas.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SABIN introduced a bill (S. 2573) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Saint Croix River at the most accessible point between Stillwater and Taylor's Falls, Minn.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HARRISON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2574) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River near the town or city of Thebes, in Alexander County, Illinois; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (S. 2575) for the relief of Peter Collier; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 2576) granting a pension to W. W. Dennis; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALDRICH introduced a bill (S. 2577) to authorize the printing of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Henry B. Anthony; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committe on Printing.

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

FLAG FROM THE WOMEN'S SILK CULTURE ASSOCIATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asks leave to lay before the Senate a communication from the Women's Silk-Culture Association of the United States. If there be no objection the communication will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WOMEN'S SILK-CULTURE ASSOCIATION OF UNITED STATES,
Philadelphia, January 23, 1885.

To the honorable members of the Senate of the United States at Washington:

The Women's Silk-Culture Association of the United States, established in Philadelphia in 1880, have since that time demonstrated silk-culture in the United States to a condition and state of progress never before attained, and upon the popularity of which numerous stock companies and individuals have established business centers.

While not deprecating such conditions, we do ask that the questions, by whom and how was the industry introduced be answered by honestly and properly accrediting their just due to its rightful authors, the Women's Silk Culture Association of the United States, who herewith present to the Senate of the United States at Washington a truly American national flag, in the sense that the silk produced for this flag was raised in American homes by American women and children, reeled by the Women's Association of Philadelphia (who are the only reelers of commercial silk in the country up to this time), spun, dyed, woven, and mounted in the city of Philadelphia, and through the liberality of Mrs. C. C. Thum, of the association, who generously offered to defray the expense incurred in producing the flag, the association are enabled to offer it to the national Capitol as a memento of our success in starting silk-culture as an industry for our American sisters. We ask for this flag a place in the Halls of our National Government, that it may bear witness to the faithfulness of our effort and to the quality of our American product, both agricultural and mechanical.

This is not the first fruits of specimen products of the association. The Garfield brocade, presented to the widow of our late lamented President, was manipulated by our association, and its wonderfully beautiful quality and design displayed to our statesmen at Washington.

A State and national flag have been presented to the State Legislature of Pennsylvania, made of native silk, grown in the summer of 1883, and put through all the processes of manufacture in the city of Philadelphia.

Besides these national gifts the association has had American silk worked up into knitting silk, brocade, gros-grain silk, and chenille, and in every form the quantity and quality has proved a good and profitable result.

For statistics we refer you to our fourth annual report, just to be issued, and to the files of Daily Silk Record, published by the association during the late exhibit. And begging your acceptance and a place of honor for this flag, we also ask that due consideration shall be given to this association when the National Government may see fit to aid this industry.

American women are raising silk-worm eggs far superior to foreign breeds. What the industry needs is experimental stations, where the process of culture and reeling shall be established, and where the experience and knowledge of foreign operations shall be united to American talent, industry, and intelligence.

Remember, we are the silk association of the United States; our correspondence, our information, and progress belong to nearly every State in the Union. The California association is modeled after our own, but more liberally dealt with by her State.

All the work of our association has been carried on by the most frugal and economical management, but much left undone that could have been accomplished had we the means of perfecting our aims. Therefore we crave the assurance of future good-will and influence in the interests we have stimulated and planted throughout the whole United States.

Mrs. JOHN LUCAS, President.
Mrs. MATTHEW SIMPSON,
Mrs. C. C. THUM,
Mrs. WM. B. ELTONHEAD,
Miss PHŒBE HORNE,
Mrs. W. T. REYNOLDS,
Vice-Presidents.
Miss E. T. VAN RENSSELAER, Recording Secretary.
Mrs. V. C. HAVEN, Corresponding Secretary.
Mrs. E. V. B. OSBOURN, Chairman P. and S. Committee.
Mrs. G. W. HALL, Reeling Committee.
Mrs. H. P. TAYLOR, Treasurer.

Mr. BECK. I offer the following resolutions and ask for their immediate consideration:

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States accepts with thanks the silk flag presented by the Women's Silk-Culture Association of the United States as an example of purely American production of silk culture and manufacture.

Resolved, That the patriotic exertions of the ladies of the association and their coworkers to ameliorate the industrial condition of their country-women and enlarge and diversify female employment receive the cordial appreciation and sympathy of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolutions?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator object to the consideration of the resolutions?

Mr. MORGAN. No, sir; I rise to support the resolutions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

Mr. MORGAN. I feel very grateful to the Senator from Kentucky that he has introduced these resolutions recognizing the handiwork and patriotism also of the ladies who have honored the Senate with the presentation of this flag. I welcome the flag, with all that it means, into this Chamber and over this Government as thoroughly as any man in the community. There was a time when I was acting in hostility to it. That time will never again arise. The sentiment which it embodies in the present form in which it comes before us is one that adds strength to the bond of union that binds these States together, and one that intensifies the love of country that every American should be proud to enjoy and to express.

As an evidence of the interest of the women of the United States, and particularly of this honorable association, in a domestic industry, it is something admirable in itself, and I think is something that will produce very fine fruits in the United States.

We are yet a very dependent people for this important staple, and we are not to be relieved from our state of dependence, it seems to me, otherwise than through the agency of the women and children of the United States, for the culture of silk is not one of those plantation industries that can be facilitated by large investments of money or by extensive employment of force. It is purely a domestic, a home industry, in which the laborers must necessarily be the women and children of the land. They are qualified by their natural capacities and fitness for such work to produce and to reel silk and to make it a marketable commodity. Men are not qualified for this kind of work. A thousand plantation hands might be employed in the State of Alabama, which is one of the silk-growing regions of this country, in rearing mulberries, and in feeding cocoons, and in reeling silk, and there would come no profit from that investment. A thousand women and children similarly employed would bring great benefit to the country.

I consider this as one of the most necessary as well as useful of all the industries in which the people of the United States can engage. If we will but think for a moment how much of excellent and innocent employment it would bring to thousands of unemployed women of the United States, how much of the comforts of life they would be enabled to earn without any great physical exertion, without exposing themselves to the heats of summer or to the chilly winds of winter, it seems to me that we should have a greater appreciation of the efforts of these ladies to foster and encourage this industry.

Then, Mr. President, there is something very natural as well as very beautiful in the association of women in the silk-culture and in preparing it for commerce. They mutually assist each other; they mutually adorn each other. There is no woman who does not look better in a silk garment, and there is no silk garment that does not look better upon a woman than it does upon a man. There is a natural association between that sex and this industry; and these ladies evince a spirit of benevolence toward their own sex when they take the charge of this subject. It is entirely appropriate that they should do so; and I hope that the Senate of the United States, as far as it may find constitutional authority to do it, may aid and assist and encourage this excellent and beautiful industry which has to-day exhibited itself in the bright, shining folds of the American flag that now appears in the Senate of the United States.

I therefore second the resolution of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I have been gratified at this interesting ceremony here, illustrating the great progress and rapid growth of silk manufacture in this country, and it calls up very vividly in my mind an incident in legislation. In 1872, I think it was—it may have been still later, perhaps in 1874—when the Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives were considering the question whether it were possible for the people of this country with any success to engage in the manufacture of silk in competition with the manufacturers of silk in other countries where labor was cheaper, a very distinguished political economist of this country appeared before that committee for the purpose of relieving those manufactures of silk which are made in foreign countries from the duties then imposed upon them, on the ground that the manufacture of silk in the United States was an impossibility, and that therefore the duties upon manufactured silk were simply a tax upon the consumer.

I can not keep out of my mind the statement made at that time that this was utterly impracticable, and yet the census of 1880, eight years at most from the time that statement was made, revealed that there were made annually in this country $41,000,000 of silk manufactured goods; that we were then with one exception the largest silk manufacturing country in the world; that $19,000,000 of capital were invested in that manufacture, and that thirty-four thousand and odd men, women, and children were furnished with employment and wages in that work, and that the cost of silk goods in this country had in the mean time been reduced 34 per cent. To-day I suppose we are the first country in the world in the product of silk manufactures, and this and like goods are the fruit of that system. I congratulate the country upon this occasion for this demonstration of the wisdom of the policy that has nurtured and sustained the manufacture of these goods, and I extend personally to those who have presented this flag my congratulations upon the success attending their efforts under the particular economy of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Kentucky.

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously.

ELIZABETH F. ASPER.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that Order of Business 1028, being the bill (S. 1594) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth F. Asper, which was placed on the Calendar at my request after having been adversely reported by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JACKSON], be stricken from the docket and the bill indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the bill named by him, adversely reported from the Committee on Pensions on the 20th instant, be taken from the Calendar and indefinitely postponed. That order will be entered if there be no objection. The Chair hears no objection.

LANDS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the Calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. PLUMB. I was under the impression that the resolution of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] was on the table for consideration under the order of resolutions offered on a previous day. I wish to offer an amendment to it if the Senator himself does not propose an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of the Senator from Missouri was read twice on the 22d instant, and ordered to lie on the table. It does not therefore come before the Senate under the order of resolutions.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate now take up the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 113) in relation to certain lands in the Indian Territory acquired by the United States from the Creek and Seminole Indians. The question is on that motion.

Mr. CONGER. Let the resolution be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed and empowered to ascertain, by communication with the authorities of the Creek and Seminole Nations of Indians in the Indian Territory, upon what terms the said nations will relinquish and convey to the United States all the right, title, and interest in and to all that country described in article 3 of the treaty made between the United States and the Creek Nation on June 14, 1866, as "the west half of their entire domain, to be divided by a line running north and south," the lands so described in the treaty being now known as "Oklahoma," and being fully described in Senate Executive Document No. 109, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, page 4, and the lands described in article 3 of the Seminole treaty of March 21, 1866 (14 Statutes, page 756).

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall communicate with the authorities of the Creek and Seminole Nations immediately, by special agent or otherwise, as he may deem necessary, and transmit the result to Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to take up the resolution.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read.

Mr. VEST. It has just been read, and it is not necessary to read it again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the reading be dispensed with.

Mr. INGALLS. It had better be read, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Missouri if that description would not include all that land which has been appropriated for the Iowas and Kickapoos?

Mr. VEST. No, sir; I think not.

Mr. DAWES. I had the impression from reading it that it included that land as well.

Mr. VEST. I drew it with reference to Oklahoma as put now on the map.

Mr. DAWES. I suggested yesterday to the Senator a modification of the resolution.

Mr. VEST. I have an amendment to propose to meet the views of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri offers an amendment to the joint resolution, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to substitute for the resolution the following:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed and empowered to ascertain, by communication with the authorities of the Creek, Seminole, and Cherokee Nations of Indians in the Indian Territory, upon what terms the said nations will relinquish and convey to the United States all their right, title, and interest in and to all that country described in article 3 of the treaty made between the United States and the Creek Nation on June 14, 1866, as "the west half of their entire domain," and the lands described in article 3 of the Seminole treaty of March 21, 1866 (14 Statutes, 756), and so much of the lands described in article 16 of the treaty made between the United States and the Cherokee Nation July 19, 1866, as has not been already purchased by the United States from said Cherokee Nation for the purpose of settling friendly Indians thereon, as provided for in said treaty.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall communicate with the authorities of the Creek, Seminole, and Cherokee Nations immediately, by special agent or otherwise, as he may deem necessary, and transmit the result to Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. This joint resolution has not yet been considered by any committee, and I know that there are amendments proposed to be offered to it. I suggest, therefore, that without further debate it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I am also told—I am not a member of that committee—that that committee have already examined many of the facts that enter into the consideration of this resolution, and they have an examination pending before them on the subject of the condition of affairs in this territory. I hope, therefore, without occupying time now, it will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and that any amendments to be suggested may be now offered and sent to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Ohio to make a motion?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do move to refer the joint resolution.

Mr. PLUMB. Before that motion is put I desire to offer an amendment, in the nature of a substitute for the resolution, to be printed and go with the resolution if it is to be referred to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the joint resolution with the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, pending which the Senator from Kansas asks leave to submit an amendment intended to be proposed for a similar disposition, if that disposition shall be made of the resolution.

Mr. INGALLS. May we hear the amendment read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] will be read for information, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to enter into negotiations with such of the Indian tribes in the Indian Territory as may be in possession and control of more lands than are necessary to furnish each head of a family of such tribe with one hundred and sixty acres, with a view of obtaining a relinquishment to the Government for purpose of occupancy by actual settlers only of all lands beyond the quantity necessary to give the quantity of lands aforesaid to the heads of families in said tribes; that such action be undertaken as speedily as possible, and such propositions as may be received from any of said tribes for the disposal of their lands, and all other results growing out of said negotiations, to be reported to Congress at the earliest practicable moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to refer the resolution with all amendments to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MAXEY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Kansas who offers the substitute whether it is designed to cover the land occupied by the five civilized tribes at this time, and in that connection I would state that not a great while ago I made a calculation of the land occupied by the Creek and Choctaw Nations, and there are about four hundred acres for every head of a family in one case and six hundred acres in the other. To reduce that down to one hundred and sixty acres would necessarily leave open a large quantity of land. I have no doubt what I say of the Choctaws and Creeks is true of the Chickasaws and Seminoles. I want to know the scope of the substitute.

Mr. PLUMB. The design is to open negotiations with all the tribes in the Indian Territory having more lands than enough to give one hundred and sixty acres to each head of a family in such tribe.

Mr. MAXEY. Including the five civilized tribes as well as the others?

Mr. PLUMB. All of them together, for the purpose of presenting to Congress such proposition as the tribes may be willing in the present condition of things to make, with a view to such a limitation of Indian holdings in the Territory as, while meeting the necessities of the tribes, shall also result in surrendering to the General Government all the lands they do not need.

Mr. MAXEY. If I can get the attention of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I would also say that I am very much of opinion that there is a confusion in respect to the word "Oklahoma" as used. The treaties made with the five civilized tribes in 1866 make provision for a Territorial form of government, and the Choctaw treaty makes provision for a Delegate, and if the Territorial Government is organized the treaty with the Choctaws and Chickasaws designates the Territory thus organized as the "Territory of Oklahoma." That is the name in the treaty. Those treaties are in full force and effect to-day; and if we ever execute the power which we have of organizing the Indian Territory we shall do it under the name of Oklahoma. And yet this little piece of ground west of the country now occupied by the Creeks gets somehow, without any authority of law, the name of Oklahoma, and we get the two things mixed. The word "Oklahoma" properly applies only to that portion of the Indian Territory occupied by the five civilized tribes as laid down in the treaties of 1866. I call the attention of the committee to the fact, as I see the resolution of the Senator from Missouri speaks of that little patch of land there as the so-called territory of Oklahoma. It is not correctly so called.

Mr. VEST. I must say to the Senator from Texas that he is mistaken if he thinks I have used the expression "the territory of Oklahoma." I have only followed the Interior Department. They have marked that country as Oklahoma, I do not know on what authority.

Mr. MAXEY. I have referred to the treaties. The designation is without legal authority.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to the reference.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, I do not know that I wonder that the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Texas should desire to have such a resolution passed, but I do not know what particular interest the State of Missouri may have in this question. I only look upon this resolution as a crude, informal, indirect way of inviting everybody who wants to join the Oklahoma band and movement to begin to organize and gather around the borders of this Indian Territory, go through it, and pick out land. Instead of the crowd of boomers that are there now which the Army can hardly keep off from Oklahoma, it is to get an army there big enough to swallow up the Army of the United States and the Indian Territory too.

Here is a proposition made and to be passed, if it is passed, by both Houses of Congress, informing the people of the United States that we are about now to negotiate to get away from the Indians all this western part of the Indian Territory, which I think embraces lands that have been given to several tribes that have been moved onto the same territory that is provided for in this resolution to be negotiated for. I think it will appear so. It is an invitation beforehand, or a notice beforehand, to everybody that desires possession of the Indian Territory to gather there, as where "the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together," and seize upon this land—to give impetus, to give new life and new motion and new activity to those who are striving to get the land.

It is useless for me to say, for every Senator knows, that the passage of this resolution will call together force enough there to compel Congress to rob the Indians and steal their lands. The Secretary of the Interior is to send an agent down there to find out as quickly as possible how these tribes will be willing to sell their lands! That is amended by the Senator from Kansas by inquiring into the propriety of asking the Indians, each one, to pick out his forty acres or eighty acres or one hundred and sixty acres or three hundred and twenty acres, whatever the laws will allow an Indian to have at all, so that the rest may come into market. I think this is the most bold-faced scheme of robbery of Indian lands set apart for generations as a reserve upon which that unfortunate people may be gathered and may be secure in some possession of territory that has ever been proposed in Congress.

There is land enough for the white people without encroaching upon the Indian Territory. There are places for the enterprising whites to roam without trampling on the graves and the lands of the remnants of the vast number of Indians who once inherited this whole territory. These very Cherokees and Choctaws and Seminoles, by the superior power of a civilized nation, have been driven from the Atlantic westward and westward and westward, across the Mississippi, across Arkansas. They have been driven to a Territory set apart and pledged to them in perpetuity as one place removed from the ocean, removed from the lakes, removed from the Gulf, removed from the great centers of settlement and civilization, where the remaining Indians might live or die, as the Great Father might permit. On the south lies Texas, already in the possession of an empire of land; on the north Kansas and Colorado; and on the west, according to its boundaries, Texas still and New Mexico.

The greed for land has come over the people of the United States, the greed for the choice valleys and the river bottoms and the forests set apart in this Indian Territory has sprung up with these Oklahoma boomers, and through their efforts it spreads and spreads till it has invited States to come into the struggles for the possession of these lands. Sir, I denounce this whole system as in direct violation of the theory and principles of this Government for over fifty years in regard to the Indian Territory, and the setting apart for the use of all Indians that the United States might desire to gather upon these lands and for their posterity one piece of territory which should be beyond the cupidity and beyond the control and beyond the settlement of the conquerors of this continent. Let it remain there. Let that territory remain for the Indian.

If it becomes necessary, as undoubtedly it will, to remove the tribes in the Northwest, and in the West, and in the South, from their lands because they have been proved to be fertile, as the lands in Minnesota, as the lands in Dakota, as the lands in Michigan, as the lands in Montana and Wyoming and all through the Western Territories, let this territory be open to them. The white men are demanding those lands to-day. The great stock-raising and stock-growing people of Texas are demanding the Crow territory and the Blackfeet territory and all the great reservations at the North as pasturage ground for the herds of long-horned Texas cattle. Already we have a bill pending before us that not only looks to the uses of these lands at the north for that purpose, but proposes to create a great highway six miles wide from Texas running through States and giving along at different points 10,000 acres in a spot for grazing lands for Texas cattle. There is no proposition offered to help the cattle of Michigan, Ohio, and Indiana and Minnesota and Iowa and all these Northwestern States, a breed of cattle infinitely superior to all the long-horned Texas steers in beauty and value; but in order to make way for the invalid tribes of cattle, for the pleuro-pneumonia of Texas, we must set apart right through States and right through Territories a highway not the king's, but the cattle's highway, pleuro-pneumonia recesses into which cattle can go and have health and strength and preserve their life till they can be got by that roundabout process to market.

That is the object of stealing these lands. Already those who have herds of cattle look with greedy eyes upon this Indian Territory as great pasture lands for cattle.

That is the object of this joint resolution, to drive the Indians off and procure a place upon which sickly cattle can recuperate their decaying energies and live till they can be driven on the royal highway to the healthy regions of the north and be seemingly fitted for the consumption of the human race. That is what all this means. Indian rights are nothing; the Indians can be driven from their lands, as they have been, to make way for cattle. In old times "the cattle upon a thousand hills" were said to belong to the Lord. By the march of improvement and by the energy of Senators from Texas we are ready to believe that the cattle upon a thousand plains belong to Texas—not much similarity in ownership! [Laughter.]

I oppose this resolution. Its tendency is bad and wrong. It invites encroachments still more rapidly upon the Indian Territory than they exist now, and these encroachments have been swelling in force. The head of that organization may die, but the body lives. The leader of the band may perish, but his followers would trample over his grave in their approaches to Oklahoma.

Sir, I talked a day or two since with an officer whose duty it was with the few troops the Government has given him to make constant pilgrimages of war down through the Cherokee lands and into what is called Oklahoma to bring back the wanderers from lands of the United States out of the Indian Territory and let them plant their tents outside the line. If this resolution should pass and if the Secretary of the Interior should find some man, or should desire to find some man, to talk with the Indians, and see what of this property we had better have, the most deserving man for the place, the man who has thought longest upon the subject, the man who has labored most earnestly during the years of his life and has led on his cohorts to find out all about this region, is dead. He can not have him. He perished in his efforts, but he had lieutenants that the Secretary of the Interior could secure the services of, and they are there now.

If the Secretary of the Interior would send a man to make this investigation he has only to send down to those idle men who are trying to get into the Indian Territory, and get them to negotiate for these lands, and give the reasons why they want them. It will be a curious history when the Secretary reports whom he has employed; it will be a curious history when those who desire these lands have joined with this agent to influence the Cherokees, and Choctaws, and Seminoles, and Senecas, and Kickapoos, and Arapahoes, and all the euphonious bands of that region, but there will still be the secret history of the consumption of whisky, of the bribery of drunken chiefs, of the corruption of the headmen of the tribe, which has accompanied almost every attempt to win treaties from the Indians to get away their lands against the will of the tribe and against the sober judgment of the chiefs.

I am opposed to this resolution. If my voice could determine it, it would go no further than it is now, not even to a committee. There is no use mincing words about this. This means a wholesale stealing from the Indians of what this Government has solemnly pledged to them and to the world should be a final resting-place for the remnants who remain, and this resolution opens the way and excites the cupidity and excites the avidity of all those who desire to possess themselves of these lands with the hope and expectation that Congress having begun in the usual way by suggesting a fair treaty and a careful investigation, it is not going to take any different form than the usual methods of acquiring Indian lands. Sir, the Senator from Missouri who introduced this plausible resolution in his place in this Senate Chamber depicted and painted the manner in which treaties with Indians at the West were agreed to, or were reported to be agreed to, and told the Senate that one chief whose name appears signed to a treaty giving up his valley and his reservation asserted then, and it has been proved since, that he never signed the treaty at all; and yet for months and years that treaty has gone out to the world with the signature of this old chief printed in the printed copies but never signed to the original treaty.

I commend the pathetic, the interesting statement which excited the sympathy and feelings, and I may say the abhorrence, of Senators here to such kind of manipulation of the rights and interests of the Indians, as the Senator who introduced this resolution spread before the Senate not many days since. The opportunity for an equally great wrong, for an infinitely greater violation of the obligations of the United States, is presented by this proposed treaty. If this resolution should go to the Committee on Indian Affairs for their consideration I have some hope from their reports on this subject, from the return of the Indian Committee to the old and better examination of these questions where humanity and sympathy for these fading tribes has exhibited itself more in these last few years than for years before, that it will receive such an examination and such a report as will satisfy the Senate and the country that the time has not come to seek by treaties with these wards of the nation to take away what little they have left.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, we belong to a rapacious and conquering race. In the last two centuries we have marched across this continent from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, expelling or assimilating all rivals, and are now looking north and south meditating new conquests. Since the close of the Mexican war the American people have ceased to acquire additional territory, not because they had ceased to be acquisitive, but because they had enough. But we have to-day practically reached the condition predicted by Macaulay in one of his wonderful essays that in his opinion would constitute the chief danger of this Republic: the absorption of the public domain, so that, there being no longer any unoccupied fertile area over which the excessive populations of the East and of the interior might diffuse themselves, combinations dangerous to liberty might be formed and a condition of affairs like that in the older countries of the earth might result.

We have nearly arrived at the limit of the arable public domain. There is a vast expanse yet unoccupied. Much of it consists of inaccessible mountain ranges; much of it is covered with timber; a very great extent consists of sterile uplands, fit only for grazing, where the policy of leasing ought to be pursued. But I doubt to-day if there are within the possession of the United States Government, outside of Indian reservations, subject to entry under the homstead and pre-emption laws, 25,000,000 acres adapted to the cultivation of wheat and corn. It will all be absorbed inevitably within the space of the next five years. And the spirit or impulse to which the Senator from Michigan has referred as one of larceny, as predatory, as verging upon robbery, a disposition to steal what has been consecrated by treaty and devoted to the occupancy of Indians, is entirely outside of the legitimate description of these movements. They are inevitable. We may as well, as he says, not mince words about this matter. The American policy is a continental policy, and I am not sure that within the lifetime of men now living it will not be a hemispherical policy. But it is enough to say that to-day it is a continental policy; and nothing, no matter what may be the name or shape it assumes, will be able to stand before the irresistible march of the Anglo-Saxon people, with all the corresponding advantages and benefits they have to confer, not only on the people of this country, but upon mankind at large.

Now, sir, with regard to the Indian Territory, that portion which has been the object of so much solicitude during the past few months, in my opinion, is not at present open to settlement. I have had many letters from constituents, and to all of them I have replied that in the opinion of the Executive, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, in the opinion of the law officer of the Government, these lands were not open to public settlement; the title of the Indians had not been finally extinguished, and I have therefore advised them if they desired to avoid trouble they had better await the action of Congress. Such is still my judgment. I believe that what is known as the "Oklahoma tract," a designation to which it is not entitled, was never set apart under any circumstances by the provisions of the treaties for public settlement. It was taken by the United States Government in trust to be used for occupation by friendly Indians and freedmen; and while there has been a difference of opinion as to what freedmen were meant, I believe it referred to the freedmen who were formerly slaves of the civilized Indian tribes. I never have believed that that land was set apart as a general place of habitation for all the freedmen of the United States. I do not think that was in the contemplation of those who made the treaties; but I am of opinion that by the term "freedmen" was meant those freedmen of the Cherokees, the Creeks, the Choctaws, the Chickasaws, and the Seminoles who had been liberated under the provisions of the treaties of 1866.

Mr. MAXEY. I would suggest to the Senator from Kansas in that connection that the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Schurz, acted upon the view presented to-day by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. INGALLS. So I understood, but forgot to say, and I am obliged to the Senator for suggesting it; but I was led to the remarks I made from the fact that a different opinion has been expressed, and during the last month I have had letters from freedmen in different parts of the country, from many of the Southern States, asking whether that land was not set apart for occupation by the freedmen of the country generally.

There seems to be a spontaneous impulse all over this country, not confined to the West alone, but extending into the South and the North, for the occupation of that region; and to characterize it as a wholesale disposition to steal, as a purpose on the part of the American people to break faith and violate treaties, is certainly a description that I can not with silence permit to be applied to it. Those men who are now upon that tract, although I believe they are there without authority or warrant of law, have in most cases been imposed upon by interested and scheming leaders, who have deceived them for purposes of gain; but I have no doubt that they honestly believe that those lands are public lands of the United States, and that therefore they have a right to go upon them.

So far as I am concerned I shall never consent to any injustice being done to the Indians. I will never consent to the violation of our plighted faith with them. They are just as much entitled to the observance of the obligations of honor as though those treaties under which they claim had been made with the most powerful nations upon the face of the earth; and if I supposed, as the Senator from Michigan does, that this was a larcenous impulse; that we were occupying the attitude of highway robbers or footpads or buccaneers, I certainly should not favor it. But it may as well be conceded first as last that it is utterly impossible that these vast tracts of land should be held in idle, unproductive, and useless occupation much longer. I do not think it advisable that they should be so held.

Some one has said that he who made two blades of grass grow where one grew before was a public benefactor. Shall it be said that those who would upon these vacant and unoccupied solitudes build the institutions of a Christian civilization are less benefactors of the human species than he who makes two blades of grass grow where one grew before? Sir, civilization is better than barbarism; cultivation is better than solitude; corn and wheat are better than prairie grass; the cow, the horse, and the sheep are better than the bison, the coyote, and the rattlesnake; and there is no use talking about this vast occupation of these great tracts of land by their savage tenants indefinitely in the future. But, sir, they have had the right of occupation by sacred guarantees; these lands have been consecrated by the faith of the nation, and they never will be relinquished, so far as I am concerned, without the consent of those occupants fairly obtained, voluntarily given, with just and adequate compensation for every acre that they relinquish.

Such, sir, is the scope of the amendment offered by my colleague, and such I believe to be the scope of the resolution presented by the Senator from Missouri. I give them my hearty and cordial approbation, repelling at the same time the assertion of the Senator from Michigan that there is on the part of any persons, whether now upon these lands or contemplating a journey thither, the disposition to do anything other than exact justice.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, if I had supposed that any one could characterize the resolution which I have offered as the Senator from Michigan has characterized it I should certainly have hesitated before introducing it. Nothing was further from the intent, and nothing in my judgment will be further from the fact than the result which he has pictured as to follow the adoption of this resolution. It is directly opposed to all those practices which have been characterized on this floor as violations of the rights of the Indians heretofore in the making of treaties.

Some years ago Congress prohibited the further making of Indian treaties, and it was done because it was thereafter to be required that all agreements with the Indians should originate with Congress and not with the Executive and that every step in the making and perfecting of any agreement with the Indians should be subject to that daylight which always characterizes the proceedings of Congress in open session. There having been withdrawn from the Executive the power to make treaties with the Indians, by a necessary and natural consequence there was withdrawn from him the power to negotiate any agreement whatever with Indians, except by direction of Congress.

This resolution looks to the acquisition of no lands except what the Indians are willing to surrender. It does not authorize the bringing to bear of any pressures, but the Executive shall simply negotiate and present to Congress such propositions as the Indians themselves upon his solicitation that they shall make some proposition may be willing to make for the surrender of that portion of the lands which they themselves shall deem that they no longer need and which they are willing to exchange for cash; and there is nothing else to do but that. It is the most perfectly proper in my judgment of anything that could be proposed, and at the same time wholly consistent with justice to the Indians in every step of the transaction.

Mr. President, while the Senator from Michigan chided me for the larceny I had in mind in offering this resolution he was chastising the other branch, the House of Representatives, which yesterday—I did not know it until a moment ago—adopted as an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill for the coming year a provision in these words:

That the President is hereby authorized, requested, and required to open negotiations with the Creeks, Seminoles, and Cherokees for the purpose of opening to settlement under the homestead law the unassigned lands in said Indian Territory ceded by them respectively to the United States by the several treaties of August 11, 1866, March 21, 1866, and July 19, 1866; and for that purpose the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; his action hereunder to be reported to Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (H. R. 5461) to regulate interstate commerce and to prohibit unjust discriminations by common carriers.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask consent that this matter go on until it is disposed of. I think it will take less time to-day than it will to-morrow, and I believe it will take but a few moments.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator propose to force a vote on the resolution to-day?

Mr. PLUMB. No; only on the question of reference.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

Mr. PLUMB. There is no objection to the reference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be informally laid aside in order that the Senate may proceed with the consideration of the joint resolution which has been pending during the morning hour. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. PLUMB. The provision I have read was adopted in the House yesterday, I think unanimously. I think also in place of this being an invitation to people to go there it will be a restraint. I myself have never invited any one or suggested that any one should go there. On the contrary, I can say with my colleague that I have discouraged persons from going there. At the same time I am not willing to close my eyes to that which I see impending, and which in the very nature of things is inevitable. The Secretary of the Interior himself within a very few days has recommended to Congress that measures should be taken to limit Indian holdings and that the lands not necessary for the occupancy of the Indians should be acquired by the United States by agreement in order that thay may be open to settlement, and I did not hear that that suggestion was against the interests of the Indians. If an Indian has two acres of land and only needs one and he receives for that one acre in excess of his needs, by an agreement made with his consent, the fair cash value of it, I take it the money is better to him at interest than the land is.

I believe we should approach the discussion of this question. If Congress will address itself to this question as one of present importance and as one about which the public is more or less concerned, that of itself will operate as a restraint against people going on the Indian lands instead of an invitation to them to go there. I believe the very fact that Congress has done nothing so long has taken no step in this direction, has led people to believe that they could go upon the lands and precipitate action; and not only that, but it has operated to make people believe that Congress was going to do nothing, and therefore it has perpetuated the conviction in the public mind to some extent of the existence of large bodies of land under Indian control without being occupied by anybody or made to do any public or private good. It is with that view that I have offered this amendment.

I am satisfied that is the view which has been had in mind all through this debate by the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Texas, and as nothing can be done under this resolution except with the consent of the Indians, and that consent is further to be followed by legislation, nothing of the kind which the Senator from Michigan seems to anticipate and which he has spoken of as heretofore having characterized our dealings with the Indians in regard to their lands by means of treaties can possibly occur. I assure him, whatever value that assurance has, that I did not have in mind at all the repetition of that which he has justly characterized. I do not want one single Indian in any tribe in the Indian Territory or anywhere else to surrender anything that is his to the United States or anybody else unless he gets a fair equivalent for it.

I understand further that the Supreme Court of the United States has decided, in what is known as the Joy case, that the Cherokee Indians have a fee title to their lands. All talk, therefore, about taking them, except upon compensation and by valid agreements with the Indians, is, of course, idle words. Nothing else can be done except to treat with them for the acquisition of their soil as that of a private individual, and upon terms which will be agreeable to them and which shall after all have the sanction of law.

The Cherokee Indians themselves treated with the United States on the 16th day of July, 1866, for the ceding to the United States in trust of about 7,000,000 acres of their land, and it was stated therein that it was for the purpose of locating friendly Indians upon it in bodies of 160 acres each, and that quantity was thereby fixed, according to the judgment of the Cherokee Indians and the United States, as being a proper and sufficient amount for Indian holding in that locality. I have applied in this resolution simply the same rule. In addition to that, the Senate has twice passed, as the Senator from Massachusetts said yesterday, a bill specifically authorizing the President of the United States to enter into negotiations for the purpose of acquiring land above this amount from all Indian tribes and the location of the Indians in severalty upon the remainder of their lands. It was only because I feared that bill would not become a law, and therefore the President would not deem himself instructed to act immediately upon this question, which is so important, that I offered this resolution, in order that we might require of or at least suggest to the Executive that he institute measures at once, and not wait for the passage of the bill now on the Speaker's table of the House of Representatives, and which may not be reached, in order to accomplish this end.

Therefore this proposition is in accordance with the deliberate expression of the judgment of this body on two several occasions by bill; it is the expression of the judgment of the House of Representatives made only yesterday. It is in accordance not only with the fitness of things but with the necessity of things, because without this the President will not, as he ought not, feel himself authorized to engage in negotiations with any Indian tribe for any purpose whatever, or at all events for any purpose of the kind heretofore embraced in the execution of treaties.

As I said before I say again, it was furthest from my thoughts that any injustice or injury should result to any Indian or any Indian tribe by reason of the adoption of this proposition or by reason of the negotiations to be opened under it, or that we should witness in any degree as growing out of it a return to that which all men deprecate, and which was disposed of when Congress provided that the Executive should make no more treaties with Indians, but that all agreements with them should receive the sanction of law.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not think that there is to be any further debate on this resolution. I think it may be referred at once. It will save time to do that now.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I withdraw the motion for the purpose of having a vote on the motion to refer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio moves that the resolution and amendments be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. VEST. I wish to say a word. If I could be surprised at anything I should be surprised at what was said by the Senator from Michigan this morning. I might content myself by stating that argument does not consist in mere assertion and that abuse can not be considered as logic. The Senator from Michigan has not considered his words. I will simply say that this resolution was not intended to rob any Indians, but it was intended to protect the Indians. Emphatically and distinctly I say I offered it for the purpose of protecting the Indians, and this morning the delegate from the Creek Nation wrote me a letter, which I have, thanking me in the name of that nation for what I said yesterday upon this floor in behalf of his people; and the Creeks and Seminoles have filed in the Department of the Interior two papers, asking that the very thing should be done which I propose in the resolution I have offered to the Senate. Sir, I can only believe that the charge of stealing and robbery as applied by the Senator to this proposed action simply arises from the grossest ignorance in regard to this whole matter.

In 1866 by the treaties with the Creeks and Seminoles they sold their lands to the Government of the United States, the Creeks at 20 cents an acre and the Seminoles at 15 cents; the Creeks selling the west half of their entire domain, divided by a line running north and south; the Seminoles selling the whole of their possessions and taking other lands from the Creeks. In these two treaties was a provision that the lands so sold should only be occupied by Indians from the plains and freedmen. The Cherokees sold all of their domain west of the ninty-eighth meridian, which should afterwards be occupied by Indians. The wild tribes were to settle there and receive one hundred and sixty acres to each Indian, the United States paying for the amount which might thus be taken. The Choctaws and Chickasaws sold to the United States 7,000,000 acres for $300,000.

The proposition of the people who are called "boomers," and who have gone on that territory without law and in defiance of proclamation, was to ignore the treaties and tear them up and take possession without regard to the rights or interests of the Indians as they then were. Under my resolution they can not do that. My resolution says, and every impulse of my nature says, that these Indians shall be treated with the same standard of honesty as if it were the Government of Great Britain with whom we were treating. So far from outraging the Indians, it protects them. Every line of the resolution is in that direction and no other; and, sir, I undertake to say that there is not one member of the Seminole, or the Creek, or the Cherokee tribes who will not indorse most emphatically the action proposed.

When the Senator talks about using whisky with the chiefs, he can not apply it to myself. I have always denounced such action in any quarter. This is a proposition not only for the protection of the Indians, but it has the sanction of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. This very morning the Commissioner of Indian Affairs thanked me for having introduced this resolution, and said that he had already sent to Congress a recommendation of the same sort of action in regard to these lands. Yet the Senator from Michigan says that this is robbery! Sir, I appeal to the facts.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, I do not desire to prolong this discussion when the Senate wishes to go into executive session, and I care less for what the learned Senator from Missouri may have to say about the gross ignorance of gentlemen who differ with him. An assertion of knowledge neither establishes knowledge, nor does the assertion of ignorance establish ignorance.

The Senator goes beyond all the history and traditions and promises and treaties and pretensions of this Government, breaks through them all by his resolution, and proposes at once, whether it is best or not best, that the Secretary of the Interior enter into negotiations through some agent for these Indian lands. That is what I complain of. And when I recite that for two hundred years the whites on this continent have in thousands of instances by fraud, by drunkenness, by corruption, stolen away this part and that part of the vast domain occupied by the Indians and claimed by them, and without waiting for Congress to determine what its policy should be, whether it is best to give up the Indian Territory, whether it is best to confine the tribes to a smaller portion of land, whether it is best to give them one hundred and sixty acres in severalty, the Senator's proposition is for a negotiation hurriedly, no matter what Congress or the people of the United States may think about preserving its good faith with the Indians and its promise to the civilized world that there should be one territory set apart for these Indians, once the occupiers and owners of this whole vast domain. It is proposed to start off an agent to buy their lands. I say the chance is that the old policy of taking and occupying these lands will be renewed here; we are to follow the Rob Roy rule:

> Because the good old rule
> Sufficeth them, the simple plan,
> That they should take who have the power,
> And they should keep who can.

That is our policy with the Indians, and that is the natural result of this haste to find out how certain heads of tribes, like this man here, who is said to be the representative of a tribe, can get your money to handle, for the chiefs decide such matters, not the Indians. There are men who have been lingering around this Capitol ever since I have known it, continually coming in here with their plans and projects to do one thing or another thing, and to get away the Indian lands. "I fear the Greeks even bringing gifts," and I fear these representatives of these nations even if they do write to the Senator from Missouri approving his plan.

But, sir, the Senator from Kansas nearest me [Mr. INGALLS] has put his finger upon the knob which rings the bell to all the land. He relies on "manifest destiny." Whether the Senator believes in Providence, I do not know. Whether he believes in an overruling power of the nations and tribes of the earth from the beginning hitherto till now I never yet have been able to understand. But he argues this question as De Quincey argued the question of murder. He argued the question of murder as one of the fine arts. Murder having been viewed as a fine art, the getting of Indian lands may be regarded as a fine art; it is "manifest destiny," inevitable that the white race shall drive the Indians off! The Senator plants himself on that great rule of destiny, which, he says, will control not only our own and the Indian lands, but will spread itself north and south till it brings under the control of our people the North American continent, and soaring with his lively imagination still further, he crosses the tropics and claims that nothing but a hemisphere will satisfy the insatiable demands of fate—not Providence, not a King of nations and a Lord of peoples—not justice, but murder as a fine art, occupying territory as a fine art!

Sir, the Senator from Kansas has read that eloquent description of Lamb in which he explained to the world the discovery of the exquisite flavor and the ineffable attraction of roast pig, how on the vast steppes of Tartary and in the borders of China where the pig and the family resided in the same bamboo house, when the fire came and destroyed the house the family escaped but the pig perished in the ruins, and when this Chinese man or this Tartar man, whichever it may have been, came to search among the ruins to find if anything was left, and removing the ashes, he stuck his finger accidentally into the body of the young suckling roast pig, and cooling it in his mouth he found how delicious the acquisition was. He called his family, his wife and his children, or as the Senator from Kansas would so delightfully express it, his whole family circle, to partake with him of the roast pig. After that was consumed and a new bamboo house builded and new pigs acquired, an increase of stock, inevitable fate, inexorable destiny, compelled that Chinaman when the pig had attained a suitable size for roasting to remove his family and set fire to his building so as to roast the pig. All over those vast plains there was on every still night the burning bamboo house of a Chinaman who had learned how to acquire roast pig by consuming his dwelling to roast it. That is the origin, it is said, of that, and all over that region all kinds of rights are disregarded and all property destroyed that the family may luxuriate in that roasted delicacy.

Now the Senator from Kansas says we have taken these things all along; we have destroyed rights; we have invaded treaties; we have made ourselves obnoxious to the whole civilized world by seizing upon property, and we must keep up that method even though houses be destroyed to gratify our insatiable desire for more territory.

I should like to dwell somewhat upon this, but the Senator from California [Mr. MILLER] indicates in a manner which I can not misunderstand that he is very anxious to go into executive session for some purpose or other, and I yield, as he has been so courteous as to permit me to speak on this subject—I yield to his desire now, and hope he will make his motion, and that this discussion may go on hereafter, for I know the Senator from Missouri desires to reply, and the Senator from Kansas, to the roast pig argument. [Laughter.] I brought up that illustration because it touches a sensitive part of the nature of both my friends. I want them to dwell upon it and prolong the exquisite sensation of enjoyment which such a thing suggests. I have introduced it here to make it the subject of future remarks upon the same line of argument and to connect manifest destiny in regard to seizing Indian lands and the manifest destiny that lights up the vast plains of Tartary and China after the first discovery of the delicacy to which I have alluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] that the joint resolution and the pending amendments be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 20th instant approved and signed the act (S. 1625) for the relief of William Bowen.

The message also announced that the President had, on the 21st instant, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 2061) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Mississippi River, one within the State of Minnesota and one between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin; and

An act (S. 478) to authorize the Secretary of War to relinquish and turn over to the Interior Department certain parts of the Camp Douglas military reservation in the Territory of Utah.

The message further announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 2045) for the relief of the Eastern Presbyterian church in the District of Columbia;

An act (S. 1758) for the relief of Charles M. Blake, a chaplain in the United States Army; and

An act (S. 1821) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to examine and adjust the claim of E. W. Streeter for moneys expended and services performed in taking the census of Dakota in 1860.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I now renew my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and thirty-four minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 23, 1885.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PRESENTATION OF FLAG—WOMEN'S SILK-CULTURE ASSOCIATION.

The SPEAKER. At the request of a committee of ladies representing the Women's Silk-Culture Association of the United States, the Chair asks leave to interrupt the regular order of the proceedings this morning for a moment for the purpose of presenting a communication tendering to the United States House of Representatives a silk flag of the United States. The Clerk will read the communication accompanying this flag, and, if there be no objection, it will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The communication is as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, January 23, 1885.

To the honorable members of the House of Representatives at Washington:

The Women's Silk-Culture Association of the United States, established in Philadelphia in 1880, have since that time demonstrated silk-culture in the United States to a condition and state of progress never before attained, and upon the popularity of which numerous stock companies and individuals have established business centers.

While not deprecating such conditions we do ask that the questions by whom and how was the industry introduced be honestly and properly accredited to its rightful authors, the Women's Silk-Culture Association of the United States, who herewith desire to present to the House of Representatives of the United States at Washington a truly American national flag in the sense that the silk produced for this flag was raised in American homes by American women and children; reeled by the Women's Association at Philadelphia, who are the only reelers of commercial silk in the country up to this time; spun, dyed, woven, and mounted in the city of Philadelphia; and through the liberality of Mrs. C. C. Thum, of the association, who generously offered to defray the expense incurred in producing the flag, the association is enabled to offer it to the national Capitol as a memento of their success in starting silk-culture as an industry for their American sisters. We ask for this flag a place in the Halls of our National Government, that it may bear witness to the faithfulness of our effort and to the quality of our American product, both agricultural and mechanical.

This is not the first fruits of American-grown products. The Garfield brocade, presented to the widow of our late lamented President, was manipulated by our own association, and its wonderfully beautiful quality and design displayed to our statesmen at Washington.

A State and national flag have just been presented to the Legislature at Harrisburg, which were made of native silk grown in the summer of 1883, and passed through all the processes of manufacture in the city of Philadelphia. Besides these national gifts, the association has had American silk worked up into knitting silk, brocade, velvet, gros-grain silk, and chenille; and in every form the quantity and quality have proved a good and profitable result.

For statistics, we refer you to our fourth annual report of 1883 and to the files of the Daily Silk Record, published by the association during the late exhibit. And begging your acceptance and a place of honor for this flag, we also ask that due consideration shall be given this association when the National Government may see fit to aid this industry.

American women are raising silk-worm eggs far superior to foreign breeds. What the industry needs is experimental stations, where the process of culture and reeling shall be established, and where the experience and knowledge of foreign operations shall be united to American talent, industry, and intelligence.

Remember, we are the silk association of the United States; our correspondence, our instructions, and progress belong to nearly every State in the Union. The California association is modeled after our own, but more liberally dealt with by her State.

All the work of our association has been carried on by the most frugal and economical management, but much left undone that could have been done had we the means of accomplishing our aims. Therefore we crave the assurance of future good-will and influence in the interests we have stimulated and planted.

Mrs. JOHN LUCAS, President.
Mrs. MATTHEW SIMPSON,
Mrs. CORNELIA C. THUM,
Mrs. WM. B. ELTONHEAD,
Miss PHŒBE HORNE,
Mrs. W. T. REYNOLDS,
Vice-Presidents.
Miss E. T. VAN RENSSELAER, Recording Secretary.
Mrs. V. C. HAVEN, Corresponding Secretary.
Mrs. H. P. TAYLOR, Treasurer.
Mrs. E. V. B. OSBOURN, P. and S. Committee.
Mrs. G. W. HALL, Reel Committee.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a resolution in this connection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives accepts the flag prepared for its use, and presented by the Women's Silk-Culture Association of the United States; that the excellence of the fiber and perfection of the colors it displays afford evidence of the remarkably rapid development of the culture and manufacture of silk by the American people, under the auspices of this association of women, and that the House will cause the flag as the national emblem to be displayed within the Hall of the House and preserved as a memorial of the tact and energy of the Women's Silk-Culture Association of the United States.

The resolution was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McMILLIN. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Chair will lay before the House certain executive communications and personal requests of members.

There was no objection.

FREE PENALTY ENVELOPES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting a letter from the Third Assistant Postmaster-General asking an appropriation of $4,000 for the purchase of free penalty envelopes from the Post-Office Department for the next fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HARBOR AT CLEVELAND, OHIO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from the Chief of Engineers, with accompanying papers, relative to the improvement of harbor at Cleveland, Ohio; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

WASHINGTON AQUEDUCT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, recommending the passage of a bill extending the time for one year within which claims for property taken for the Washington Aqueduct may be presented to the Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. DAVIS, of Missouri, for two weeks, on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TALBOTT. I move to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. HURD. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

POWER TO ORIGINATE REVENUE BILLS.

Mr. HURD. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas certain bills, appropriating money from the Treasury of the United States, originating in the Senate, have passed that body and have been sent to this House for its concurrence, which are now upon the Speaker's table, to wit, Senate bill No. 398, entitled "A bill to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools," and many others; and

Whereas it is asserted that these bills are in violation of the privilege of this House to exclusively originate bills for raising revenue: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be hereby directed to inquire into the power of the Senate to originate bills appropriating money from the Treasury of the United States, and report to this House at as early a day as practicable. And said committee shall have leave to report at any time.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not object to the resolution except in its latter part, which gives leave to the committee to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks if this be a matter of privilege at all the committee would have the right to report at any time. The resolution does not refer any bill to the committee, but directs an inquiry to be made.

Mr. TALBOTT. I make the point of order that this is not a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear any suggestion the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT] has to make on that point.

Mr. TALBOTT. I make the point of order for the simple reason that it is not a question for the Committee on the Judiciary to decide whether or not the power is in this House alone to originate revenue bills. That is a power settled by the Constitution. The gentleman from Ohio has a right to offer his resolution, but I do not think it is in the nature of a privileged resolution at this time. He can only offer it at some time when it would be in regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks whenever it is asserted on the floor of the House that the rights or privileges of the House have been invaded or violated by any other body or by any individual, a question of privilege is presented at least to the extent that the Chair is obliged to submit it to the House for its decision. Of course the Chair itself will decide all questions of order arising during legislative proceedings of the House; but when the allegation is made that the rights or privileges of the House collectively have been invaded, that is a question which does not come within the province of the Chair to decide. The House is the custodian and guardian of its own rights and privileges as a body, and must always possess the power and have the opportunity to determine what those rights and privileges are and whether or not they have been improperly interfered with.

Mr. TALBOTT. I withdraw, then, the point of order.

Mr. WILLIS. I have just come into the Hall, and ask a question for information. Do I understand this resolution is before the House now for its consideration?

The SPEAKER. It is. The gentleman from Ohio, the Chair will state, offers the resolution, which has just been read, alleging that the Senate has passed certain bills appropriating money out of the public Treasury in violation of the constitutional privileges of the House, and directing the Committee on the Judiciary to investigate that question and report its opinion for the information of the House.

Mr. WILLIS. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether it is not in order to move that so much of the resolution as refers to the educational bill be referred to the Committee on Education. If it is, I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen from Ohio [Mr. HURD] has the floor. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] can make any proper parliamentary motion when he obtains the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio has the floor. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. TALBOTT. I withdrew the point of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I wish to inquire whether the gentleman from Ohio is entitled to the floor for an hour on this question; and further, what arrangement, if any, can be made as to the division of time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know whether the gentleman from Ohio proposes to discuss the resolution or to make some further motion in reference to it. But if he desires to discuss the resolution he is entitled to the floor under the rules for one hour.

Mr. REAGAN. With the permission of the gentleman from Ohio I desire to make an inquiry of the Chair. If this resolution should be adopted and the question be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, would the bills embraced in and named by the resolution come before the House for action, or would the committee simply report on the question referred to them?

The SPEAKER. The resolution does not propose to refer any bill. It proposes to refer merely the question of privilege.

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the effect of this question being referred to the Judiciary Committee be to prevent the consideration of the Blair bill, as it is called—the educational bill—in its regular order?

The SPEAKER. Not at all. If the House wishes it can consider it.

Mr. HURD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a few remarks upon the resolution just read. If any apology were necessary for my thus trespassing upon the attention of the House it shall be found in the importance of the constitutional questions involved and the necessity of deciding them now. By others the task might better have been undertaken than by me; but as no one else has seemed disposed to offer this resolution, a sense of duty has impelled me, even at the risk of some criticism, to present it, and with it my views of the subject to which it relates.

For several years I have observed with apprehension the increasing number of appropriation bills originating in the Senate, but so long as they related to private or local interests and completed their work in a single act of expenditure I have not interposed an objection. But when bills proposing to appropriate more than seventy millions of dollars for great public purposes and involving annual expenditure for many years to come originated in the Senate, then I felt that the time had come to decide finally whether or not that body possessed any such power.

This subject has been in dispute on several occasions between the two Houses, but no determination has ever been reached by this House, and it is to-day apparently as far from settlement as ever.

There is no proposition affecting the privileges of this House of greater importance. It involves the boundary lines between the legislative functions of the two branches of the Federal Congress. It touches the most valuable prerogative of legislation—the power of appropriating money. It affects in an especial way the rights of the people, who are most deeply concerned in the methods of expending the sums realized from taxation. It brings to the public attention the history of English parliamentary growth. It presents the question of how far the principles of that development have been applied in the formation of our institutions. It imposes upon us the duty as the immediate representatives of the people to decide whether the great power of the House of Commons for the protection of popular rights was given to this body. If we find we possess it, then the obligation is devolved upon us to maintain and uphold it, with the same spirit, courage, and love of liberty which have illustrated the history in that regard of the popular branch of the British Parliament.

There is no dispute that bills may originate in the Senate as well as in the House, except as provided in section 7 of article 1 of the Constitution. The language of the first paragraph of that section is:

> All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills.

The question thus directly presented in the resolution I have offered is: Are bills appropriating money bills for raising revenue? I maintain that they are, and ask the House to consider the reasons which have brought my mind to this conclusion.

In the first place, this will appear by reflecting upon the true signification of the word revenue. But at the threshold it will be well to state with accuracy the meaning of the term to be employed in this discussion. An appropriation bill is one specifically setting aside for certain purposes sums of money realized from taxation. A bill raising revenue is a bill making or creating revenue. Revenue is the annual income of a government derived from taxation and made available by constitutional methods for the public use.

Taxation does not make the money collected revenue. It is not sufficient that it shall have been taken by public power from the property of the citizen. It is not revenue until the Government can draw it from the Treasury and use it. The public coffers might be full of money raised by taxation, but not one dollar of it is revenue unless it can be applied to the payment of governmental expense. Of what avail to a State would an overflowing exchequer be without the power to expend a cent it contains?

Worcester defines revenue to be "the income of a nation or state derived from duties, taxes, and other sources, for the payment of national expenses." In substance this is the same as the definition given by Webster. These show that that income only is revenue which is available for the payment of national expenses. The purpose for which the tax was levied does not fix its character as revenue, but its availability for use in discharge of national obligations.

As authority for his definition, Worcester refers to Brande's Dictionary of Science and Art, where revenue is thus defined:

> The name given to the income of a state, derived from the customs, excises, taxations, and other sources, and appropriated to the payment of the national expenses.

This definition is followed in the Universal Dictionary, the present standard in Great Britain, in these words: "Revenue is the annual income of a state, derived from the taxation, customs, excises, and other sources, and appropriated to the payment of the national expenses."

No other definition would be consistent with the facts of English history, out of which have grown the methods of furnishing support to that government. The revenue for the Crown of Great Britain is either ordinary or extraordinary. The former is attached to it by hereditary right; the latter is specially granted by Parliament as a supply for national purposes. The ordinary revenues became less and less valuable in the progress of time. Then the extraordinary ones were resorted to to supply the deficiency and make up the amount necessary for the expenses of the government. The foundation of these was the parliamentary grant; and without it the only source of governmental support was the income from property owned by the Crown by hereditary title. Money, therefore, to become revenue to the King, must have been granted to him by the commons. It is true that for many years he had the privilege of expending it as he pleased, but he could not spend it until it had been granted. The levying of the tax, the collecting it, the depositing it in the treasury, all were not sufficient to make the money realized royal revenue; these were merely the preliminary steps. The essential act to constitute it revenue was the grant, without which not one single farthing could have been used for the national expenses. As will be shown hereafter, the appropriation grew to be a necessary part of the grant, so that at the time of the formation of our Constitution, and for more than a century before, there could have been no extraordinary revenue in Great Britain for the Crown which had not been appropriated for specified purposes by the house of commons.

The definitions cited, therefore, rightly declare an appropriation to be a necessary step to the creation of revenue. A bill of appropriation is a bill raising revenue; and since the word "revenue" must be held to be employed in the Constitution in its then ordinarily accepted sense, such a bill must originate in the House.

Secondly. The proceedings in the constitutional convention show very plainly that this term was used in its usual sense as including bills of appropriation as well as tax bills.

The first provision on this subject in the convention appeared in the plan of Mr. Charles Pinckney, as follows:

> All money bills of every kind shall originate in the House of Delegates, and shall not be altered by the Senate.—Madison Papers, page 129.

After debate proceeded for some time, it was found that great differences of opinion had arisen, which it was proposed to refer to a committee of compromise. The committee was appointed with Mr. Gerry as chairman, who reported a recommendation to the convention, which upon this point contained the following provision:

> All bills for raising or appropriating money * * * shall originate in the first branch of the legislature and shall not be altered or amended in the second branch.—Madison Papers, 274.

The report was in substance accepted by the convention in these words:

> All bills for raising or appropriating money shall originate in the first branch of the legislature and shall not be altered or amended in the Senate.—Madison Papers, page 316.

In the same phrase it was referred to the committee on detail (Madison Papers, page 375), who reported it back to the convention in the following form:

SEC. 5 (article 4). All bills for raising or appropriating money shall originate in the House of Representatives, and shall not be altered or amended in the Senate.

Upon first consideration this section was stricken out by a vote of 7 States to 4. Afterward it was reconsidered, and Mr. Randolph moved to amend so that it would read:

Bills for raising money for the purpose of revenue or for appropriating the same shall originate in the House of Representatives, and shall not be amended or altered in the Senate as to increase or diminish the sum to be raised, or change the mode of levying it, or the object of its appropriation.—Madison Papers, page 414.

A further amendment was proposed by Mr. Strong (Madison Papers, page 427):

Each House shall possess the right of originating all bills, except bills for raising money for the purposes of revenue and appropriating the same, which shall originate in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as in other cases.

The committee of eleven reported the final draught, as follows:

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives and shall be subject to alteration or amendment in the Senate.

This was adopted with an amendment striking out the last clause and inserting:

But the senate may propose or concur with amendments as in other bills.

The first appearance of the word "revenue" in this connection in the convention was in the proposition of Mr. Randolph. It was also offered in nearly the same phrase in the amendment of Mr. Strong. The language in both is, "All bills raising money for the purpose of revenue, and appropriating the same, shall originate in the House." Changing the words a little, in accordance with their grammatical construction, we will make the meaning clearer. It would then read, "All bills raising or appropriating money for the purposes of revenue." This shows that the propositions proceeded upon the theory that appropriation bills were as necessary to make money revenue as tax bills.

This, too, must have been the opinion of the committee of eleven, to whom the subject was referred. They had before them all the propositions which had been submitted to the convention. These were: "All money bills of every kind;" "All bills for raising or appropriating money," and "All bills for raising money for the purpose of revenue and appropriating the same." For all of them they substituted the phrase approved by the convention, "All bills for raising revenue."

What did this change signify? Certainly more than the mere raising of money, for, with that phrase in so many propositions before them, they could easily have adopted it if nothing more had been meant. What then more than merely raising money was intended? Manifestly as much more than that as may be included in the meaning of the word "revenue," which, as I have shown, is the appropriation of money.

Persons who insist upon the possession of the power over appropriations by the Senate read this section as though it said all bills raising money. It does not so declare. It is all bills raising revenue. The raising of money is one thing, the raising of revenue is another. To do the one, taxation only is necessary; to do the other, appropriation in addition is required.

In substituting bills for raising revenue for the other propositions before it the convention must have designed either to deny to the House the exclusive power of originating appropriation bills or to include that power in the phrase. I believe that it was their intention to do the latter.

Every proposition before it upon the subject included bills of appropriations. If it were not the purpose to retain them in the provision as finally adopted, surely some discussion would have occurred in the convention about it. Those who had introduced propositions giving the power to the House would have objected to a proposition omitting it altogether. In the debates the proposition, as presented by the committee of revision, was treated as the equivalent of those which had been previously submitted. The same phrase was applied to both, and all through the discussion the bills referred to were called "money bills."

The silence of the convention is incomprehensible if power over appropriation bills was not given to the House by this section. It is easily understood if it is held that the phrase as finally adopted was intended to include bills appropriating as well as those raising money.

Thirdly, it was the manifest purpose of the framers of the Constitution to confer upon the House of Representatives the same power over bills of revenue possessed by the house of commons. The debates upon this subject were full of references to English parliamentary history. The contests in which the commons had been engaged for the origination of money bills were well known to every member of the convention. The importance of this power was thoroughly appreciated, and the desirability of incorporating it into our own system in some form or other was conceded on all sides. A knowledge therefore of the nature of this power in Great Britain will show its extent and limitations in our own Constitution.

That at the time of the adoption of that instrument the commons possessed the exclusive right to originate appropriation bills can not be successfully controverted.

Prior to the reign of Charles the Second the grants of supplies were rarely limited to particular methods of expenditure. The whole control over this was left to the King. But the commons, growing jealous of the use of money for purposes which they had not approved, insisted upon specifying the objects of their grant. After a long struggle between them and the King they finally succeeded in 1678 in establishing the principle for which they had contended in the following words:

That all aids and supplies, and aids to His Majesty in Parliament, are the sole gift of the commons, and that it is the undoubted and sole right of the commons to direct, limit, and appoint in such bill the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations, and qualifications of such grants, which ought not to be changed or altered by the house of lords.

Todd, in his work on Parliamentary Government, page 1526, says:

The constitutional rule that the sums granted and appropriated by the commons for any special service should be applied by the executive power only to defray the expense of that service, although not wholly unrecognizable in earlier times, was first distinctly enunciated and partially enforced after the restoration. But it was not until the resolution of 1678 that this great principle was firmly established and incorporated into the system of parliamentary government.

On this subject May, in volume 2, 469, of his Parliamentary History, says:

For centuries they (the commons) had resented any meddling of the other house with matters of supplies, and in the reign of Charles II they successfully maintained their exclusive right to determine as to the matter, the measure, and the time of every tax imposed upon the people. In the same reign they began to scrutinize the public expenditure and introduced the salutary practice of appropriating their grants to particular purposes.

In Hearn's British Government, page 343, it is said:

From that time [Dutch war of 1665] the appropriation of parliamentary supplies became an undisputed principle. It was recognized during the reign of Charles and James, and from the time of the revolution has been invariable.

It would be idle to make further quotations. All the commentators on the English constitution agree that from 1678 the practice of the commons had been uniform, to accompany their grants with a clause appropriating them to specific purposes. This provision was usually attached to the supply bill at the end of the session. The method of procedure was as follows:

First, the tax bill, or the ways and means, was passed; then the various grants were made in supply bill; and at last these grants were incorporated in a single bill, to which the following clause was attached:

That the said aids and supplies shall not be issued or applied to any use, intent, or purpose other than those before mentioned.

This was the appropriation bill. It was a part of the supply bill, and must from the necessities of the case have originated in the house of commons, where alone the supply bill could originate. The appropriation was not an independent act of itself; it was an incident to the grant; and for more than a century before the adoption of our Constitution neither the King nor the lords disputed their right to originate the one more than the other.

That this was well known to the founders of our Government was shown by the fact that every proposition relating to this subject contained a provision as to bills appropriating money. It was the provision of the English constitution, which was before them; and all the current history of the times, as well as the debates in the different conventions of the States, show the purpose to incorporate this principle into our system.

In the conventions of the States the question was very fully considered. The bills everywhere were called money bills.

In Massachusetts Mr. Parsons said:

Under the Constitution an equal representation immediately from the people is introduced, who, by their negative and exclusive right of originating money bills, have the power to control the Senate, where the sovereignty of the States is represented.—3 Elliott's Debates, 108.

In Pennsylvania (3 Elliott, 418) Mr. Wilson said:

Money bills must originate in the House of Representatives.

In North Carolina (4 Elliott, 144) Mr. Iredell said:

Yet under these disadvantages they (the commons), having the sole power of originating bills it has been found that the power of the King and the lords is much less considerable than theirs. * * * If, under such circumstances, such representatives, mere shadows of representatives, by having the power of the purse and the sacred name of the people to rely upon, are an overmatch for the King and lords who have such great hereditary qualifications, we may safely conclude that our own representatives, who will be genuine representatives of the people and having equally the right of originating money bills, will at least be a match for the Senate, possessing qualifications so inferior to those of the house of lords in England.

Mr. Madison said in the First Congress:

The Constitution places the power in the House of originating money bills.

Mr. Hamilton says, in the fifty-eighth number of the Federalist:

The House of Representatives can not only refuse but they alone can propose the supplies requisite for the support of the Government. They, in a word, hold the purse, that powerful instrument by which we behold, in the history of the British constitution, an infant and humble representative of the people gradually increasing the sphere of its activity and importance, and finally reducing, as far as it seems to have wished, all the overgrown prerogatives of other branches of the government. This power over the purse may, in fact, be regarded as the most complete and effectual weapon with which any constitution can arm the immediate representatives of the people, for obtaining a redress of every grievance, and for carrying into effect every just and salutary measure.

In Tucker's Appendix to Blackstone's Commentaries, volume 1, page 215:

The exclusive privileges of the house of commons and of our House of Representatives, with some small variations, are the same. The part relating to money bills, in which no amendment is permitted to be made in the house of lords, is modified in our Constitution so as to give the Senate a concurrent right in every respect, except in the power of originating them.

Further citations would be useless. It is sufficient to say that the defenders of the Constitution in the States, the members of the earlier Congresses, and nearly every commentator upon that instrument refer to bills for raising revenue as money bills, and possessing the same qualities as those which the commons could exclusively originate.

What, then, were "money bills?" Cushing, in his work on Parliamentary Law, says that "money bills" are bills raising money and bills making appropriations.

Todd defines them as follows:

Money bills are of three kinds: tax bills, supply bills, and bills making appropriations.

Can it be doubted that when the founders of the Constitution so persistently spoke of revenue bills as money bills, they meant to include bills of appropriation?

Fourthly, consider also the provision of the Constitution by which the power of appropriation is granted.

Section 8 of article 1 provides that "the Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States."

If the power of appropriation is not granted here, it can not be found in the Constitution. The best authorities agree that it is contained in this clause. It will be observed that it does not possess any of the characteristics of a distinct and original power. It is secondary and incidental. The chief and principal power, that of raising money, is granted in the first clause; the subsidiary one, that of appropriating the money, is granted in the second; to pay the debts of the United States and to provide for the common defense and general welfare is the language used to indicate the purposes to which the money may be applied. The power to appropriate, therefore, is purely incidental to the power to tax. The former is granted to complete and perfect the latter. They are inseparable, and it was proper that both should be conferred by the same clause.

Whatever affects the first power must affect the latter. Whatever limits in the methods of legislation the one must limit the other, because the one is a part of the other. The money is raised to pay the debts of the United States. The taxes are imposed to provide for the common defense and the general welfare. It is conceded that bills raising money must originate in the House, the bills providing for the exercise of the supplementary and incidental power must likewise originate there.

This view meets with the approval of President Monroe in his message as to the repairs of the Cumberland road in 1822:

If we look to the second branch of this power, that which authorizes the appropriation of money thus raised, we find that it is not less general and unqualified than the power to raise it. More comprehensive terms than to "pay debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare" could not have been used. So intimately connected with and dependent on each other are these two branches of power, that had either been limited the limitation would have had a like effect on the other. Had the power to raise money been conditioned or restricted to special purposes, the appropriation must have corresponded with it.

It is not disputed that the exercise of the power of raising money is conditioned upon the origination of the bills relating to it in the House. On the authority of President Monroe, appropriation bills must be subject to the same condition. Since the formation of the Constitution no general appropriation bill has originated in the Senate which has become a law. In 1857 the Senate originated such a bill, but the House utterly ignored it and originated its own bill as usual. It is true that many personal and local bills making appropriations have originated in the Senate; but they can not establish the doctrine that this power attaches to that body when confronted by the unvarying usage that the House has originated all general appropriation bills.

With the single exception referred to, which the House ignored, the Senate has awaited the bills of the House before it has undertaken to deal with the subject of general appropriations.

Mr. HERBERT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HURD. Certainly.

Mr. HERBERT. I wish to state, in the first place, that there has been, perhaps, not a single session of Congress since the foundation of the Government in which the Senate has not originated a special appropriation bill which has been passed by the House, as the gentleman himself has admitted. Now, my question is, what distinction can he gather from the Constitution between the right of the Senate to originate a bill appropriating a specific sum of money for a specific purpose and its right to appropriate a specific sum, as in the case of the educational bill, for a general purpose. I ask him, therefore, what provision of the Constitution makes the distinction or difference between the two rights of appropriating; and when he says that all of these exceptions are not sufficient to establish a precedent, I ask him to point out what can establish a precedent for the construction of the Constitution if the uniform action of the Congress during every session from the establishment of the Government until the present time is not sufficient for that purpose?

Mr. HURD. The gentleman from Alabama misapprehends me very strangely indeed if he thinks I made any distinction between the two. I deny the power of the Senate to originate any bill of appropriations, whether one of a personal or local character, applying the appropriation to specific purposes, or a bill of a general character; in other words, a general appropriation bill. What I do say is that the consenting of prior Houses of Representatives to a departure from the Constitution, and the passage by the House of special appropriation bills originating in the Senate, do not amount to a surrender on the part of the House of the great prerogative it possesses over this subject, if it really does possess it.

Mr. Speaker, the word "appropriation" occurs but twice in the Constitution. Section 7 of article 1 provides that "no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law."

Money insusceptible of being drawn from the Treasury can not be revenue. To take it from the Treasury requires an appropriation. An appropriation bill is therefore a bill raising revenue and must originate in the House.

In section 8 of article 1 it is provided that no appropriation of money for the Army shall be for a longer time than two years. In passing, I desire to say that if the word "revenue" is to have the restricted meaning claimed for it by others, that it would have been more consistent to have said no revenue shall be drawn from the Treasury, and that no appropriation of revenue for the Army shall be for a longer time than two years.

Mr. Speaker, the consequences to follow the adoption of the other view would in my judgment be destructive of the objects contemplated in the section under discussion. The purpose of this clause of the Constitution, Mr. Madison said, was "to make the House the guardian of the public money." Very little power for the accomplishment of this will have been granted if it is to be confined to bills of taxation.

The authority over expenditure is at least of equal importance. To give to the House the power to pass bills raising money and to the Senate power to expend it will be to control the grants of the former through the debts of the latter. To give to the House the right to originate bills of taxation and to the Senate the right to originate appropriation bills will be to enable the latter to control the discretion of the other in presenting tax bills. It may be said that no appropriation could then be made until it had been passed and approved by the House. To this I reply that it is the power of origination which has been regarded as of so much importance in this connection. The authority of the House over this subject will be of little value and be little respected if the Senate is to exercise the power contended for.

It must be remembered that bills fixing the nature and rate of taxation are only adopted once in ten or fifteen years. Few changes are made in them until a new system is inaugurated. If the Senate has concurrent power with the House over appropriations, then the latter during these long periods will have but little exclusive power over the purse, for in the expenditure of the money which the tax bill gathers annually into the Treasury the Senate will have equal authority with the House.

Mr. Speaker, there can be no good reason given why the Constitution was not intended to grant to this House the power of the English commons. This was the power before the minds of the framers of that instrument. They knew its object and history. It had been and was then the highest prerogative of the commons. It had found that body insignificant in influence and despised; it made it the most important element in British public affairs. It was the bulwark against the encroachments of the lords and protection against the despotic tendencies of royalty. It compelled the former to await their pleasure in originating the most important measures of legislation, and made the latter dependent upon their will for the necessary support of the public administration.

The most splendid page in British parliamentary history is that which records the struggle of the commons for this power over money bills. Charles the First lost his head and James the Second his throne because they would not permit an invasion of this prerogative. Neither the threats nor corruption of royalty swerved them. With this power in their hands they stood to stay the flood of usurpation which threatened to swallow up popular rights. Stronger than kings, more potential than hereditary nobility, they were the protectors of the people, whose taxes they granted or withheld at their own uncontrolled pleasure. Both were compelled to respect them, because neither was able to take a step in the administration of the government without the means which they had the power to retain.

As a result the majesty of Great Britain does not appear in the splendors of her throne, nor in the illustrious names of her nobility, but in the sturdy commons, whose authority over money, even now, brings terror to titles and complaisance to the Crown.

Remember that this power does not relate merely to taxation, but includes appropriation and the fixing of the ends and methods of public expenditure. It is this very power, except as it may be subject to the right to amendment in the Senate, which I believe is reposed in this House to-day, not merely a power to originate the methods of taxation, but the methods of expenditure and the limits within which both shall operate.

No greater power was ever given the representatives of a people for the preservation of the rights of their constituency. It is the most potent instrumentality in resisting executive usurpation. It is at once the evidence of the supremacy of the people and the most effective weapon by which it may be maintained.

Shall we be less careful of it than the subjects of a monarchy? Shall this body, in the very air of freedom, be less jealous guardians of it than the commons of England, where kings and hereditary right and royal prerogatives are? Shall we, the real representatives of the people, here permit this great power to become weak in our hands, while there the shadows of representatives have made it the most potent agency for popular rights in the English system?

We will be recreant to the highest trust ever possessed by men in their representative capacity if we are careless or indifferent. We will be the betrayers, not the representatives, of our constitutents. If we surrender it now, we lose in a day for freedom what it took centuries to win and which years of effort may not regain.

Mr. Speaker, we can not go far astray when we walk in the paths which have been blazed for us by the pioneers of freedom. Precedents born in conflict and formed in the perils of men's lives can never be cast aside because apparently useless. You can only preserve liberty by preserving its muniments. Of these there is no one more important than the control of the people's money by the people's representatives. I have no fear that this House will be indifferent to this its highest privilege, and I am sure that when the hour of determination comes, it will decide, as it only can consistently with its dignity, for itself, its prerogative, and the people. [Applause].

Mr. REED and Mr. WILLIS addressed the Chair.

Mr. HURD. I am willing to yield my remaining time to any gentleman who desires to speak upon this question.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I would like to occupy the time, but I announce to the gentleman from Ohio it will be in opposition to the view he has presented here.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, am I recognized?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. WILLIS. I yield ten minutes of the remaining time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND].

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible in ten minutes to argue such a question as this; therefore, instead of making any effort at a reply in detail to the gentleman from Ohio, I propose to call the attention of the House to certain facts in connection with this general question.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] said that he had been content in the past to allow appropriations originating in the Senate for specific objects, which appropriations were ended when the objects were accomplished, to pass unchallenged. The gentleman's memory is at fault. He did make such a challenge in the third session of the Forty-sixth Congress, in 1881, on the consideration of the Senate bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase additional lots of ground adjoining the new building of the Bureau of Printing and Engraving. The gentleman from Ohio, then a member of the Judiciary Committee, raised this same point and had it referred to the Judiciary Committee for adjudication.

Mr. HURD. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HAMMOND. Yes.

Mr. HURD. I did not raise the point. Somebody else raised the point, and it was referred by that person, whoever he was, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HAMMOND. I may be inaccurate as to that. But of the fifteen gentlemen who composed that committee ten decided that the Senate had the right not only to originate that bill, but all bills of like character. I will ask the Clerk to read the section of the report of that committee which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

That clause [of the Constitution] provides that "all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments, as on other bills." And if the words in which it is expressed are to be taken in their ordinary acceptation, as required by the primary canon of legal interpretation, it is difficult to conceive how there could possibly be two opinions as to the idea they were intended to convey, for certainly the distinction between raising revenue and disposing of it after it has been raised is sufficiently obvious to be understood by even the commonest capacity.

Mr. HAMMOND. That was the judgment of ten members of the Judiciary Committee, delivered to this House on the 2d day of February, 1881. Of the members of that committee still in the House are Messrs. CONVERSE, HERBERT, TAYLOR, REED, CULBERTSON, and myself. Of the members of that committee who are not at present in the House were Mr. Robinson, now governor of Massachusetts, and Mr. Knott, now governor of Kentucky. As is suggested to me, Mr. Willits, of Michigan, not now in the House, was also of that committee.

The minority were Messrs. HURD, House, Ryan, LAPHAM, and Williams, all now out of Congress except Mr. HURD and Senator LAPHAM. If the Judiciary Committee of to-day were polled on this floor without the reference of this matter to them upon the law questions, without putting them to the trouble of recalling the learning on this subject and printing it, I venture the assertion that by a vote of two-thirds they would now say that the Senate can originate an appropriation bill.

To the gentleman's appeal to history I now reply by a single quotation.

The proposition as proposed in the convention by Mr. Randolph read this way:

Bills for raising money for the purpose of revenue, and for appropriating the same, shall originate in the House of Representatives, and shall not be so amended or altered by the Senate as to increase or diminish the sum to be raised, or change the mode of levying it, or the object of its appropriation.

The words "for appropriating the same" were stricken out by a vote, and so were the other words of like import. And yet the gentleman from Ohio tells us that the very words that were thus stricken out remain there to-day in the meaning of the word "revenue." Who talks about the "revenue" of a nation in any other sense than that of its income? "Raising revenue" is bringing up money from the pockets of the people to the exchequer of the Government, and the constitutional convention limited the prerogative of the House to that. It did not extend it to appropriations.

Mr. Speaker, as I have remarked, I can not argue this matter now. I will ask before I sit down the privilege of elaborating my remarks, because it is important the question should be fully presented, and because with further time I can produce some pertinent history touching this matter. I desire now, however, in my limited time, simply to call attention to the fact that more than one-half of the appropriation bills that this Government has ever had originated in the Senate. True, we derive our origin from the British Government; but we have departed from their theory in many particulars. Gentlemen who have read British history must remember that the "money bill" in Parliament carried with it the raising of the revenue and its appropriation both in the same bill. Hence in England they can not appropriate money which is raised by taxation unless the bill is started in the house of commons, because the same bill does both things. That is not true in this country; with us bills "raising revenue" and bills appropriating money are wholly separate.

Again, one of the ways of raising the "revenue" of the British King, as Blackstone calls it, is the post-office department. Yet the Post-Office Department of the United States was created by a bill which originated in the Senate of the United States within a very short time after the adoption of the Constitution.

It will not do for the House to yield any privilege which it has. It will not do for the House to grasp any privilege which it has not. The Constitution must be interpreted like any other instrument of writing. Suppose in making a contract the first draught contained certain words; suppose after deliberation it be decided and expressed in writing that those words be stricken out; do you tell me that after this either party could with any degree of fairness or honesty say that those words were retained because some man says the meaning of a certain word left embraces that idea?

Now under the permission allowed me by the House let us look more deliberately into this matter.

Our Constitution declares that—

All legislative power herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives. (Article 1, section 1.)

And—

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills. (Ibid., section 7, paragraph 1.)

Some of the sources of revenue were nominated in the Constitution, such as the Congressional "power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises" (Ibid., section 8, paragraph 1), and forfeitures of estates for treason (article 3, section 3, paragraph 2). Other sources were furnished by the powers of coining money, regulating commerce, establishing post-offices and post-roads, &c.

The proceeds of public lands or property captured in war; fines and penalties for violations of law or breaches of contracts all added to our revenues.

So money was put into the Treasury. To get it out of the Treasury the Constitution declared—

No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law.

This recital seems to settle the question, for it is only bills "raising revenue" which must originate in the House.

But it is claimed the "bills for raising revenue" include appropriation bills, because the income of the Government is not "revenue" until appropriated; that by its history, &c., "revenue" has that technical meaning.

Archerly's Britannic Constitution, published in 1727, called the bill of 1640 "a money bill." The commons journal called that of 1660 "a bill concerning money."

The bills of 1671 were called "bills of money." The bill of 1678 was known as "the grand money bill." It was bills levying taxes which Blackstone called in 1765 money bills. (1 Blackstone's Commentaries, 169.) "Money bills" was the name of taxing bills in the constitutions of Delaware, Maryland, New Jersey, South Carolina, and Virginia in 1776, of Massachusetts in 1780, and of New Hampshire in 1784. I believe that no specific mention of such bills was made in the early constitutions of the others of the original thirteen States. The words "bills for raising revenue" have no history prior to our constitutional convention. They first appeared in that instrument.

Before 1345 the lords granted of their money what they pleased and the commons of theirs what they pleased. Neither consulted the other house. The King used the revenue so raised as he pleased. Later Parliament began to appropriate money by law and to specific uses in the same bills which raised the revenues. Then it was that the commons claimed the exclusive right to originate such bills, and "that the lords could not make any amendment in bills sent up to them for imposing directly or indirectly a charge upon the people." (3 Hallam's Constitutional History, 27–29.) In 1671 the commons resolved that "in all aids given to the King by the commons the rate or tax ought not to be altered by the lords." (May's Parliamentary Practice, 537.)

The famous resolution of 1678 was:

That all aids and supplies and aids to His Majesty in Parliament, are the sole gift of the commons, and all bills for the granting of such aids and supplies ought to begin with the commons; and that it is the undoubted and sole right of the commons to direct, limit, and appoint in such bills the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations, and qualifications of such grants, which ought not to be changed or altered by the house of lords.

May, in discussing this resolution as the basis of parliamentary action, said:

Even in bills not confined to matters of aid or taxation, but in which pecuniary burdens are imposed upon the people, the lords may make any amendment, provided it did not increase rates, &c.

But he adds:

The principle of excluding the lords from interference has even been pressed so far by the commons that when the lords have sent messages for reports and papers relative to taxation the commons evaded sending them. (Ibid., 5, 11.)

Leon Levi, in his work on taxation, published in 1860, commenting on this resolution of 1678 (at page 242) said there was established the rules, "first, that all bills for the purposes of taxation or containing clauses imposing a tax must originate in the house of commons and not in the house of lords," &c. The noted protest of the lords about "tacking" was because of "the joining together in a money bill things totally foreign to the methods of raising money and to the granting and qualification of the sums raised," &c.

The provisions that all "money bills" must originate in the house and could not be amended in the senate or council was in the constitutions of New Jersey, South Carolina, and Virginia. The senate could only reject, as in England could the lords. But the constitutions of Delaware, Maryland, and those of Massachusetts in 1780 and of New Hampshire of 1784 had no such restriction. The language of the two last were:

All money bills shall originate in the house of representatives, but the senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills.

The third volume of Hatsell on the British Constitution was published in 1785. On this subject he said:

The house of commons have on their part asserted, and I believe invariably preserved, the exclusive exercise of the right that bills of supply imposing burdens on the people should be the grant of the commons, and that the lords should have no other voice than as one branch of the legislature, by their assent, to give the authority of a law to the laying of those aids and taxes which the commons shall think wise and fitting to impose. (3 Hatsell, 125.)

Blackstone's Commentaries were published in 1766 and distributed here soon after publication. He said the commons would not "permit the least alteration or amendment to be made by the lords to the mode of taxing the people by a money bill." He defined "money bills" thus:

Under which appellation are included all bills by which money is directed to be raised upon the subject for any purpose whatsover. * * * (1 Blackstone's Commentaries, 169).

The lords conceded to the house of commons the exclusive right to originate bills raising revenue—that is, imposing burdens on the people—but declared:

We can not allow the disposition as well as the granting of money by act of Parliament to have been solely in the house of commons.

This was reiterated in 1702, 1708, 1719, 1733, and 1736. The house of commons avoided a decision of the issue by uniformly putting the "disposition" along with the "granting" in the same bills.

It is plain from the foregoing that "money bills" in England then meant bills by which revenue was raised and by practice simultaneously granted to the King upon terms specified therein. Whether that practice was wise and best remained an open question between the houses of lords and commons when our constitutional convention met in 1787. The members of that convention knew that history. They understood its philosophy. No subject had been so much studied in the Colonies as taxation. It had forced the Revolution upon them. The inefficient means for raising revenue provided by the Confederation had caused deep and anxious inquiry into the whole subject.

Thus informed, our constitution-makers met in May. On the 29th two propositions for defining the legislative powers were submitted. Each provided for a Senate and House of Representatives. Mr. Randolph proposed:

That each branch ought to possess the right to originate acts.—Elliott's Debates, 144.

Mr. Pinckney proposed:

All money bills of every kind shall originate in the House of Representatives and shall not be altered by the Senate.—Ibid., 146.

By that unlimited and that limited proposal the issue was fairly joined.

The convention adopted Mr. Randolph's proposition on the 31st of May. (Ibid., 153.) And so it stood till the 13th of June, when Mr. Gerry moved to add to it: "Excepting money bills, which shall originate in the first branch of the national Legislature." That was rejected by a vote of eight States to three. (Ibid., 174.) On the 13th of June the committee of the whole reported in favor of Mr. Randolph's proposition, and on the 26th of June it was unanimously adopted. (Ibid., 181–191.)

Then the question of representation had to be adjusted, and it and the "money-bill" question were submitted to a committee of one from each State. On the 5th of July they recommended the following proposition:

1. That in the first branch of the Legislature each of the States now in the Union be allowed one member for every 40,000 inhabitants of the description reported in the seventh resolution of the committee of the whole house; that each State not containing that number shall be allowed one member; that all bills for raising revenue or appropriating money and for fixing the salaries of the officers of the Government of the United States shall originate in the first branch of the Legislature, and shall not be altered or amended by the second branch; and that no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in pursuance of appropriations to be originated by the first branch.

2. That in the second branch of the Legislature each State shall have an equal vote.—Ibid., 194.

On the 6th of July the proposition as to representation was submitted to a committee, and that as to "money bills" was adopted by five States. Three voted against it and three divided their votes. (Ibid., 195, 96.) On the 16th of July a committee reported as to representation, taxation, &c. It reported as to money bills in the exact words last quoted, except that the words "of the United States" were added after "Legislature." (Ibid., 206.) On the 26th of July the whole matter went to a committee on details. They reported the clause as last quoted.

Mr. Randolph, after his proposition was rejected, moved to make the clause read:

Bills for raising money for the purpose of revenue or for appropriating the same shall originate in the House of Representatives.—Madison Papers, 1305.

On the 8th of September the clauses as now in the Constitution were substituted for the one adopted on the 6th of July. They were separated for the sake of order only.

THE HISTORY SINCE THE ADOPTION OF THE CONSTITUTION.

Frequent conflicts have arisen over bills "for raising revenue," that is, for imposing burdens upon the people; and by confounding the two false ideas are formed.

In the first Congress, in 1789, the question was upon authorizing a Secretary to report to the House plans for obtaining money. It was resisted upon the idea that the House should determine that for itself. The Senate was not concerned in that matter. In 1833 Clay offered in the Senate a bill to change the tariff. It was opposed in the Senate and defeated there, because it infringed upon the privileges of the House to originate "bills for raising revenue." Mr. Webster called it a "money bill."

In 1843 Mr. McDuffie in the Senate sought to revive the tariff act of 1833, but it failed in the Senate for the same reason. Neither of those bills ever were before the House. But in 1837 the House refused to act upon a Senate bill to issue United States Treasury notes, and in 1871 the House refused to consider the Senate bill to repeal the part of the act of 14th of July, 1871, "to reduce internal taxation" * * * which applied to income taxes. In the first two the Senate was right in respecting, and in the other two the House was right in claiming, the exclusive privilege of originating such bills; for they affected the revenue or taxation. In the debate on the last one Mr. Garfield's speech correctly stated the rule thus, namely:

The whole history of the subject leads to the inevitable conclusion "that this clause of the Constitution confers absolutely and exclusively upon the House the right to inaugurate all measures for the imposition, regulation, increase, diminution, or repeal of taxes." The question was not as to the "appropriation of money," but as to "raising revenue." Like questions have arisen since with like results. If there was a departure, it was when the House submitted to the present tariff act. In none of them was there any question as to paying out or appropriating money. So far as I am informed that question has arisen but twice before this. Once was when Mr. Knott and nine others of the Judiciary Committee, in 1881, reported against the claim of exclusive right in the House to originate a bill authorizing the purchase of land, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] and four others made a minority report. No action was taken upon the reports in that case.

The other case arose in 1855–'56. The importance of the subject justifies if it does not demand notice of its history. On the 11th of December, 1855, in the Senate, Mr. Brodhead, of Pennsylvania, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be directed to inquire into the expediency of reporting the appropriation bills for the support of the Government, or adopting other measures with a view to obtaining more speedy action on said bills.—Congressional Globe, Thirty-fourth Congress, first session, page 16.

On the 7th of January, 1856, he called it up, and, after a full review, concluded that "the only restriction upon the power of the Senate to originate bills is confined to bills for raising revenue, and we have full power to originate all others, the appropriation bills not excepted."

Mr. Clayton, of Delaware, said:

He [Mr. Brodhead] is undoubtedly right in the view which he takes of the Constitution of the United States," &c.—Ibid., 162.

Mr. Hunter, of Virginia, said:

As to the question of power I think there can be no sort of doubt. We exercise the power in almost every little pension case and in thousands of bills in which we appropriate money. The restriction in the Constitution has been decided in this body to apply only to those bills which provide for raising revenue —taxing bills, &c.—Ibid.

Mr. Toombs, of Georgia, said: "There is no question about the power of the Senate," and urged the necessity of such action. (Ibid., 162.)

Mr. Seward, of New York, said he would vote for the resolution without committing himself as to the constitutionality or expediency of the proposed action. He added:

It is true that, according to the letter of the Constitution, appropriation bills may be originated by the Senate; yet we all know that in point of fact they have come into the place of revenue bills. We make a revenue bill but once in ten or twelve years, and these appropriation bills are in fact what were intended, I suppose, by the framers of the Constitution as bills of revenue.

He then combated the movement, saying that the Senate was grasping too much power. Mr. Hamlin, of Maine, concurred with Mr. Toombs. So did Mr. Bayard, of Delaware, and he lectured Mr. Seward for his remarks about the Senate grasping power. (Ibid., 163.)

The resolution was adopted, by what vote does not appear.

On the 4th of February, 1856, Mr. Hunter, from the Senate Committee on Finance, reported this:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to prepare and report such of the general appropriation bills as they may deem expedient.

Because of Mr. Seward's objection it was laid over and came up on the 7th of February. As he was the principal opponent it is well to state his position. He said that to originate general appropriation bills in the Senate was new; that "the practice for this period of seventy years has been that all appropriation bills of that character have originated in the House of Representatives." He said that one of the "fundamental principles of freedom" in England was "that no money should be drawn from the people without the consent of their representatives;" that the commons held the sole right of raising and appropriating money, and that we adopted the same view. But he added:

Now I am not going to contend that the provision of the Constitution which I have read by its letter forbids the Senate from originating appropriation bills. Its letter clearly concedes it, and I concede also that there is an argument to be drawn from the fact that the convention discussed the proposition in both its shapes, and finally adopted the one which we now find, in which the limitation is applied only to bills originating revenue, that the convention may have considered that appropriation bills might be originated in the Senate; but against this argument is one which seems to me to be perfectly conclusive, and it is this reply: Whatever the convention-makers may have proposed, and however they may have understood the Constitution which they have framed, the fact is a stubborn one, that the Senate has never originated an appropriation bill, but that it has always conceded to the House of Representatives the origination of appropriation bills, and the House of Representatives has never conceded to the Senate the right to originate such bills, but has always insisted upon and executed that right itself.

He then, without mentioning when before such a question had arisen, proceeded to argue against the Senate's right, because "the spirit of the Constitution as ascertained from the British constitution and from the contemporaneous debates, and especially as ascertained from the practice of the Government for seventy years," he thought, "was stronger than the letter of the Constitution." (Ibid., 375.)

Mr. Hunter replied and twitted Mr. Seward with just having voted for the Senate bill "appropriating millions of dollars for French spoliations. (Ibid., 378.) Mr. Toombs remarked that while in the House he had frequently advised that the Senate originate some of the general appropriation bills. (Ibid., 379.) Mr. Sumner said that he could not agree with Mr. Hunter and Mr. Toombs. "Nor on the other hand do I assert that such exercise of power is in the strict sense unconstitutional." He thought that the compromise in making the Constitution would be best carried out by interdicting the Senate "from originating the great appropriation bills," &c.

Mr. Toucey charged him with admitting and denying the power. Mr. Sumner said he "would not go into the extreme right under the Constitution." "I did not undertake on that to express an opinion," Mr. Toucey replied. Mr. Wilson expressed no opinion on the power, but feared the country might be "alarmed at the new departure." The resolution was adopted, the bills reported and passed by the Senate, and sent to the House.

In the debate of 1871, before mentioned, the question of appropriating money was not an issue and was not alluded to except in a digression by Mr. LOGAN. Mr. CONGER asked, "Does the gentleman hold that the House only has the right to make appropriation bills?" Mr. LOGAN seemed so to think, but it was not otherwise mentioned.

Once in Mr. Garfield's speech he mentioned the debate of 1856, and quoted from Seward and cited Sumner, and said he agreed with them that—

Though the language of the clause of the Constitution does not, strictly construed, include appropriations, yet the invariable custom of Congress has construed the exclusive right of the House to originate money bills as applying to all bills for the appropriation of money to carry on the Government.

He conceded the right of the Senate to originate all other appropriation bills. He then mentioned that the Senate in 1856 originated and passed the general appropriation bills for pensions and for repair of fortifications in February, and said:

Both these bills were laid on the table of the House on the 17th of April, 1856, without having been referred or debated, thus ending the attempt of the Senate to change the uniform, unbroken custom of the Government from its foundation to the present time.

As no reply was made to this irrelevant talk when the question was on a Senate bill to repeal a tax act, as no dissent appears, cursory readers treat the members as assenting thereto. In fact the record shows that not a word of this speech was spoken. It was all printed under leave and may not have been read. I now ask its examination.

This recital seems to mean that the House then and there, in a very positive and almost contemptuous way, sought to rebuke the Senate for presumption. What is the whole truth? On that very day the House entertained and referred to appropriate committees about fifty bills from the Senate appropriating money. They were for pensions, settling title to public lands, and "an act relative to foreign coins and the coinage of cents at the Mint of the United States." And to their reference there was no objection.

The following action was taken as to the other appropriation bills from the Senate:

"An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1857, and for other purposes."

Mr JONES, of Tennessee. I think that is a Senate general appropriation bill. A bill of the same character, making appropriations for the payment of the pensions of the United States for the next fiscal year, has passed the House, come back from the Senate, and having received the signature of the Executive, has become a law. I therefore move that the bill be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

"An act making an appropriation for a new fortification for the defense of the entrance of Galveston harbor and bay, in the State of Texas."

Mr. QUITMAN. I move to refer the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. KELSEY. I understand that to be another appropriation bill originating in the Senate. I move to lay it on the table.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman from New York that this is not one of the general appropriation bills. It is for constructing a new work, and I think should properly go to the Committee on Military Affairs, as moved by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. KELSEY. I misunderstood the character of the bill. I withdraw my motion.

The bill was then referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

"An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for repairs of barracks and quarters, for the year ending the 30th of June, 1857."

Mr. KELSEY. That is another Senate appropriation bill. I move to lay it on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

"An act for improvement of navigation of Patapsco River, and to render the port of Baltimore accessible to war steamers of the United States," and

"An act for the improvement of the harbor of San Diego, California,"

Were referred to Committee on Commerce.

"An act to remit or refund duties upon goods, wares, and merchandise lost by fire."

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move to refer the bill to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I suppose that bill ought to go to the Committee on Ways and Means. It is for taking money out of the Treasury, and I think appropriately belongs to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. This bill came from the Committee on Commerce in the Senate. A similar bill is now before the Committee on Commerce of the House, and that committee had jurisdiction of the subject at the last Congress.

The motion of Mr. Washburne was agreed to.

It thus appears that, though fresh in the minds of Representatives, the remarks of Hunter, Toombs, and others had not only excited no indignation, but Mr. Jones' remark that the general appropriation bill of the Senate need not be referred because it was already law by another bill passed unchallenged, and we may fairly suppose his "therefore" applied to both the other general appropriation bills, subsequently tabled. So far as I know no other allusion was made to them.

CONCLUSIONS.

This tedious and oft-told history completed, what is the result? To state it as strongly as can be, against this power in the Senate to originate a bill appropriating money from the Treasury have stood a few great names. To secure a footing they quoted the speeches of Franklin, Mason, and others in favor of their view, notwithstanding the constitutional convention refused to agree with those speeches. They invoke the fact that a compromise was made between the large and small States, but reject the other fact that one of the express terms of that compromise was the rejection of the very badge of inferiority of the Senate which is now insisted upon. They contend that because our general appropriation bills have ever originated in the House they can not constitutionally originate otherwise. Those bills have ever been first discussed in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

By parity of reason a bill not so discussed must be unconstitutional. We have uniformly had a chaplain. By that reasoning legislation not thus sanctified by prayer would be void. The President has uniformly taken his oath of office at a particular place, and it has been administered by a particular officer. By thus reasoning he can not constitutionally be inducted into office elsewhere or by a different person. They admit that it is only in appropriations for public uses or in general appropriation bills that the Senate can not begin the work. But by what authority do they make the exception? The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] claims none. The language of the Constitution is:

No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law.

It covers all appropriations. They know that the lords could not originate such bills as have ever been originated in our Senate, and yet they seek to change the words of our Constitution to make our practice conform to that of Parliament in England. They insist that the law of Parliament applicable to supply bills, which simultaneously raised revenue and appropriated money, shall control us, who never join those things in the same bill. They ask us to put our Senate, which has ever had a large share in all appropriations of money, upon the footing of the lords, whose duty in that regard is only perfunctory. True, they have the power wholly to reject such bills. So has the King or Queen the power to veto. But when has either power been exercised? They struggle to bind us by English precedents, when they know that our system is a discarding of English precedents; that the constitutional powers and checks and limitations in our system are not to be found in musty tomes of history, but are crystallized in living words on the parchment roll of 1787.

For the argument on the other side recall the history of the constitutional convention, and the struggle of giant minds pro and con on this subject. The battle ended, the proposed clause "and for fixing the salaries of the officers of the Government" was missing. The words "or appropriating money" had been killed. "And shall not be altered or amended by the Senate" had been driven from the field. All that was alive of the first clause of the proposed compromise as to this power was, "All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills." The second clause was by its side, but maimed. It still read, "No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law;" but the proposed qualification, "Which shall originate in the House of Representatives," had been deliberately slaughtered.

The two clauses were subsequently separated by the committee on style, and thus left as living witnesses of the fairness, stubbornness, and conclusiveness of the contest.

Again, I say, suppose this a question between two litigants in court; suppose the one insisting upon the plain words of the contract and the other upon interpreting it as if it contained other words which had been purposely left out by mutual consent. Could the court patiently listen to the latter? How is the case different when the high contracting parties were the people and the States? What right have their servants, Representatives and Senators, to quarrel over the power of attorney made for their control and to attempt to reingraft upon it words which have been deliberately cut off? There was no misunderstanding about the matter. "Money bills" was a term as familiar to the ears of our constitution-makers "as the sound of household words."

The latest made constitutions of the thirteen States were those of Massachusetts and New Hampshire, which declared that—

All money bills shall originate in the house of representatives; but the senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills.

As if to avoid any misconstruction from the use of the British words which designated bills which simultaneously raised supplies and appropriated money, the words "money bills" were changed to "bills for raising revenue," and a separate provision was made for "bills appropriating money."

The resolution of 1678 did not suit our fathers. They considered not what was "revenue to the King," for they had no king to whom to "give aids" and "supplies" and then in the same bills limit his use of them.

For many of these facts I am indebted to the luminous opinion of the supreme court of Massachusetts on this exact question, decided in 1878, not in ordinary course of litigation where a law was attacked for unconstitutionality. Then the court would have been bound to give the benefit of all doubts in favor of the law. But it was upon a question submitted to the court by the General Assembly before enacting a law. Even under their constitution, having "money bills" in place of "bills for raising revenue," that court decided that—

The exclusive privilege of the House of Representatives, under the constitution of the Commonwealth, to originate money bills is limited to bills that transfer money or property from the people to the State, and does not include bills that appropriate money from the treasury of the Commonwealth to particular uses of the government or bestow it upon individuals or corporations.—126 Massachusetts Reports, 557.

It would be so held in England if the house of commons would separate the bills of "supplies" from the bills of "disposition."

Against this array the minority report of the Judiciary Committee in 1881, before mentioned, presented certain definitions of revenue thus:

Webster defines revenue to be "the annual produce of taxes which a nation or state collects and receives into the treasury for public use."

* * * * * * *

Worcester defines revenue to be "the income of a nation or state derived from duties, taxes, and other sources for the payment of the national expenses."

* * * * * * *

And it cited the reference in Worcester to Brande's Dictionary of Science and Art as authority, saying,

Than which there is none higher in the language. Brande defines revenue to be "the name given to the incomes of a state derived from the customs, excises, taxation, and other sources, and appropriated to the payment of the national expenses." (Brande's Dictionary, volume 3, page 269.)

The report added:

This definition is approved in the Imperial Dictionary, the present standard dictionary of Great Britain, in the following words: "Revenue is the annual income of a state, derived from taxation, customs, excises, and other sources, and appropriated to the payment of the national expenses."

They were quoted also by the author of that minority report, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD], in his speech to-day, and the conclusion deduced therefrom in the report and speech was, "Money, therefore, to become revenue to the King must have been granted to him by the commons."

Definitions in dictionaries are seldom accurate in every particular. The same word frequently means different things in different places. "Cherries" in a gun-factory are tools by which bullet-molds are hollowed out, but not so at a fruit stand. A homely woman in England is a domestic woman; but here she is an ugly person, without regard to her domestic qualities. Brande's Dictionary of Arts and Sciences, published in 1842, and Ogilvie's Imperial Dictionary, published in 1850, are both English works.

It may be true that the income of Great Britain does not become revenue to the King until granted to him by the commons without affecting the meaning of the word "revenue" in the phrase "bills for raising revenue."

But apart from all this, neither of the English dictionaries quoted say that the income of the nation is not revenue until appropriated. They simply say it is income, and tell how it is derived and for what it is used. To illustrate: Webster defines "trousers," as "a garment worn by males," &c. By like argument that garment can not be trousers until worn, and that by a male.

Last on this point, Webster's Dictionary, published in 1840, and Worcester's Universal Dictionary, published in 1846—both American—both carefully avoid the coupling of "appropriation" with the definition of revenue, and confine it to simply income "for public use" or "for the payment of national expenses." And these definitions are correct in that regard even by English authority. Revenue is defined by Blackstone as—

A portion which each subject contributes of his property in order to secure the remainder.—1 Blackstone's Commentaries, 281.

Afterward he told of the King's revenue, and said:

How these immense sums are appropriated is next to be considered.—Ibid., 325.

That was the English definition of "revenue" when our Constitution was made. In May's Constitutional History of England, published in 1861–'62, opposite the marginal "other sources of revenue" is—

But the King enjoyed other sources of income independent of parliamentary control.

Surely they were revenue to the King without appropriation by the house of commons.

No support to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] comes from the citation of President Monroe's veto of the Cumberland road bill, in March, 1822. So far from discussing in that message any question kin to the one now in debate, he was antagonizing a bill which originated in the House of Representatives. He was not discussing where the bill should originate, but arguing that because taxes, &c., could only be raised by Congress for specific purposes, the money so put into the Treasury ought to be confined to those objects. He thought that bill a departure from that principle.

So much for the question of power in the Senate.

SHALL THE SENATE EXERCISE ITS POWER?

The power is indisputable. In many cases it is now used. Whether its use should be more extended I can not decide. Let us recall some of the reasons urged in 1856. Mr. Brodhead said that by a division of the appropriation bills between the two Houses they would be sooner ready and better considered. He said:

The evils to which I allude are well known. * * * I allude to the protracted sessions, and especially to the night sessions, during which the appropriation bills are usually considered, and some forty or fifty millions of dollars are voted away; and voted, too, during the absence of the best and most experienced Senators, who, in consequence of physical exhaustion, are not able to remain in the Senate Chamber during the midnight hours. It is desirable to prevent midnight sessions, also, because it is known that scenes sometimes occur in those night sessions which a sense of delicacy prevents me from describing. I may, however, say with great truth, that if at such times Congress is not in possession of the jobbers, both Houses are at least besieged by them.—Congressional Globe, first session Thirty-fourth Congress, page 160.

Mr. Toombs, in the same line, said:

There is no time for examining them. Within the last three years, I have seen in this Chamber a naval appropriation bill, appropriating $8,000,000, passed without even being read. It was passed on the morning of the 4th of March, and the reason for not reading it as given by Senators on this floor was, that if we attempted to read the bill it would be lost. We were told that we had but so many minutes remaining; that it would take so many hours to read the bill, and that if you read it it could not be passed.—Ibid., 379.

He also pointed out the fact that propositions which had been deliberately rejected by themselves, at their closing hours, came on as amendments and crept through, and said that practically the appropriations about which there was any room for disagreement were made not by the full House and Senate, but by heads of Departments or from men on conference committees, in a way and at a time when submission was the only escape from stopping the wheels of the Government. Has all that passed away, or is Congress still subject to such censure?

The appropriation bills must be passed. They ought to be fully discussed, though the time so consumed crowds out other business. Some think that if part of them were originated in the Senate that body need not adjourn for half its time in the beginning of each session, nor work so late at night at the end of each session to accomplish its task. Some think that were part of these bills first considered by the Senate the debates there would render unnecessary so long debates on them here. Some think that such an arrangement would give time to consider claims of meritorious persons who are worn out by delays, and time to inaugurate great reforms so needed by our overtaxed constituents.

I offer no advice. It would be unbecoming in me to do so. But I may say I do not foresee the danger in such a course so glowingly depicted by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD]. Our fathers had no such fears. They learned from British history, as epitomized in Blackstone's Commentaries, that the reason for the jealousy of the house of commons toward the house of lords was because lords could be made by the King at his pleasure, were a permanent body, and supposed to be under the influence of the Crown. We abolished king and lords. Our executive has naught to do with the creation or continuance of Senators. He is more likely to be subservient to that body than it to him. Its members change in a different way, and not all at once, but as regularly as do the Representatives. Though not elected directly by the people, they are by the people's representatives and senators in the State Legislatures. Though their terms of office be longer, they have a larger constituency to please and greater individual responsibility.

I repeat, our fathers had so such fear of the Senate. They thought it was enough that the Senate should not work on "bills for raising revenue," that is, imposing burdens on the people, until this House had laid the foundation. They feared not the Senate, and therefore allowed their co-operation in legislation. More, by removing from it the disability which the commons put upon the lords by divorcing bills of supply and bills of appropriation, they invoked their experience and conservatism in legislation with no limit but acting secondarily as to matters of taxation. Many of them, as Washington, Madison, Roger Sherman, Oliver Ellsworth, James Wilson, and Gouverneur Morris (the supreme court of Massachusetts said), thought it unwise to impose any restriction on the legislative power of the Senate.

So far from being afraid of the Senate, our fathers gave them the right to decrease or increase appropriations by amendment. How is the danger greater in allowing it to originate such bills than to refuse to pass them unless the House of Representatives will agree to their amendments? So far from fearing the Senate, our fathers gave it the sole and exclusive right to advise and consent to treaties. I say nothing now as to the extent of that power. But whether limited or unlimited by other parts of the Constitution, surely it may directly or indirectly affect the public purse far more than could be done by their originating appropriation bills, which could not become laws without the consent of the House of Representatives. If all were agreed in this, much good would come even if no change in practice occurred. It will be good for these brothers under the Constitution to "dwell together in unity." It will be a happy day when each, while steadfastly insisting upon its own, shall seek to add to the other's dignity and importance; not for its own aggrandizement, but impelled by a generous purpose to enable both to better serve their common country. No longer jarring and contending, their conjoint glory will be the pride of that country and the admiration of the world.

Mr. WILLIS. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED. I wish the gentleman would make it fifteen minutes, though I may not occupy more than ten.

Mr. WILLIS. I have given away all the rest of my time. I am sorry I did not know the gentleman's wishes earlier.

Mr. REED. I want sufficient opportunity to state my position clearly upon this question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine is entitled to the floor for ten minutes.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, the clause in the Constitution which is now to be made the subject of interpretation seems to be very simple. It says:

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives.

That language is plain, simple, and easy to be understood. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] can give it any other meaning he must do it by reference to the history of its time and of its enactment. If, then, I can prove conclusively by the history of its enactment that it has no such meaning as he undertakes to give it, I think that all his eloquent discourse will fall to the ground, even though it be much sustained by applause of those who admire eloquence in diction more than they do soundness in reasoning.

The contest which resulted in the wording of this particular clause was not a contest between the commons of England on the one side and the house of lords and the Sovereign of England on the other. Any man who undertakes to view that sentence in the light solely of English history will get as badly misled as is the gentleman from Ohio. This is no case of power wrested from a King. To-day the laws of England bear this preface: "Be it enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent," &c. These words embalm the old fact, the spirit of which perished long before our Constitution was adopted.

We have never had to wrest power from an arbitrary ruler. On the contrary, the sources of our power were the States and their citizens, and its bounds were settled by the constitutional convention. The fight in that constitutional convention was not a fight between an arbitrary ruler and the people to be governed. It was a contest between States. It arose from the fact that we were to establish a nation composed of States; and the contest was to preserve the rights of the States as against the rights of the nation; and, therefore, when the proposition was originally reported by the committee of detail to the constitutional convention August 5, 1787, it was introduced in this form, as will be found on page 377 of the Madison Papers, Elliott's edition of 1845:

All bills for raising or appropriating money * * * shall originate in the House of Representatives, &c.

It covered not only the raising of revenue but the appropriating of the same. When the matter came up later in the same month Mr. Randolph moved that the clause be altered so as to read:

Bills for raising money for the purpose of revenue or for appropriating the same shall originate in the House of Representatives.

That proposition as originally stated, together with the amendment proposed by Mr. Randolph, was defeated by a vote, if my recollection serves me, of nearly two to one. This was August 13, 1787, and the exact vote was 7 to 4. The question came up in that form more than once, and every time it came up it was defeated; and it was defeated upon the plain ground that the States demanded that the Senate, where they were peculiarly represented, should have the same power as the House of Representatives.

In September, however, on the 5th day, the proposition assumed this form:

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives

And on page 511 of Madison Papers will be found a statement by Mr. Gouverneur Morris as to that very clause: "It had been agreed to in the committee on the ground of compromise." When the final vote was taken, September 8, the vote was 9 to 2 in favor of the compromise. An examination of the notes on pages 529 and 514 will show that I am correct. In other words, the whole history of this clause shows that the construction for which the gentleman from Ohio contends was put into plain language, that bills for raising money and also for expending money should originate in the House. That was voted down repeatedly. Then as a matter of compromise it was determined that bills raising revenue, raising money for the expenses of the Government, should originate in the House, and that left all other bills, those expending moneys, to originate either in the Senate or in the House as either body shall move.

And now the gentleman from Ohio comes here and says that notwithstanding this for which he contends was defeated time and again, notwithstanding the fact that what was adopted was called a compromise, and history shows it to have been a compromise, he comes here and declares that by some juggle of words this thing which had been repeatedly defeated by men who understood their position as thoroughly at least as he does was carried through and this constitutional convention passed what they never meant to pass, and that without a single word indicating any change of disposition!

It does seem to me that this matter is a demonstration, and that my friend from Ohio is carrying his affection for the English system of laws a trifle too far. For my part I have not seen anything in the history of the House of Representatives since I have been a member of it that should make me feel inclined to insist on more bills originating in it. We are to-day so clogged with the business which legitimately belongs to us that under our present system of working we absolutely can do nothing. If, then, we should undertake to shut off the Senate from what is their plain constitutional right, as the history of this legislation shows, as the plain language of the Constitution shows, I am afraid we should exhibit to the country a still worse instance of ineffectuality than we do to-day. [Applause on the Republican side of the House.]

Mr. WILLIS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. DIBBLE. It appears to me, Mr. Speaker, that the Constitution itself settles this question incidentally when, in article 1, section 7, it says:

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; and in section 8 it begins by saying:

The Congress shall have power, &c.;

and in the same section, under the head of raising and supporting armies under this power of Congress, it declares:

No appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years.

Therefore the very language of the Constitution makes the distinction between "raising revenue," which it applies to the House, and the "appropriation of money," which it puts under the power of Congress.

But the rules of this House, which have been built up by the parliamentary experience of members of the House from time to time, in several instances make the same distinction. In Rule XI, paragraph 2, it gives to the Committee on Ways and Means subjects relating "to the revenues and the bonded debt of the United States."

In the next paragraph it sends to the Committee on Appropriations, subjects relating "to appropriation of the revenue for the support of the Government"—

Thus defining, in the powers and duties of the committees of this House, the distinction between "revenue" and "appropriation of revenue."

A still more marked instance of this distinction in the rules of the House is found in the thirteenth rule:

There shall be three calendars of business reported from committees, namely: First. A calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to which shall be referred bills raising revenue—

The very language of the Constitution—

general appropriation bills—

As a distinct subject—and bills of a public character, directly or indirectly appropriating money or property—

As another distinct subject. And under Rule XXI, paragraph 6, speaking of bills, we find:

Upon all general appropriation and revenue bills * * * the yeas and nays shall be taken, &c.

Therefore we have not only the argument from the direct action of the convention, we have not only the argument from the Constitution, but we have, in the parliamentary rules which govern this House; the very distinction raised between the two terms, the language of the distinction following very much the language of the Constitution.

I would be one of those, Mr. Speaker, to assert for this House its full prerogative in relation to "bills raising revenue," which impose direct burdens on the people, and to maintain that the direct representatives of the people are the only ones to originate such bills; but when it comes to the disbursement of the moneys of the people, the co-ordinate legislative branch of this Government—the Senate of the United States—representing the States in their collective capacity, has reasonably under the structure of our Government as much right to suggest the way in which that money shall be spent for the public good as this House, and are not to be put in the same category as the house of lords, which is a body of hereditary nobility in England.

Mr. WILLIS. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG].

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, the principles involved in the question presented by the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio have already been so clearly set forth that I rise now only for the purpose of citing an authority which seems to me to be conclusive in regard to the matter. The constitution of Massachusetts, which was framed some seven or eight years before the Constitution of the United States was adopted, contains a similar constitutional provision with this exception: The language of the Massachusetts constitution is:

All money bills shall originate in the house of representatives.

The language of the Constitution of the United States is:

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives.

The gentleman from Ohio has suggested that under the British constitution the term "money bill" embraces bills for raising revenue, bills granting a supply, and bills making an appropriation. While I am not sure I agree to that definition, it undoubtedly is true that the term "money bill" is a much broader term than the limited term used in our Federal Constitution, namely, a bill "raising revenue."

And yet it has been decided by the supreme court of Massachusetts, the opinion having been delivered by Chief-Justice Gray, now sitting upon the Supreme Bench of the United States, that even under that broad term "money bill" an appropriation may originate in the Senate. Questions were put by the Legislature of Massachusetts to the supreme court of that State as follows: First—

Can the senate, under the provisions of chapter 1, section 3, article 7 of the constitution, originate a bill or resolve appropriating money from the treasury of the Commonwealth?

The court answers:

The senate can, under the provisions of chapter 1, section 3, article 7 of the constitution, originate a bill or resolve appropriating money from the treasury of the Commonwealth.

The second question—

Can the senate under said provision originate a bill or resolve in any way involving, directly or indirectly, the expenditure of money from the treasury, or imposing any burden or charge thereon?

The answer is:

The senate can, under those provisions, originate a bill or resolve involving, directly or indirectly, the expenditure of money from the treasury, or imposing a burden or charge thereon.

The third question—

Is the power to originate a bill appropriating money from the State treasury limited by the constitution to the house of representatives, or does it reside in both branches of the Legislature?

The answer is:

The power to originate a bill appropriating money from the State treasury is not limited by the constitution to the house of representatives, but resides in both branches of the Legislature.

This opinion contains a most elaborate review of the whole question. It is a very carefully prepared and thorough decision, embodying a review of the English and American precedents. The court arrives at a conclusion different from that which has been reached by the gentleman from Ohio, and claims that even under the British constitution, which is unwritten and contains no written limitation, the power of appropriating money is not limited to the house of commons.

Mr. HURD. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow me a moment?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. HURD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if it is not true that the point of the decision in the Massachusetts case to which he refers was not that it had not been settled in England that this power to originate appropriation bills was vested in the house of commons at the time of the framing of the constitution of Massachusetts?

Mr. LONG. In answer to the gentleman from Ohio as to the doctrine prevailing on this point at the time our constitution was framed our supreme court say:

The result of the review of this branch of the subject is that it can not be considered to have been settled in England before 1780, when the constitution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts was adopted, that the appropriation to particular objects of moneys in the treasury or exchequer of the Sovereign belonged exclusively to the house of commons, and that bills for such appropriations must originate in the house.

That opinion is so conclusive that I could not fail to cite it in this connection. I will say that it is contained in volume 126 of the Massachusetts Reports. It limits the restriction on the senate strictly to bills raising revenue; that is, bills "that transfer money or property from the people to the State."

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow me to remark that that opinion is quoted with approval by two-thirds of the Judiciary Committee of the Forty-sixth Congress in the report which I have caused to be read here?

Mr. LONG. I will call attention again to the fact that the language of the Massachusetts constitution is much broader than the language of the Constitution of the United States. In the constitution of Massachusetts the language is "all money bills," while in the Constitution of the United States it is, as I have already said, "bills for raising revenue." When, therefore, the gentleman from Ohio suggests that "money bills," under the British interpretation, were at one time construed to embrace, first, bills granting supplies; second, bills making appropriations; and third, bills for raising revenue, I would suggest that, if that be true, it is certainly a little remarkable that our fathers in framing the Constitution of this country should have limited the restriction to one of these three classes, namely, to "bills for raising revenue." It was equivalent to saying that there was to be no restriction as to "appropriation bills" or "bills granting supplies."

Mr. WILLIS. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT].

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, pride and duty go hand in hand to carry us along with the gentleman from Ohio when he appeals to us to guard jealously the prerogatives of this House. Certainly this is a duty we owe to ourselves and the country. But we are also to support the Constitution of the United States, and the just powers, under that instrument, of every department and every branch of the Government.

The question raised by the resolutions before the House resolves itself into this: What is the meaning of the section of the Constitution which provides that all bills for raising revenue must originate in the House of Representatives and may be amended in the Senate? The subject has been clouded by much learning. In the ten minutes given me I could not enter into that field even if I had anticipated this debate which has been so suddenly sprung upon the House; but after all, the real question lies within a very narrow compass. That question is, what did the framers of the Constitution mean when they rejected the phrase, "All money bills shall originate in the House," and substitute in lieu of it, "All bills raising revenue shall originate in the House?"

I admit the construction placed upon the words "money bills" by the gentleman from Ohio, so far as the British constitution is concerned. I admit further that those who framed the Constitution of the United States were familiar with what is called the British constitution, and that they knew the meaning of the words there employed; and this is where I ground my argument.

Every lawyer knows that when a constitutional convention rejects a phrase, the meaning of which is well known and clearly defined by an unvarying line of precedents and in its stead uses a new and a different phrase, it does this solely because it means to accomplish a different thing, a different purpose from that implied by the old and well-known phrase. This presumption becomes absolutely conclusive when the new phrase on its face is clearly narrower and more restricted in meaning than the rejected phrase. I therefore admit to its fullest extent the argument of the gentleman from Ohio, that in the British constitution "money bills" meant bills not only taxing the people but bills appropriating money. I need not look into the history of our Constitution or examine what was done in the convention. It is sufficient for me to assert the proposition, that the gentleman from Ohio is right as to the meaning of the words "money bills" in the British constitution, that the framers of the Constitution knew the meaning of the words there used, and that they used different and narrower words, to bring us to the conclusion that they meant to confer upon the House of Representatives powers different from those conferred by the words "money bills" upon the house of commons in England.

But, Mr. Speaker, the question becomes plainer still when we look at what actually occurred in the convention. This proposition was considered a long time. It was first up on the 29th day of May. The proposition originally was, which was adopted by the Committee of the Whole:

All money bills—

Using the English term—

shall originate in the House of Delegates—

Meaning this House—

and shall not be altered by the Senate.

There we have two propositions. Taken together, they confer upon the House identically the power that existed in the house of commons in England.

The Senate, like the house of lords, was not to be allowed to originate or amend "money bills."

That was in May. The question was up again and again—next on the 31st of the same month; next on the 2d July; next on the 16th July; next on the 26th July. Long before the provision was perfected into its present shape the clause forbidding the Senate to amend was stricken out and the power to amend was expressly given to it. This indicates a clear intention not to be guided by the analogy of the British constitution; not to erect the Senate into a body as insignificant as the house of lords.

Then in August, on the 15th of that month, Mr. Strong made a proposition which is substantially the same as that now embraced in the Constitution. That was considered until the 15th day of September—twenty days. Then came in from the committee the provision we now have, which differs in two respects from the original proposition. That original proposition, as I stated, was to confer upon the House of Representatives precisely the same power the house of commons had in England, and which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] says it had. But the proposition as finally adopted differed in two respects. In the first place, instead of using the words "money bills," the words were inserted "bills raising revenue." Will any lawyer tell me that that convention by striking out the words "money bills" and inserting the words "bills raising revenue" meant nothing? Can the gentleman from Ohio argue that the framers meant nothing whatever when they discarded a phrase the meaning of which was well known, and which had been decided upon time after time, not only in the English Parliament but in similar bodies in the United States.

Certainly every lawyer is bound to say that if the words are fairly capable of a different meaning from the words "money bills," then by the use of the different words the framers of the Constitution meant a different thing.

The gentleman's argument, Mr. Speaker, is based upon the construction of phrases in the British constitution and upon English precedents and nothing else whatever, except indeed he speaks of the practice under our Constitution of the United States, the precedents that have been set here. He says that never from the beginning of the Government down to the present time has a general appropriation bill originated in the Senate and passed the House. I admit it. He says that constitutes a line of precedents—precedents that ought to prevail in the construction of the Constitution. If that be so, then I ask him the question, are not other things done, other acts had on the very same subject by the very same Congress—acts much more frequent than the passage of general appropriation bills, running through all the history of the Government down to the present time—are they not also precedents?

Sir, there has never yet been a regular session of Congress at which the Senate did not originate bills appropriating money—bills which passed the Senate, were concurred in by the House, and approved by the President. The Speaker's table is piled up with them now, and some have already passed at this session as others passed at last session.

It will not do to say these bills were for special purposes, or that they were limited in amount. There is no difference in principle, and there can be none, between the power to make a special appropriation and the power to pass a general appropriation bill. There is not a line, or a word, or a syllable in the Constitution on which such a distinction can be founded. There is not a hint in the whole Constitution on which even the ingenuity of the gentleman from Ohio can found an argument for such a distinction. I defy any gentleman to show such a distinction, and I defy him to show that there is any difference between the power of the Senate to originate a bill appropriating $100 and its power to originate a bill appropriating a hundred million of dollars.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER). The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. WILLIS. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JOHN S. WISE].

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the proposition advanced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] involves in the first place an idea which emasculates utterly the Senate of the United States, and that in the next place it involves the proposition that money raised by the Government does not become revenue until it has not only been collected but spent.

Now, it would be a convenient theory, and I wish it could be put in practice in this House at this late stage of this Congress, to establish the proposition that money does not become revenue until it is collected and spent. But as I understand the provision of the Constitution, it restricts the origination of bills for raising revenue to the House. Its object was to confine the power of taxation and the burden of taxation to that body, which came directly from the people, was presumed to know their wishes as to bearing taxes, and whose members are to be returned in a short time. On the other hand, the expenditure of the money of the Government may well be made by the Senate. According to the theory of our Government, the Senate is the body of wisdom, of prudence, of sagacity; and in the disbursement of the revenues of this Government it is presumed to have the good of the people at heart and to understand how to spend the money, although it may not be freshly informed as to how to raise it. And that is the sole distinction.

The original draught of the Constitution contained a provision which not only confined the power of originating bills for raising revenue to the House of Representatives, but also the power of originating appropriation bills. No two things could be more distinct than the power to raise money and the power to spend money. The two ideas and expressions are antithetical. In the Constitution as adopted the provision limiting the origin of revenue bills to the House was retained, and the provision restricting the origin of appropriation bills to the Senate was stricken out.

It was stricken out from the original proposition, which confined to this House the power to make appropriations, and to-day the words are nowhere to be found in the Constitution, so that the power to raise revenue is the only power which is confined to this House. The gentleman from Ohio has seen fit to cite in this connection authorities and examples from England. I wish to say to him that we are not in England, and to remind him that some of his English authorities and precedents are not always apposite or applicable here, as we have learned from experience in a somewhat celebrated case. They sometimes work in a way in which they were not intended to work when cited.

At the time of those authorities which he cites there was in England no such spirit as that which prevails here, and there was no such power behind the lords and commons of England as there is behind the Congress of the United States—the sovereign majesty of the people of the United States, not Her Sovereign Majesty the Queen.

To say that at a time like this, when the greatest danger which is impending over this country is the misuse of the power of the franchise, at the moment when this great structure of American liberty, raised by the people and for the people, is in danger from the ignorance of the people, to tell us at such a time that the great co-ordinate body of this Government—the Senate of the United States—can not see the danger, can not realize the destructive influences that are abroad and take a step which will prevent this Government from falling to pieces through the ignorance of those who exercise the franchise, merely because it takes money to carry out the measure, is to tell us that the Senate of the United States is not a co-ordinate power of this Government, with equal dignity and equal rights and equal responsibilities with this House in devising measures of public safety, and that it is a senile and emasculated body, sitting and waiting simply to record the will of this sovereign body—the House of Representatives; for the measures which may be originated by either body of Congress which do not involve the appropriation of money to give them vitality and efficacy may be enumerated upon the fingers of one hand.

I do not believe, sir, that that is the theory of our Government; I do not believe that it was the purpose of the framers of the Constitution to put the whole power of legislation in the hands of the House of Representatives, as such a construction would put it. I do not believe that the construction which takes the word "revenue," which means coming back into the Treasury, and makes it mean going out of the Treasury, is the construction which was intended by the fathers and framers of the Constitution.

And, Mr. Chairman, I feel a peculiar solicitude at this time that no such construction should prevail, because I look upon the resolution offered by the gentleman from Ohio, although in form it is merely a question of privilege, as a direct attack upon what I conceive to be the most important measure before this Congress, as it sends the question to a committee whose chairman is, I learn, hostile to the educational bill. Sir, I come from a portion of this country in which 4,700,000 out of 6,200,000 illiterates reside. I come from a land that hungers and thirsts for knowledge, a land where the franchise has been poured out like water, but where intelligence and education of the masses has been withheld, until of late years, as if it were a distilled poison, dangerous and powerful as aconite. I come from a region of country where every one of our constituents, regardless of party, come forth, whenever their Representatives appear, exclaiming, with almost religious fervor:

'Tis a thing we long to know,
Oft it causes anxious thought;
Will you pass this bill, or no?
Is it ours, or is it not?

I come from a people who demand the passage of this measure, who believe that it has been constitutionally originated, and that it is the purpose of this Congress to pass it; their expectation is that it will be passed; and I say to the gentleman from Ohio that it will not do in dealing with a hungering and thirsting people, who realize the dangers of ignorance, who pant for knowledge, to tell them when they have asked for bread and you have given them a stone—it will not do to tell them that you would have passed the bill but for the fact that it had originated in the Senate, and therefore you did not have the power to pass it. It is the pledge of every party that this bill shall be passed. It is the prayer of everybody that it shall be; and I say to the gentleman, now and here, let him, if he will, assume the responsibility of defeating the passage of this measure by such a technicality as this, and let the responsibility rest where it ought to rest, for the people will rise in their wrath and scout the idea that the Senate of the United States is the powerless nonentity which his contention implies, lying bound hand and foot at the mercy of the House of Representatives, unable to respond to the great needs of the nation, unable to avert the greatest of national calamities, unable to do aught affirmatively, and but a negative power, until this House shall see fit to originate measures.

On measures like this, responding to a great need, the people are wise and vigilant. It will not do to tell them that it failed by technicalities. The passage of this resolution means delay, and delay at this late hour means death. The people know where and with whom the bill originated. They know where and with whom it rests upon its passage. They will not be deceived by the pretense that this vital stab is but an indifferent technical inquiry. If death follows, it will be known of all men where and by whom and why the fatal blow was struck, and I repeat that the responsibility shall rest where it belongs.

Mr. WILLIS resumed the floor and yielded three minutes of his remaining time to Mr. COX, of North Carolina.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, no provision of the Constitution has been more fully and elaborately discussed than the seventh section of the first article. I agree with much that has been said by my distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. HURD], but believing that the effect of the passage of his resolution at this time will imperil the consideration of the Blair educational bill, I can not give it my support. I am somewhat in the condition of the judges described in Don Quixote who appealed to Sancho Panza to relieve them from their dilemma, and which is as follows:

A certain manor was divided by a large river, over which there was a bridge, at the end of which there was a gibbet and a hall, in which five judges presided to execute the law. A law was enacted as follows:

Wosoever shall pass over this bridge must first swear whence he comes and whither he goes. If he swears the truth he shall be allowed to pass; but if he forswear himself, he shall die upon the gallows without mercy or respite.

It happened that one man's oath being taken he swore he was going to cross the bridge to be hanged on the gibbet, which was his only errand. Therefore if he swore to the truth he should be permitted to pass freely; if to a lie, he should be hanged. Now the question was presented, what should be done? Sancho decided that the half which swore the truth should have been permitted to pass, and that which swore a lie be hanged. But as the reason for condemning and acquitting the culprit were equally balanced, they should let him freely pass; for it is always more laudable to do good than harm.

Now the proposition of the gentleman has an admirable provision in so far as it provides for the preservation of the prerogatives of this House. But as this character of bill has precedents in its favor, notably in the appropriation of the proceeds of the public lands by bills introduced in the Senate in 1832 and 1835, and as the circumstances that precipitated the mass of illiterate voters upon us can never occur again, and in view of the fact this illiteracy jeopardizes the perpetuity of our free institutions and hangs as an appalling cloud over some of the fairest portions of this land, I will resolve the doubt in favor of education. I have not had time during this discussion to fully examine this measure. It may be that the Senate can originate such bills. They have often exercised such authority; but, as is said by the gentleman from Ohio, that is not conclusive. I do not altogether agree with precedents he has quoted from the English Parliaments. One of these bodies is composed of an order of nobility, and while our Constitution provides for a dual body, yet the same reasons for this similarity did not conduce to their similar features. If the proposition was clear that the Blair bill was an infringement of the rights of the people as represented in this body I would be one of the last to support it, whatever benefits might result from an appropriation. But while the question may be involved in uncertainty and all the points now urged can be fully considered when the bill shall be brought forward for final determination, I am constrained to oppose the resolution now before the House in view of the great good that will arise from a general diffusion of intelligence.

Mr. HURD. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have fourteen minutes remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER). The gentleman has that time.

Mr. HURD. I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I will frankly say that if I were now called upon to vote on the question whether the Senate can originate an appropriation bill, I do not know upon which side of the question I should vote. The proposition now presented is simply whether this very grave and serious question should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for its report.

I do not propose to discuss the question upon the merits. I have a right to say it is a serious question, when by looking at the Congressional Globe I find that on the 7th February, 1856, the following resolution was pending in the United States Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to prepare and report such of the general appropriation bills as they may deem expedient.

The question which it is now proposed to refer to the Judiciary Committee of this House was directly involved in that resolution. I find, sir, that in the discussion upon that resolution an eminent Senator from the State of New York, William H. Seward, used this language:

Whatever the convention may have purposed and however they may have understood the Constitution which they have framed, the fact is a stubborn one that the Senate has never originated an appropriation bill, but that it has always conceded to the House of Representatives the origination of appropriation bills, and the House of Representatives has never conceded to the Senate the right to originate such bills, but has always insisted upon and executed that right itself. This could not have been accidental; it was therefore designed. The design and purpose were those of the contemporaries of the Constitution itself; and it evinces their understanding of the subject, which was that bills of a general nature for appropriating the public money or for laying taxes or burdens on the people, direct or indirect in their operation, belonged to the province of the House of Representatives.

A little further on this eminent Senator said:

Sir, if this power is confined to the raising of revenue, and does not include the expending of it, then the right which was reserved to the House of Representatives is useless, because, practically, we provide for raising revenue so seldom that the exclusion of the Senate from it is of no real value to the country.

Again, this same distinguished Senator used the following language:

I think, then, sir, that I stand upon the principles and the spirit of the Constitution of the United States in advising against the instruction which is asked for by the Committee on Finance.

Further on in this debate I find the following language used by another distinguished Senator, Hon. Charles Sumner, from the State of Massachusetts:

And this brings me, sir, to the precise meaning of the provision. The seeming indefiniteness of the term "bills for raising revenue" may perhaps furnish apology for the present effort. It may be argued that while the Senate is placed under certain restrictions, it may nevertheless originate "appropriation bills." This, of course, is a question of interpretation. Does this interdict upon the Senate extend to the bills by which money is appropriated to the support of the Government as well as to those bills by which it is directly obtained? Are appropriation bills excluded under the term "bills for raising revenue?" Now, I can not join with the opinions so confidently expressed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Hunter] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Toombs] that it was clearly the intention of the Constitution to concede to the Senate the power of originating all appropriation bills.

* * * * * * *

I am not insensible to the public convenience which has been pressed in this debate; but permit me to say that should this convenience require the proposed departure from our standing policy, you will be wise, sir, if you hearken to the counsels of the Senator from New York, and refrain from any innovation, unless assured of the consent and co-operation of the House.

Mr. Sumner was then asked by Mr. Toucey whether he denied the constitutional power of the Senate to originate appropriation bills. I read Mr. Sumner's reply:

Mr. SUMNER. Will the Senator allow me to say that my statement was that I regarded it as a departure from the spirit of the Constitution?

Mr. TOUCEY. I would beg leave to ask whether he denies the power of the Senate to originate appropriation bills?

Mr. SUMNER. I have already said that the language in the Constitution seemed to me indefinite. It is not on the face of it clear. I am driven therefore to contemporaneous evidence in order to seek its precise meaning; and referring to that, my conclusion is that according to the spirit of the Constitution it does not belong to this body to originate appropriation bills.

Mr. Speaker, as I said at the outset, I do not know how I should vote upon this question. I have simply called attention to the utterances of these distinguished Senators, one of them at least an eminent lawyer, for the purpose of impressing upon this House that this is certainly a most serious question, and we should not hastily take action upon it.

I believe it is entirely proper this resolution should go to the Committee on the Judiciary, that from that committee we should have a report. Doubtless diverse views will come before the House. Let these reports be discussed, let these views be examined. It is not a question to be put aside lightly. It is in my judgment one of the most serious questions that can come before Congress.

Mr. HURD. Mr. Speaker, in the debate in the United States Senate on this very same subject in 1832, Mr. Webster said that the question, which is now submitted by this resolution to this House, was one of the most important which could be considered in legislation; one affecting the very highest privileges of the House; one which the House alone could decide for itself. Nearly a century has transpired since the formation of this system of government. Repeatedly has the question been considered; never has it been determined by the House. I believe it should be determined now without regard to the merits of the argument, which have been suggested this afternoon to the consideration of the members of the House. I believe it should be referred, as the resolution proposes, to the Judiciary Committee, that they may make an intelligible report to this House on this important subject.

It is hardly necessary in this view, then, that I should reply to any of the remarks which have been made in opposition to the proposition maintained by me in the opening. I will, however, say, in response to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], that I read the history of England very differently from him. I believe that this power of appropriating money by the house of commons was a power extorted from the lords, compelled from the King, by the determination of the house of commons to insist upon the popular rights of the subjects of that government. I do not think that any man, who will devote himself carefully to the reading of history on this subject, will come to any other conclusion than that, and it was just this power, wrested from the Lords and from royalty for the protection of the British people, that it was the intention of the framers of this Constitution to put here for the protection of the people of America.

As for the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] in reference to the decision of the supreme court of that State, I desire to say that decision does not determine the question involved here. It simply determines the signification of the term "money bills," and what was held in that opinion is not at all conclusive of what is the meaning of the word "revenue" here in our Constitution.

And I would say this much in referencee to the decision in Massachusetts in addition. It is based upon a statement of fact, namely, that it can not be considered to have been settled in England before 1780, when the constitution of Massachusetts was adopted, that bills appropriating money must originate in the house of commons.

I deny the fact stated by the supreme court of Massachusetts, upon which the whole decision rests, and, to maintain the truthfulness of my assertion, I appeal to all the commentators on the English constitution who have written on the subject from 1678 to the present hour.

I have nothing to say as to the merits of the particular bill to which this resolution relates. I do not know that I shall antagonize it when it is presented to the House for consideration, but when I see a bill relating to a public purpose coming from the Senate to this House originating an appropriation of nearly $100,000,000, I believe it to be our duty to decide this question whether the Senate has any such power as that.

Shall the desire to educate the people lead us to violate the fundamental law of the land? Shall the desire to overcome the evils of illiteracy impel us to violate our oaths? I do not care how much I might be devoted to the success of a measure, if I conscientiously believed the Constitution of the United States to be in its way I would let the measure go and keep my oath and maintain the Constitution of my country. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIS. I desire briefly to call the attention of the House to the character of the pending motion.

Mr. HURD. How does the gentleman from Kentucky get the floor to conclude the debate.

Mr. WILLIS. By your courtesy.

Mr. HURD. I was not aware I had given it, but if the gentleman so regards it I will yield to him.

The SPEAKER. When the gentleman from Ohio rose the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] had seven minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, this is an unusual, I may say an extraordinary, resolution. What is its object? Why does it come forth at this particular moment? At what is it aimed? It states upon its face the object and the aim it has in view; that is, to call in question the constitutionality of a measure now pending in this Congress commonly known as the educational bill.

Why has the resolution been delayed up to this moment. On the 7th day of April, 1884, nearly two-thirds of a year ago, this educational bill passed the Senate of the United States. It has from that time until now been left buried under your infamous system of rules on the Speaker's table. Now, with only thirty or forty legislative days left, when we know that under these arbitrary rules the consideration of the most important measures must be defeated; now, after the lapse of two-thirds of a year—more than that—my friend from Ohio [Mr. HURD], anxious to vindicate the majesty of the rights of this House, rises in his seat for the first time and discovers they have been invaded by the action of the Senate.

Sir, I would have more appreciation of the resolution had he been more vigilant as a member of the House in presenting it to the House. I would have more consideration for it if it was aimed at some other of the many thousands of bills upon our Calendar or in committee which are less worthy than this, or that have been already passed by the Senate and have come to us. Only in this session, hardly fifty or sixty hours ago, a bill carrying the appropriations for the naval affairs of this country was passed by the Senate of the United States and referred to the Committee on Appropriations of this House. My friend from Ohio was here then; why did he not lift his eloquent voice against that invasion of the rights and privileges of this House? Ay, sir, if any question has been settled it is the right of the Senate not to raise revenue, which is not claimed, but to expend revenue, which right they have always exercised. The very men who founded our Constitution in the very first Congress that met passed bills of appropriations; and within the hundred years of our existence this right of the Senate to appropriate money has never been disputed, or, if disputed at all, has been successfully maintained as a right pertaining to that body. We have had committees of this House who have considered and deliberately considered it. We have had votes in this House, a body always jealous of its rights, and all have pointed to the maintenance of the right of the Senate to the extent involved in this educational bill.

Mr. Speaker, what is this bill? It is a bill that has already met the approbation of the committee of this House, a bill similar to the one that the gentleman refers to having been considered. Why, if we want to vindicate the dignity of the House, why should we attempt it upon a bill so vitally connected with the future welfare, prosperity, ay, the very perpetuity, of our public institutions in this country as the bill in question? It is known in this House that from day to day and from month to month the Committee on Education has been struggling to get the floor to press the consideration of this educational bill. We are now in the close of this session of Congress. Will this Congress adjourn without action upon this important measure?

Will you, the Representatives of the people of the United States, go back to your constituencies and tell them that you are more interested in passing a bill to prevent hog-cholera or pneumonia in cattle than a bill concerning the intellectual health of your own offspring? That is the question, and this resolution is a blow now being struck at the consideration of this great measure.

Send it to the Judiciary Committee! That is a ponderous, weighty, and deliberate body. Long before they have read the title of this bill yonder clock will have recorded the end of this session. And when we come to-day or to-morrow and ask this House to consider the educational bill, my friend will spring to his feet and say that grave questions affecting the dignity of this House are involved in this bill—these questions we have referred to the Judiciary Committee, and until their action as a committee is made known to this House and proper action taken upon it we ought not to enter upon the consideration of such a measure.

Mr. Speaker, believing that the mind of this House is determined upon this question, believing that further consideration either by the Judiciary Committee or by the House is unnecessary, recognizing the fact that this House has only a few days of life left, in the interest of the economy of the time of the House and in the interest of the objects of this great bill I move to lay the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio on the table. [Applause.]

Mr. HURD. Will the gentleman from Kentucky withdraw the motion for a single instant? I believe I had a moment or two of my time left, and desire to read an extract which will take but a moment.

Mr. WILLIS. I will withdraw, with the right to renew it again.

Mr. HURD. Certainly.

I desire to read simply what I intended to have read a few moments ago; that is, a statement by the late President of the United States, Mr. Garfield, on this very question. There was a resolution pending before the House in the Forty-first Congress declaring that the House had the exclusive right to originate all bills directly affecting the revenue, whether such bills be for the imposition, reduction, or repeal of taxes, when Mr. Garfield said:

> I wish to say merely that the House has never at any time, so far as I can find when the matter was challenged or called up, surrendered the right claimed in the resolution now pending; and if any House should ever make such surrender, I should look upon it as a dark day for the liberties of the country.

Mr. WILLIS. I renew the motion to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. YORK. On that I ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Do I understand the gentleman from Kentucky desires to cut off debate on this question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to lay the resolution on the table, which is not a debatable motion.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Before that motion is put I desire to ask leave of the House to print some remarks in the RECORD on this subject.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I desire to make a similar request.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection these requests will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask that the resolution be again read.

The resolution was again reported.

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 66 members voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 128, nays 123, not voting 72; as follows:

So the motion to lay the resolution on the table was agreed to.

After the second call of the roll,

Mr. TOWNSHEND said: I change my vote from "ay" to "no."

Mr. BALLENTINE. I should have voted "ay" if I had not been paired.

Mr. CONVERSE. I change my vote from "ay" to "no."

Mr. HENLEY. I also change my vote from "ay" to "no." I voted under a misapprehension.

Mr. DIBRELL. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. CALDWELL, is confined to his room by sickness.

Mr. PETERS. I desire to change my vote from "no" to "ay."

The following members were announced as paired on all political questions until further notice:

Mr. RANKIN with Mr. BRAINERD.

Mr. MORRISON with Mr. JOHNSON.

Mr. SHAW with Mr. LAIRD.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, with Mr. KELLOGG.

Mr. ARNOT with Mr. BELFORD.

Mr. FYAN with Mr. HOOPER.

Mr. BROADHEAD with Mr. BOWEN.

Mr. BALLENTINE with Mr. GOFF.

The following pairs were also announced:

Mr. BURNES with Mr. STONE, for this day.

Mr. DAVIS, of Missouri, with Mr. BINGHAM, for this day.

Mr. CALDWELL with Mr. FUNSTON, for this day.

Mr. DOWD with Mr. KETCHAM, until Monday, January 26.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, with Mr. MULDROW, until Monday, January 26.

Mr. TALBOTT with Mr. THOMAS, for this day.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I change my vote from "no" to "ay," and I move to reconsider——

Several MEMBERS. The result is not announced yet.

Mr. BRAINERD. I withdraw my vote. I find I am paired. I voted "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed a bill (S. 2570) granting an increase of pension to Col. Samuel M. Thompson; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 7872) to remove the political disabilities of Gabriel H. Hill, of Virginia; and

A bill (H. R. 7963) to remove the political disabilities of J. Pembroke Jones, of Virginia.

POWER TO ORIGINATE REVENUE BILLS.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] was laid upon the table.

Mr. WILLIS. And I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 141, nays 113, not voting 69; as follows:

So the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table was agreed to.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. WAIT with Mr. THOMAS, for this day.

TO CHANGE HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged question, and I offer a resolution, which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution, after which the Chair will decide whether it is a matter of privilege or not.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on and after Monday next the regular meetings of the House during the present session shall begin at 11 o'clock each day; that it shall be in order each day for one hour, immediately after the reading of the Journal, for the Speaker to recognize such member as he may choose, alternating sides of the House and members, for the purpose of asking unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of such business as such member may select. But if, after the reading of the bill or resolution, ten members object to present consideration, the same shall not be considered: Provided, That if consideration be had, five minutes shall be given for debate for and five minutes against such measure if asked by any member.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that would change a rule of the House.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded heretofore, but the gentleman from Nebraska stated that he rose to a privileged question.

Several MEMBERS. That is not a privileged question.

Mr. VALENTINE. I admit that it is not privileged for consideration at this time, but must, under the rule, lie over until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that so far as regards the mere introduction of the resolution, either for the purpose of having it lie over one day, or for the purpose of having it referred to the Committee on Rules, it is privileged; but not beyond that.

Mr. VALENTINE. That is all that I ask for it.

PRINTING AND DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. I rise to a privileged question, and call up from the Speaker's table the Senate resolution (S. R. 104) providing for the purchase and distribution of Government publications, in order to have it referred to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. That is not a matter of privilege. Reports from the Committee on Printing relating to printing for either House are privileged under the rules of the House. The Chair will ascertain whether that resolution is one that comes within the rule, and, if so, will lay it before the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for, which is the call of committees for reports of bills of a private nature.

REMOVAL OF POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

Mr. HAMMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. 8032) to remove the political disabilities of Virginius Freeman, of Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Several messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 7964) to provide for the expenses and compensation of special messengers to be sent by the Secretary of State to the States respectively of Iowa and Oregon for the certificates of the electoral votes of 1884 for President and Vice-President of the United States, in pursuance of the provisions of section 141 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Also, an act (H. R. 3661) granting a pension to Lucy Le G. Jeffers.

Also, an act (H. R. 4273) for the relief of Madison R. Calvert.

Also, an act (H. R. 7329) granting the right of way to the Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley Railway Company across the Fort Robinson military reservation, in the State of Nebraska.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

Mr. SLOCUM. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back the resolution requesting the President to transmit to the House a copy of the appeal of Fitz-John Porter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman that if this resolution be reported during the present call it must go to the Calendar. At any other time it would be in order for consideration.

Mr. SLOCUM. Then I withdraw the report.

JOHN HOLLINS M'BLAIR.

Mr. MURRAY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7940) for the relief of John Hollins McBlair; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN LEATHERS.

Mr. SNYDER, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 1377) for the relief of John Leathers; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering the Private Calendar.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope that motion will be voted down, so that I may call up and the House proceed to consider the Mexican pension bill.

Mr. MCMILLIN. In that connection, with the indulgence of the House, I wish to state that there are a few bills reported by the Committee of the Whole which have not yet been acted upon by the House. I am informed that we are required to go into Committee of the Whole in order to reach these bills this evening. I therefore make that motion.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not think we can accomplish anything by going into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar today, and therefore I hope the House will take up the Mexican pension bill.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE OF A BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will correct the erroneous reference of a bill, if there be no objection.

There being no objection, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1111) granting an increased pension to Sallie Rodman, widow of General Isaac P. Rodman; and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO THE RULES.

Mr. REED. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REED. I desire to move an amendment to the rules, to add at the end of Rule XX—

And when all amendments not subject to the point of order shall have been acted on by the House, it shall be in order at once to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the amendments affected by this rule.

The object of this is to enable us to pass the Mexican pension bill, the only way under our rules in which it can be done. I hope, therefore, no gentleman on that side will make any objection to it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I demand the regular order. This Mexican pension bill to which gentlemen are referring is not for the benefit of the Mexican soldiers at all.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. If gentlemen are so anxious to take up the Mexican pension bill, let us take up one that is for their benefit.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order is in the nature of an objection. The proposed amendment to the rules will lie over.

L. W. PITTS.

Mr. HOLMES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7803) for the relief of L. W. Pitts; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I insist upon the motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 84, noes 68.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 54 members voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 103, nays 123, not voting 97; as follows:

Mr. PAIGE with Mr. KEAN, for this day.

Mr. LOWRY with Mr. ATKINSON, for this day.

Mr. SKINNER, of North Carolina, with Mr. KELLEY, for this day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. MILLS. I move to reconsider the vote just taken.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I wish to inquire whether if the House refuses to go into Committee of the Whole and should then go to business on the Speaker's table could it take up anything but private bills.

The SPEAKER. It could not, unless by a two-thirds vote the House should dispense with private business.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And that requires a two-thirds vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so stated.

Mr. WOLFORD. I ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. NICHOLLS] to withdraw his motion to adjourn and to substitute for it a motion to take a recess.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I withdraw the motion to adjourn, and move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock for the transaction of business under the former order of the House.

Mr. MILLS. If the motion for a recess should be agreed to, what business will come up?

The SPEAKER. Pension business alone.

Mr. HERBERT. As I understand, only private pension bills.

The SPEAKER. Such is the order of the House.

The question being taken on the motion for a recess, there were—ayes 94, noes 66.

Mr. ANDERSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOUNT. What vote would be necessary to take up public business?

The SPEAKER. In order to reach public business private business must first be dispensed with by a two-thirds vote. The Chair has already so stated in response to another question.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desired that that should be understood.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were—ayes 22.

Mr. ANDERSON. Count the other side.

The negative vote was counted; and there were—noes 146.

So (the affirmative not being one-fifth of the entire vote) the yeas and nays were not ordered; and the motion for a recess was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., Mr. BAGLEY in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read a communication from the Speaker.

The Clerk read as follows:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
January 23, 1885.

Mr. JOHN H. BAGLEY, Jr., of New York, will preside as Speaker pro tempore during the session of the House this evening.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the order under which the session is held this evening.

The Clerk read as follows:

That until the further order of this House, on each Friday the House will take a recess at 5 o'clock until 8 p. m., at which evening sessions bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions shall be considered.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar for the consideration of business under the order just read.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, in the chair.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent that the business of this evening may begin with the first case reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions on page 46 of the Calendar, except one case. There is one near the bottom of page 43 to which some objection was made heretofore by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON]. I understand he wishes to make some statement in relation to it and will then withdraw his objection to it.

Mr. HOLMES. Without antagonizing the request of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I desire to say that the bill (H. R. 1981) for the relief of certain pensioners enrolled by special acts of Congress is placed in rather an anomalous position. I would ask that that bill be not passed over out of its regular order without being considered in Committee of the Whole. I am not particular whether it is considered at the beginning of the call or later.

The CHAIRMAN. On what page of the Calendar is the bill to which the gentleman from Iowa refers?

Mr. HOLMES. It is on page 44 of the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the question. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] asks unanimous consent that the committee shall consider as the first bill the one whose title the Clerk will now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6946) for the relief of Margaret McCarty.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. GIBSON. The bill to which the gentleman from Indiana referred was the bill (H. R. 4079) for the relief of James D. Kirk. I desire the committee to take up that case now, for the reason that several evenings ago when it was called up I made some statements by way of objection to it, and at my request it was passed until I could look into the case. I can stay here but a very few minutes this evening, and before I go I desire to make a statement in relation to this bill, in justice both to the claimant and to myself.

When this case was up before my attention was called to it upon the reading of the report, which stated that James D. Kirk had been a member of the One hundred and sixty-seventh Regiment of West Virginia Militia. As soon as I heard that statement read I knew that there must be some mistake about the matter, there never having been any One hundred and sixty-seventh Regiment of West Virginia Militia; and, there being no evidence before us on that evening to show that this man was in the service, I objected to the consideration of the bill. Since that time I have had occasion to be in Wheeling, the capital of our State, and have examined the records there. In the adjutant-general's office of West Virginia there are the records of several companies that were formed under the laws of the State of Virginia, and this regiment was officered by officers appointed by the governor of the State of Virginia (at that time Governor Pierpont), and was numbered as a Virginia regiment; so that the mistake consists in stating that this man was a member of the One hundred and sixty-seventh West Virginia Regiment. It appears, however, that he was a member of the One hundred and sixty-seventh Virginia Militia.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. But he was in the service?

Mr. GIBSON. Yes, sir. The record shows that he served for four months, at which time the company was disbanded. The record shows no wounds suffered by him there, but it shows that immediately upon the disbandment of that organization he enlisted in a Kentucky regiment and served during the balance of the war. Now, the question whether he was under any disability while he was in the One hundred and sixty-seventh Virginia Militia or not is a matter that I shall leave to this committee and to the evidence before it. I simply desired to make this statement here in relation to the case, because on a former occasion I had stated here publicly and emphatically that the man could not have been a member of the One hundred and sixty-seventh West Virginia Regiment, and I do not desire that he should suffer by any mistake that may have occurred in his papers or by what may have been a technical contradiction on my part of the statements made in his behalf.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I ask for the reading of the report. I ask to have it read as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Alabama that the report was read when the bill was taken up on a former occasion.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I know it was; but I do not remember it, and I desire to have it read.

Mr. LE FEVRE. Mr. Chairman, I would ask that this bill be laid aside informally. It is a bill introduced by Mr. CULBERSON, who is not present. He came to me this afternoon and said that he was anxious to have the case called up, and as he is not here I ask that it be laid aside informally.

Mr. GIBSON. I will ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE FEVRE] to inform the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] of the statement that I have just made in relation to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT] asks for the reading of the report. The Clerk will read it.

Mr. LE FEVRE. Mr. Chairman, is there any objection made to my request that this case be laid aside for the time being?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE FEVRE] asks unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside informally, and, no objection being made, it is so ordered.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN PENSIONERS.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, House bill 1981, for the relief of certain pensioners enrolled under certain acts of Congress, has been passed over, and now I desire to call it up.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That any pensioner of the United States receiving a pension by virtue of any special act of Congress, on account of disability incurred by him while in the military or naval service of the United States, shall be entitled to increase of such pension upon the same conditions of rerating and continuance of such increase which are applicable to other pensioners under the general pension laws.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HOLMES] that the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] was that the call should commence with a certain bill—with the exception of the bill which has just been under consideration and has been laid aside informally.

Mr. HOLMES. Without desiring to antagonize any measure which the gentleman may desire to call up, I yet do not wish this bill to be omitted from consideration in its regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Iowa as having objected to the request of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMES. I made at that time the same statement that I have made just now, and I understood that to be accepted by the chairman of the committee, as no objection was made. I do not know that he has any objection now.

Mr. MATSON. I remember very distinctly, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HOLMES] did say that he desired to call up this bill, either now or at some future time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understood the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MATSON. I am not disposed to insist upon the point. As far as I am concerned I have no objection to his calling up this bill now, but I know this—as I think he does also—that objection has been made heretofore to the consideration of this bill at our evening sessions. I believe I objected to it in the first place myself on the ground that the order of the House in relation to these sessions was such as to at least cause members to understand that only private pension bills would be considered. While the language of the order is that bills upon the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions shall be considered, the clear understanding of all the members of the House is that only private bills shall be considered.

Therefore it seemed to me to be unfair to other members of the House to press this bill, which is in the nature of a general bill, upon the attention of the House at these Friday evening sessions. Subsequently, when the matter was before the House, I think the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT] objected upon the ground that this was a general bill. Now, I think this bill is right and that it ought to pass. I do not think it is a bill that would be seriously objected to on its merits; but I do think that we ought not to undertake to pass a bill of this kind at these evening sessions, because it might at least seem to be unfair to the House itself, for the reason that a majority of the members certainly understand that only private bills are to be considered on these occasions. However, I am not disposed to be factious in my opposition. I have made the objection once, and I shall not make it again. If the House sees fit now to go on with this bill I have no objection whatever.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions whether he has any plan by which, under the rules of the House, he hopes to get action upon this bill except at a Friday evening session.

Mr. MATSON. I do not know how that may be. So far as that is concerned, there are no other bills reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions that I suppose the House itself would give preference to over this one. However, that is neither here nor there. It is merely a question of fair play.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I realize the force of the point the gentleman makes, but I am anxious to know whether he has any plan by which if this bill be passed over now he can hope to secure its consideration by the House at some other time than this, or at some of these evening sessions.

Mr. MATSON. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HOLMES] is in charge of the bill; whether he has any such plan or not, I am not aware.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, I am not advised as to what may be the understanding of members of this House in regard to the transaction of the business of the House, except that it is to be governed by certain rules which the House itself has adopted for that purpose. The rule which governs the order of business of these Friday evening sessions is as follows:

> That until the further order of this House, on each Friday the House will take a recess at 5 o'clock until 8 p. m., at which evening sessions bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions shall be considered.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the question is, Is this bill a bill which has been reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions? Most assuredly it is. It was reported by that committee and was ordered to be placed upon this Calendar by the House, and, as I understand, it is now in a position superior to the action or control of this committee; because, having been placed upon the Calendar by the House, it can be displaced only by the action of the House. My friend from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] says that the members of this House should be here when this bill is to be considered, that it is not fair to transact this business in their absence. But in the transaction of the public business are we to wait upon the convenience of the members? The members of this House are supposed to be present when the House is transacting business. I know of no rule of law or equity, nor do I know of any rule of this House, which requires us to postpone public business until all the members of the House find it convenient to attend.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. HOLMES. With pleasure.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I merely wish to suggest to the gentleman that it is wholly unnecessary to take up time in this discussion, because unless there is a quorum here we can not go on with this bill. It is a bill general in its character, and I do not think it would be right for the House to allow it to pass without the presence of a quorum. For that reason, I think we had better go on with the private pension bills.

Mr. HOLMES. Do I understand the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT] to object to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Yes. I shall object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HOLMES] that this bill is upon the Calendar, is now reached and has been read.

Mr. HOLMES. There is no means of getting this bill before the House unless it be taken up at one of these Friday evening sessions. It is not in order, as I understand the rules of the House and the order of business, to take up this bill as a private bill in the afternoon, and to insist that it shall not be taken up at a night session is simply an indirect method of defeating the bill.

It is a proper bill. No gentleman has taken the floor to argue against the propriety of the bill or its justice. It simply permits the Pension Office to increase the amount of the pension where the disability has increased since the pension was allowed by special act of Congress. I shall therefore ask the ruling of the Chair and insist upon the consideration of this bill at the present time. Similar measures have already been passed at different times.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already stated that this bill is now before the Committee of the Whole for consideration, and is now being considered.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Alabama, and on this suggestion I trust we may be able to compromise. It is that we consider this bill now in Committee of the Whole, and, if the majority of the committee should be favorable to it, pass it in Committee of the Whole, but let its final passage in the House await the presence of a quorum. In this way perhaps the bill would be advanced somewhat. If the gentleman from Alabama is disposed to insist that the bill shall not pass finally without the vote of a quorum, let that question be deferred until the measure can be reached in the House; but if a majority of this Committee of the Whole are in favor of the bill, let us pass it this evening.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. As has been stated by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON], the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, the order under which these evening sessions are held was made by unanimous consent, with the understanding on the part, probably, of every member of the House that only private pension bills were to be considered under the order. To permit now a general bill, which has been put upon the Private Calendar by mistake or inadvertence, to be taken up and passed at a session of this kind in the absence of a quorum would not, I think, be fair to the House.

Mr. HOLMES. Is there any rule or order of the House to the effect indicated by the gentleman, that nothing but private bills can be considered at these night sessions?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I am only stating what was the understanding, I presume, of every member of the House, including the gentleman from Iowa, when this order was made; because it would have been impossible to obtain unanimous consent for the consideration at these night sessions of any general pension bill. Hence I think it would be doing injustice to members of the House who are not present to permit this bill to be considered at all at a night session. Therefore, though I can not object to its consideration, I shall demand a quorum upon any question connected with this bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think I can suggest a way by which the gentleman from Alabama can obtain the sense of a full House upon this bill. Can we not agree that the bill shall pass through the Committee of the Whole, and be taken up in the House to-night as the last bill for consideration, and that the previous question be ordered upon it, so that it shall come up in the morning as unfinished business, when a vote of the House can be had upon it? Would not that be agreeable to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. PERKINS. That is substantially the suggestion I have made.

Mr. HOLMES. Will that be satisfactory to the gentleman from Alabama?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Inasmuch as it is evident that the gentleman from Alabama will insist upon his objection, I suggest to my colleague [Mr. HOLMES] that this bill be laid aside informally until we pass some of the private bills on the Calendar, and that this bill be taken up toward the close of this evening's session.

Mr. HOLMES. To take the bill up toward the close of the session after it had been passed over when reached in regular order would be objected to for the same reason that objection is now made. I do not see any hope of passing this bill through the committee at any time unless it be passed now. I think it perfectly fair to pass the bill through the Committee of the Whole with the understanding that we shall wait until there is a fuller House before we ask action on the bill in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 40, noes 1.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. HOLMES. As the gentleman from Alabama raises the question of a quorum, and as I do not wish to delay the other business before the Committee of the Whole, I ask that this bill be passed over informally.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to laying this bill aside informally? The Chair hears no objection. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask by unanimous consent to make a statement concerning the business of the evening. It has been suggested to me by a number of gentlemen, and I feel the force of it, that those gentlemen who are here [cries of "Louder!"]—it has been suggested by a number of gentlemen that those who come to the evening sessions should have preference in relation to the disposition of bills which they have offered, and in the passage of which they have an interest. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I ask by unanimous consent that the business of this evening may proceed at least for a time with the understanding that the Chair shall recognize gentlemen alternately on each side of the House to call up such bills to which they may see fit to ask the attention of the committee. [Cries of "That is right!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposition made by the gentleman from Indiana? He asks unanimous consent that the Chair may recognize members who are present having bills on the Calendar in which they are interested to ask that they be taken up out of their order. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

MRS. SARAH S. SAMPSON.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask to call up for consideration at the present time the bill (H. R. 6311) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah S. Sampson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Sarah S. Sampson, widow of Lieut. Col. Charles H. L. Sampson, late of the Maine Infantry Volunteers, at the rate of $50 per month.

The amendments reported by the committee were as follows:

In line 5, after the word "Sampson," insert the words "an Army nurse;" and in line 7 strike out the words "fifty dollars per month" and insert the words "twenty-five dollars per month."

Mr. STEELE. I understand these bills were to be taken up in their order. [Cries of "No!" "No!"] Otherwise there would be a scramble as to who shall have precedence in calling up a bill.

Mr. MORRILL. We are to alternate between the two sides of the House, and in that way we may pass thirty or forty bills to-night.

The report (by Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6311) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah S. Sampson, having duly considered the same, report as follows:

It appears from the papers before your committee that Mrs. Sarah S. Sampson joined the Third Maine Volunteers as matron when that regiment left Maine for active service, June 3, 1861. Her husband, then Capt. Charles A. L. Sampson, commanded a company in the regiment, and was subsequently promoted to be lieutenant-colonel of the same. From a report of Mrs. Sampson's services, published in the official report of the adjutant-general of the State of Maine for 1865, it appears that she was daily in attendance at the regimental hospital so long as the regiment remained encamped at Meridian Hill, near Washington; that she was at Clermont, caring for the wounded of Bull Run; that she was with the sick and wounded in the brigade hospital every day to the embarkation for the Peninsula, in March, 1862, and that she was distributing supplies and caring for the inmates of the hospitals all through the battles of the memorable Peninsular campaign.

In the autumn of 1862 her efficiency had been so well tested that she was assigned to visit hospitals in the Department of Washington, in which capacity she did so conspicuous service as to win the commendation of those in command. In December, 1862, she was in the hospitals at Fredericksburg, caring for the wounded of the first battle at that place. In February, 1863, she visited Birney's division hospital, near Falmouth, with supplies. She did conspicuous service in the hospitals at Gettysburg after that battle, and from that time to March, 1864, she was assiduously employed in the hospitals around Washington. In March, 1864, she was in the hospital at Brandy Station, and after the battle of the Wilderness went again to Fredericksburg to care for the wounded of that bloody contest.

Through the summer of 1864 she labored so devotedly in the hospitals at White House Landing, Fortress Monroe, and City Point that she was taken ill with fever, and was not able to return to hospital work till February, 1865. As soon as her health permitted she joined the Army hospitals at City Point, and labored assiduously, caring for our sick and wounded, till the war closed and the last of the sick and wounded had been removed.

The testimonials to the rare devotion and great efficiency of Mrs. Sampson's labors during the four years' labors in the Union hospitals are numerous and conclusive.

General M. V. Wiswall, military governor of the District of Columbia, says:

"I had abundant opportunity to observe Mrs. Sampson in her work of caring for the sick and wounded. I think I do her but justice when I say that during her nearly three years of service I know of no one more earnest, more self-sacrificing, or more intelligent in the discharge of duty than she was. Such women should be recognized by the Government."

Ex-Vice-President Hannibal Hamlin, under whose observation Mrs. Sampson's self-sacrificing labors came, says:

"I know Mrs. Sampson very well, and I know well the heroic and Christian duties which she nobly discharged during the war. * * * I think Congress should be asked to give her a pension, first on the ground of her services, and second on the ground that her husband was entitled to a pension, but from patriotic reasons did not obtain it."

Rev. A. F. Beard, during the war connected with the Christian Commission, and now pastor of the American church, Paris, says:

"My first introduction to Mrs. Sampson was subsequent to the battle of Wilderness, in Fredericksburg, where, overcome by work and exposure and the ghastly service, I was in extreme sickness. In her rounds Mrs. Sampson found me and administered to me among hundreds of others, with a skill and fidelity which saved my life, as it did the lives of many."

Hon. Anson P. Morrill, ex-governor of and ex-Representative to Congress from Maine, says:

"I saw much of Mrs. Sampson at Washington in 1861, '62, and '63, and knew her labors in behalf of the sick and wounded soldiers. * * * I found Mrs. S. to be a woman of wonderful energy and capacity, and thoroughly devoted to the alleviation of the suffering soldiers."

G. S. Palmer, M. D., late surgeon of the Third Maine Volunteers, and surgeon United States Volunteers, says:

"Mrs. Sampson was exceedingly well qualified in health, disposition, and intelligence to perform the most arduous and delicate duties of nurse and friend to the soldier, and she did perform these duties with most wonderful skill and cheerfulness. * * * I think I can say with truth and without disparagement to any one else that Mrs. Sampson was the most energetic, careful, and efficient female nurse in the Army. Her late husband was at first captain of Company D, Third Maine Regiment, and subsequently promoted to lieutenant-colonel. He was stricken down with malarial fever in the Peninsular campaign; was carried to Fortress Monroe, where he lay weeks suffering from that exhausting disease, from the effects of which he never recovered."

The following order from the War Department is of interest in this connection:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, September 21, 1864.

GENERAL: In consideration of the great services that Mrs. C. A. L. Sampson has rendered to our sick and wounded soldiers, the Secretary of War directs that you furnish her transportation to her home in Maine, and also to return from there to this city.

Your obedient servant,

C. A. DANA,
Assistant Secretary of War.

Brig. Gen. D. H. RUCKER,
Chief Quartermaster.

It appears that Lieutenant-Colonel Sampson, husband of Mrs. Sarah S. Sampson, resigned, after a little more than a year's service, in July, 1862, on account of ill health, and that from that time until his death, January 1, 1881, his health was broken. The death of her husband has made it necessary for Mrs. Sampson to support herself, a task which increasing years is rendering more and more difficult.

In view of these facts, and in further view of the services of Mrs. Sampson in caring for the orphan children of deceased soldiers since the close of the war, nine hundred officers and soldiers of the Union Army in Maine have united in a petition asking Congress to grant her a suitable pension.

Your committee recommend the passage of a bill allowing her a pension of $25 per month.

The amendments of the committee were agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANNIE E. BAILEY.

Mr. CONVERSE. I call up a bill (H. R. 1235) granting a pension to Annie E. Bailey.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it on the Calendar?

Mr. CONVERSE. No; it was reported this afternoon.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have a bill about the first one on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the gentleman from Ohio has been recognized under the arrangement made by the committee——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not think gentlemen should be allowed to call up bills reported at this late day in preference to bills reported long ago and which are first upon the Calendar.

Mr. CONVERSE. It allows each member recognized to call up one bill, and there is no injustice about that.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. The gentleman from Illinois was not here to object, and we are proceeding under an arrangement made by unanimous consent.

Mr. CONVERSE. I call up the bill (H. R. 1235) granting a pension to Annie E. Bailey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pensions laws, the name of Annie E. Bailey, widow of First Lieutenant William C. Bailey, of Company B, Fourth Regiment West Virginia Infantry.

The report (by Mr. LE FEVRE) was read, as follows:

Annie E. Bailey is the widow of William C. Bailey, first lieutenant Company B, Fourth Regiment West Virginia Volunteers, who died December 9, 1874; and the evidence in her claim for pension shows that Lieutenant Bailey was discharged upon surgeon's certificate of disability for asthma, being utterly unfit for duty therefrom. The claim for pension was rejected because of alleged existence of disease prior to enlistment.

The evidence of the surgeon of the regiment shows exposure on a raid and contraction of severe cold from which asthma developed.

His colonel, Lieut. Col. John L. Vance, testifies to same effect, and to subsequent death from consumption.

F. A. Crowly, M. D., as to being Lieutenant Bailey's family physician, and treating him in connection with his father for asthma, which gradually developed into consumption.

Dr. Ephraim Williams was family physician prior to 1861, and testifies to non-existence of asthma.

John M. Gardner testifies to acquaintance with Lieutenant Bailey from 1857 to March 10, 1861, and to soundness and freedom from asthma. So positive is the sworn evidence as to freedom from asthma prior to enlistment, its contraction in the service, existence at and subsequent to the discharge, and development into consumption that there seems no room for doubt that Lieutenant Bailey's death was a sequence of his service, and your committee recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES D. KIRK.

Mr. CULBERTSON, of Kentucky. I call up a bill (H. R. 4079) granting a pension to James D. Kirk.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of James D. Kirk, of Inez, Martin County, Kentucky, and pay him a pension from the date of expiration of his term of service in Company B, One hundred and sixty-seventh Regiment West Virginia Militia, at the rate allowed by law to private soldiers for disabilities incurred while in the service of the United States in the late war of the rebellion.

The amendments of the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out the words "Kentucky, and pay him a pension from the date of expiration of his term of service in," and in lieu thereof insert "late of."

The report of the committee (by Mr. LE FEVRE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4079) granting a pension to James D. Kirk, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

It appears from the papers on file in the Pension Office that James D. Kirk, while serving as a private in Company B, One hundred and sixty-seventh Regiment West Virginia Militia, and returning with his command to Lawrence County, Kentucky, from a scout to Logan County, West Virginia, was accidentally wounded in right hand by the discharge of his gun while in the act of passing it through a fence. The ball passed through the palm of the hand, fracturing the middle metacarpal bones, causing the drawing up and consequent shortening of the fingers.

The fact of the injury and its incurrence in line of duty is fully shown by the affidavit of the officer and others of the command. The date of the injury is given as November 25, 1862. After recovery from the wound Kirk became a member of Company I, Thirty-ninth Kentucky Infantry, and served from August 28, 1863, until mustered out, a first-sergeant, September 15, 1865.

The claim has been rejected by the Pension Office because the applicant at time of injury was not in the service of the United States.

The command to which claimant belonged it is true was a State organization, but its services were valuable to the Government, and in fact the militia of the several States were co-operating with the forces of the United States in the suppression of the rebellion, and their services are recognized in the pension laws for wounds or injuries received while in an engagement, provided the claim was prosecuted to a successful issue prior to July 4, 1874.

This, as well as preceding Congresses, have recognized the services of the militiamen by granting pensions for those who are excluded from the provisions of the general pension laws, and believing this case to be meritorious, your committee report favorably on the bill, and ask that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out all between the word "Kentucky," in line 5, and the word "in," in line 7, and insert therein instead the words "late of."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. Does that grant arrears? As originally read it did grant arrears from the time of the disability, and, if so, I must object to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be read as amended.

The bill was again read as amended.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There are no arrears in that. It is all right.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN SPARR.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 7340) granting a pension to John Sparr.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Sparr, of Batavia, N. Y., late of Company C, Third Regiment New York Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. BAGLEY) is as follows:

John Sparr served as a private in Company C, Third Regiment New York Cavalry, from September 28, 1864, to July 12, 1865. He applied for pension February 24, 1879, alleging disability on account of injury to right leg by reason of the fall of his horse while chasing a confederate mail-carrier near Portsmouth, Va., in March, 1865, which injury resulted in varicose veins and weakness of leg. The claim for pension has been rejected because there is no record of the alleged injury, and claimant is unable to furnish the testimony of officers or comrades as to its incurrence or medical evidence of treatment in service or at discharge, and the evidence on file is deemed insufficient to corroborate claimant's allegations.

It appears that the claimant was one of a detachment made up of different commands, sent out on a raid across Blackwater River, at the time of the injury, and not being acquainted with his companions he is unable to furnish the testimony of an eye-witness. The captain of claimant's company testifies, however, that claimant's injury at the time alleged was, at the time of the latter's return to the company, reported to the affiant. The leg was swollen and sore, and soldier thereafter was excused from drill. The affiant had no doubt of the truth of claimant's statements in the matter.

Claimant states that he was treated in Camp Getty for the injury, but does not remember the name of the surgeon.

William Doring and Charles J. Sparr, neighbors, who are shown to be credible witnesses, testify that upon his return from the Army soldier was lame, and an examination of the leg showed that it was swollen and blue from the right knee to the foot.

Dr. Billings, who treated claimant from his discharge until 1872, is dead. Subsequent treatment is shown by the affidavits of the attending physician.

That claimant was sound at enlistment can not be doubted upon the evidence on file.

The action of the Pension Office in rejecting the claim because of the absence of the testimony of an eye-witness to the injury, and of medical treatment in the service, was undoubtedly proper under its rules governing the adjudication of pension claims; but in view of the fact shown your committee are of opinion that great injustice would be done a worthy soldier by insisting upon a strict compliance with such rules, and believing that he, by the best attainable circumstantial evidence, has established his title to a pension, we report favorably on the bill, and ask that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

AMOS M'DOWELL.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar House bill 7572, granting a pension to Amos McDowell, and put it upon its passage. It will be found on page 52 of the Calendar.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to place on the pension-roll the name of Amos McDowell, late a member of the Forty-sixth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and grant him a pension from the passage of this act, subject to the pension laws.

Mr. BAGLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of this report be dispensed with, and that it may be printed. I appeal to my friend from Alabama that this reading of these long reports is simply delaying the passage of the bills.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. The report should be read or else some statement made to show the character of the bill on which we are called to act.

Mr. PETERS. I think I can expedite matters by making a brief statement in reference to this case.

This is the case of an applicant for pension who contracted disease in the Army, but did not take sick until two days after he was discharged from the service. The medical testimony all goes to show that the seeds of the disease were in his system at the time of his discharge. Immediately after his discharge he was taken down with typhoid fever. The case was examined by a special examiner sent out from the Department, who reported favorably upon it, but for some reason it was rejected, because the Department did not think the evidence sufficiently proved that the disease was contracted in the Army prior to the discharge.

I think it is one of the strongest cases that has ever come before the House for its action.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the reading of the report will be dispensed with and it will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

We find that claimant enlisted May 28, 1864, for one hundred days, and was discharged September 23, 1864, by reason of expiration of service. November 7, 1878, he filed a declaration for pension, alleging "typhoid fever, contracted at Memphis, Tenn., September, 1864, resulting in disability of left leg." The case was submitted to a special examiner, and a full and searching examination was made, developing the following facts, which seem to stand unquestioned, as there is no contradictory testimony. Two or three comrades testify that on their way to Davenport, Iowa, in September, 1864, to be mustered out the claimant appeared sick and complained to those around him that he felt badly. On the 23d of September they were mustered out, and he, accompanied by comrades, went to his home. The family physician happening to be present, gave him some medicine. He continued to grow worse, and a few days after (not more than ten) he was confined to his bed, and for two months was very sick with typhoid fever. For six months he was unable to leave the house. The fever left him with a diseased leg, which has continued ever since. He shows continuous medical treatment from the day he reached his father's house until the time of making the application, in 1878.

His family physician, Dr. William H. Gibbon, surgeon of the Fifteenth Iowa Regiment, testifies that he was claimant's family physician from 1858 until he entered the service, at which time he was in good health and a sound, able-bodied man; that when he (affiant) left the Army in 1865 he again became claimant's family physician; that he (claimant) had the typhoid fever the year before, and at the time he saw him his left leg was considerably swollen, with contracted muscles, caused by rheumatism; that he continued to be his physician until he went to Kansas, in 1873, up to which time the leg had not materially improved, the leg still being flexed and swollen; that he remained in the condition described from 1864 to 1873.

Dr. O. M. Dotson testifies that he treated claimant from 1873 to close of year 1877, and that he was disabled on account of abscesses on left leg from hip to ankle.

The lay testimony as to his disability is very full and complete.

A. B. Casselman, the special agent of the Pension Department, who conducted the examination, says in his report, speaking of one of the most important witnesses:

"Before taking the testimony of this witness I inquired relative to his reputation, and was informed that he was a man of the strictest integrity and regard for truth; that anything he might say could be implicitly believed."

In closing his report the special examiner says:

"I am of the opinion that this claim is established, showing in my opinion that claimant's alleged disabilities are due to the service; yet in view of the testimony relating to the degree of disability from disabled leg, I think it would be well to have him examined by the nearest board, especially as Surgeon Minor rates him for a disability not alleged."

Yet in the face of all this testimony, with the evidence of Dr. Gibbon and Dr. Dotson before him, with the testimony of reputable men that claimant was treated immediately upon his return home by Dr. Joy, who is now dead, the reviewer who sat in judgment upon the report of the special examiner, says:

"Approved for rejection on the ground that claimant has failed to connect his alleged typhoid fever and results with his military service, there being no record of any sickness in service, and claimant being unable to furnish medical testimony of prior soundness, origin in the service, or existence at or soon after discharge. Says he was taken with typhoid fever thirteen days after discharge."

Claimant swears positively that two days before his discharge he was taken with a severe headache and a fullness and disagreeable feeling at the stomach; that this sickness continued growing worse for ten days after he got home, when he was confined to his bed.

Your committee conclude that a very strong case is shown by the evidence; that it would be unreasonable to suppose that the fever was not contracted in the service, and they therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EMILY L. ALVORD.

Mr. WOLFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask consent to call up bill 7659, granting a pension to Mrs. Emily L. Alvord. It will be found on page 53 of the Calendar.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Emily L. Alvord, widow of Brig. Gen. Benjamin Alvord, deceased, late Paymaster-General of the United States Army, and pay her a pension of $50 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. WOLFORD) is as follows:

That General Alvord was an officer in the Army of the United States in continuous service for forty-seven years. His military record is most satisfactory and brilliant. He was in the Florida war against the Seminole Indians, was engaged in several skirmishes, and was promoted for his gallant conduct. He was in the war with Mexico, and participated in several engagements, and was twice promoted for his gallant and meritorious conduct in the battles of said war. He was in command as brigadier-general United States Volunteers from 1862 to 1866 in the war with the seceding States, and promoted in the regular Army, for faithful and meritorious services, to brevet lieutenant-colonel, and brevet colonel, and brevet brigadier-general in the United States Army. He was afterward Paymaster-General of the United States Army, and discharged the duties of the office with great ability, giving entire satisfaction, being honest, faithful, and industrious.

He died in 1884, having been on the retired-list four years, of disease contracted while in active service in the Army and in the line of his duty, as shown by the certificate of the surgeon of the United States Army, which certificate is appended to this report He graduated in the Military Academy of the United States; was a scholar of distinction; was assistant professor of mathematics and of natural and experimental philosophy at the United States Military Academy in 1837. He was the author of some valuable books, which honored him. He was a pure and devout Christian, of high honor, a warm and generous friend, and a kind husband and father, as brave as the bravest and as gentle as the gentlest. His widow, the only wife he ever had, his companion for many years and the mother of his children, is old and infirm, with but little money or property and with three children and a very old and helpless maiden sister of her husband to support.

Wherefore they report the bill without amendment, with the opinion that it ought to pass.

I certify that Brig. Gen. Benjamin Alvord, United States Army, retired, was at the date of his retirement suffering from chronic diarrhea, for which he had been repeatedly treated by me during the last two years of his active service. Though for many years, and dating as far in the past as the Mexican war, General Alvord had been frequently compelled to apply for medical treatment for diarrhea, to which he was strongly predisposed, it did not become a permanent and chronic disease until in 1876, and when in the line of his duty as Paymaster-General. At that time and subsequently his health became so much impaired as to necessitate the daily use of remedies and led to feeble action of the heart, general debility, and organic disease of the kidneys, of which he died.

BASIL NORRIS,
Surgeon, United States Army.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., December 8, 1884.

True copy.

WM. B. ROCHESTER,
Paymaster-General United States Army.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to oppose that bill, but I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if the widows of any of our brigadier-generals have been put upon the pension-rolls at the rate of $50 per month?

Mr. WOLFORD. This man has, perhaps, as good a record as any man who ever served in the Army.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. That is not the question.

Mr. WOLFORD. I want to say that to start with. It will not take a minute.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Will the gentleman answer the question that I have asked him?

Mr. WOLFORD. The gentleman who introduced this bill has gone to the Pension Office and has a list of some ten or a dozen names of persons who have been placed upon the pension-roll at the rate of $50 a month.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The widows of brigadier-generals?

Mr. WOLFORD. Yes, sir. I send this list to the desk and ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

List of persons whose pensions have been increased by special act to $50 per month:

Anna J. Foster, July 5, 1884.
Virginia Zeilin, July 5, 1884.
Apolline A. Blair, July 5, 1884.
Martha T. Stribling, July 5, 1884.
Ellida J. Middleton, July 5, 1884.
Sarah N. Crane, July 5, 1884.
Fannie S. Beaumont, July 5, 1884.
Mary T. Barnes, July 5, 1884.
Betsy A. Mower, July 5, 1884.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I move to amend that bill.

Mr. WOLFORD. I hope the gentleman will not offer any amendment to it.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I am not going to make the point of order upon the bill. I know you will pass it as it comes from the committee; but I feel it a duty to move to strike out "$50 per month" and insert "to pay her a pension subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws." This will give her a pension of $30 a month. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The amendment was not agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARGARET M'CARTY.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I now call up from the Calendar the bill (H. R. 6946) for the relief of Margaret McCarty. It will be found on page 46 of the Calendar.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the requirements and regulations of the pension laws, the name of Margaret McCarty, widow of W. H. McCarty, a member of Company C, Twenty-first Regiment of Iowa Infantry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. HOLMES) is as follows:

Margaret McCarty is the widow of William H. McCarty, late a private in Company C, Twenty-first Iowa Volunteer Infantry. He enlisted on the 16th day of August, 1862, and was mustered in the same day, and was discharged on the 2d day of June, 1865.

The soldier, William H. McCarty, originally made application for invalid pension, which was executed September 29, 1879, and was filed October 28, 1879, and proofs introduced. This application was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that the claim was not pending in the Pension Office at the time of the soldier's death, under section 4717 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. The soldier died October 22, 1879, at Rockdale, Iowa. The widow, Margaret McCarty, afterward filed her application for pension on the 5th day of September, 1882, which was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that the death of the soldier was not occasioned by disability contracted in the service. The official records of the Surgeon-General's Office show that William H. McCarty was taken, on the transport Crescent City, July 2, 1863, with anasarca of the lower extremities, and was transferred July 11, 1863; was admitted to Adams general hospital at Memphis, Tenn., July 11, 1863, with disease of the joints, and returned to duty August 27, 1863; was admitted to University general hospital at New Orleans, La., July 26, 1864, with scorbutus and rheumatism, and returned to duty September 18, 1864; he was admitted to the Overton general hospital Memphis, Tenn., December 17, 1864, from the field, with chronic diarrhea, and transferred February 4, 1865; was admitted to the small-pox general hospital, Memphis, Tenn., February 5, 1865, with small-pox, and mustered out June 3, 1865. The records and evidence show that the soldier was a sound man and in good health when he entered the service. During his earlier service he was taken prisoner and confined for some months in Camp Tyler, Texas. While confined there he was severely attacked with scurvy, from which he seems never to have recovered. The scurvy attacked his teeth and gums and lower extremities. There is considerable evidence of his procuring medicine and of physicians' attendance during the time from his discharge to his death; but the evidence also shows that he lacked much in medicine and attendance, being too poor to procure them. The immediate cause of his death, as found by the Pension Office, was hemorrhage from abdominal scirrhus (cancer), and although the medical department of the Pension Office did not attribute his death to the disability contracted in the service, yet the evidence, aside from a technical medical conclusion, points undeniably to that fact. The soldier never recovered from the scurvy, and was sick almost continuously, and declining from the time of leaving the service until his death. We think the preponderance of the evidence and the record shows conclusively that his disability originated in the service, and, without recounting in detail the evidence which would lead us to this conclusion, your committee think it sufficient to say that they recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

DAVID FRIED.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I now call up the bill (H. R. 7308) for the relief of David Fried.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of David Fried, late a private in Company F, Fifty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, with arrears from the date of the injury.

Mr. MORRILL. I would like to ask if that bill grants arrears?

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. It does.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the bill.

The bill was again read.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out the words "with arrears from the date of the injury."

We have rejected hundreds of cases in the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I object in toto to granting arrears.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I would like to have the report in this case read, and then I shall have something to say about it.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

The claimant, David Fried, enlisted as a private in Company F, Fifty-ninth Indiana Volunteers, December 19, 1861, and was discharged April 4, 1862, on account of gunshot wound, causing the loss on right hand of index finger between first and second joints, the second finger at first joint, and stiffness of the third finger at first joint. Claimant made application for pension, which was rejected by the Pension Office for the reason that the claimant did not prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, that he himself did not purposely discharge his gun, thereby causing the injury. The evidence is conclusive that the claimant was a good soldier; that he had been on picket duty, returned to his tent, lay down and went to sleep; that by some means (not testified to) the straw or cornstalks that were used for bedding caught fire; that his gun, which was in close proximity, was discharged, causing the injury as above set forth. The fact that no one saw the fire communicated to the gun, in the opinion of this committee, cuts no figure in the case, as it was for that reason, undoubtedly, that the accident occurred. If the claimant or his comrades had seen the fire communicated to where the guns were lying, as a matter of course they would have extinguished it.

The special examiner in this case says he can not show that this man shot himself—

"But that the burden is on the claimant; he is to prove his claim, at least so far as to exclude a reasonable doubt that he did not purposely wound himself."

This the examiner says the claimant has not done. This theory is in direct opposition to the doctrine enunciated by this committee, that the soldier is entitled to the benefit of any reasonable doubt that may exist.

The best evidence in this case, the discharge and certificate of disability of the claimant, seems to have entirely escaped the notice of this special examiner. The captain of his company and the surgeon of the regiment both certify to the accidental discharge of the gun, causing the loss of three fingers.

Your committee are of the opinion that the Government is debarred at this late day of going back on a record made over twenty years ago, and would therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. Now I move to amend by striking out the words I have suggested, so that it will leave the pension subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, in the first place I must be permitted to say to the committee that I believe the doctrine of granting arrears of pension is right. I think there ought to be arrears granted in all cases.

But this case is different from many of the cases we are called upon to consider here. In the great majority of cases which the committee is called to act upon the pension has not been allowed by the Department because there is no law under which it can be allowed or because the general law does not reach the particular case. But that is not the question presented by the present case.

Here is a case where the claim was filed in ample time, long before the expiration of the time prescribed, years before July, 1880, where, if the Pension Department had done its duty, there would have been a pension allowed with arrears. As I have said, it is not a kind of case which the law does not reach where the applicant did not do his duty. This applicant did his full duty. He filed his claim, made his proof, and the Pension Department refused the claim on the extraordinary statement that he had not proved beyond reasonable doubt that the injury might not have been inflicted purposely.

The committee very properly say that the Pension Office overlooked the most important part of the testimony, and that was that the captain and the surgeon of the regiment, at the time of this soldier's discharge, both certify to the fact of the accidental wound. I think this is a case in which there ought to be arrears, and I think there ought to be arrears in all cases of this character where the applicant has done his full duty and filed his claim in time. There are no laches here. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Very well; if gentlemen do not wish to hear I will submit the matter to a vote of the committee.

Mr. MATSON. As this bill was reported by me, I wish to say that evidently by some inadvertence the latter clause in relation to arrears was not stricken out. That clause was placed at the end of the bill and by some inadvertence was left in. I will say it has been the universal practice of the Committee on Invalid Pensions not to grant arrears. That has been the practice not alone of the committee of this House, but it has been the practice of the committees of former Congresses. No arrears have been granted.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. And it has made no difference what the merits of the case were.

Mr. MATSON. I wish to say just one word more. I will say to my friend from Indiana [Mr. STOCKSLAGER] there have been cases presented to the Committee on Invalid Pensions that were stronger in their equitable and legal merits than this; and the arrears were not allowed because it has been the uniform practice of Congress to refuse them.

The amendment offered by Mr. MORRILL was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LOUISA A. ESTES.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask consent to take up the bill (H. R. 7709) granting a pension to Louisa A. Estes. It is on page 52 of the Calendar.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Louisa A. Estes, widow of John Estes, late of Company E, Seventy-third Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, subject to the conditions and regulations of the pension laws.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I call for the reading of the report, unless it be long. In that case let there be a statement in explanation of the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The report is quite lengthy. I suggest that the gentleman from Kansas make a statement.

Mr. MORRILL. I will state in a very few words the substance of this case. This soldier died, as three physicians testify, from the effects of a wound received in the arm. He was shot in the arm and the bone worked out until no bone was left below the elbow. One physician was called who certified that the soldier died from the effects of opium. Three other physicians said they attended the man and saw no effects of opium. The druggist who furnished him all his medicine said he never supplied him any opium during twenty years of acquaintance with him. The three physicians said he died from the effects of nervous prostration caused by the injury he received during the war.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Did the three physicians certify that before the Pension Bureau?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes; and the Pension Department refused the application, as they always refuse such applications, on the evidence of one man. If fifty physicians certified that the man never took opium and one certified that he did, the Pension Office would have rejected the claim.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

We find that Louisa A. Estes is the widow of John Estes, late a private in Company E, Seventy-third Regiment Indiana Volunteers, who died February 24, 1881. The claim of the widow for pension was rejected on the ground that his death was not the result of his military service, and the only proof in support of this position is the affidavit of Dr. William B. Davis, who first saw the soldier February 7, seventeen days before he died. Dr. Davis testifies:

"The immediate cause of death was anæmia. The anæmia was due to derangement of the digestive apparatus. This derangement of the digestive apparatus was due to a derangement of the nervous system. The derangement of the nervous system was due to the opium habit."

Dr. Winfrey, late assistant surgeon of volunteers, testifies that he was well acquainted with said soldier for about seven years prior to his death, and was his family physician up to within a short time of his death, and does not remember of ever prescribing opium for said soldier or know of his taking any.

Dr. Ott, a physician in good standing, testifies:

"I attended, as a physician, John Estes, of the town of Wathena, at the time of his death, in said town, on the 25th of February, 1881. In my judgment, the cause of his death was complete prostration of the nervous system, together with some brain affection (the latter, however, not having been proven by a post-mortem examination); said disease being caused by a constant drain upon the system by an injury claimed to have been received during the war."

Aug. Miller, for sixteen years postmaster of Wathena, and for twenty years the druggist of the village, a man of unquestionable integrity, says:

"From September, 1880, until February 25, 1881, I furnished all the medicine he required, and if there was any opium in any of the medicine I do not know it. Mr. Estes, in his lifetime, bought all of his medicine of me, and he never bought 5 cents' worth of opium of me. Furthermore, he did not look like one addicted to the opium habit, and it is my candid opinion that he was free from that vice; and any one who knows anything about the circumstances of the death of John Estes must admit that it was from the wound received in the Army that he died."

Several neighbors testify that they were intimate with the deceased and never knew him to use opium nor heard of his doing so.

Dr. J. F. Sanders also testifies:

"I was well acquainted with John Estes (deceased), and treated him in the beginning of his last illness. It was a nervous prostration, which he told me at the time he thought came from the wound in his arm. I will also state that I never knew of his taking opium in any form, and know he did not take any while I treated him. I did not treat him long—was acquainted with him about a year, and never heard of his using opium till I read it in your (Commissioner's) letter. I believe it to be false."

The soldier received a severe wound in his arm while in battle in October, 1864, for which he applied for a pension in 1865, and received it until his death. The examining board of surgeons reported the disability equivalent to the loss of the hand. Four physicians have testified in this case. All agree that he died from the effects of nervous prostration. Three of them say it was the result of the wound; the other says it was caused by the use of opium. The village druggist, several of the intimate neighbors, his wife, three of the physicians say they never knew or heard of his using opium. The other, who saw him for the first time seventeen days before he died, says his disease was caused by opium. The preponderance of evidence is largely against this theory. The widow is left penniless, with a large family of small children.

Your committee, without hesitation, recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CREET H. DOUGHERTY.

Mr. LOWRY. I call up the bill (H. R. 383) granting a pension to Creet H. Dougherty.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Creet H. Dougherty, late of Company E, Tenth Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

That claimant enlisted in the military service of the United States as a private in Company E, Tenth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, August 30, 1861, and was honorably discharged July 4, 1865.

May 19, 1874, he filed a declaration for pension, alleging that April 15, 1865, near Raleigh, N. C., while on double-quick march, he received rupture of the left side from his cartridge-box striking him, which was rejected August 18, 1882, on the ground of no record of alleged disability and claimant's inability to furnish satisfactory evidence of origin of the same.

The incurrence of the hernia as alleged by claimant is shown by the evidence of Lieutenant Jamison, of claimant's company and regiment. He is shown to have been treated for hernia immediately on his discharge from the service, and the continuance of the disability is conclusively shown by both professional and lay testimony.

That the soldier was free from hernia prior to and at the time of his enlistment is also clearly established.

Your committee find that the disability of this soldier was contracted in the military service of the United States and in line of duty, and that he is entitled to a pension, and therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. It seems this soldier was wounded by his cartridge-box. I would like to have some explanation how that could happen. I have carried a cartridge-box, and I do not know any way in which I could have been wounded by it.

Mr. LOWRY. It is set forth in the report that the hernia, on account of which this claim is made, was incurred in the service. That is clearly established by the proof. It is also shown that the specific mode in which the hernia was incurred was by the cartridge-box striking the soldier at a time when he was on double-quick march. The committee state in their unanimous report that the soldier was free from hernia at the time he entered the service, but immediately on his discharge was treated therefor. As to the particular way in which the cartridge-box struck him, or how it was propelled against him, I am unable to state. The committee report that they are entirely satisfied with the justice of the claim.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. ELIZABETH A. RANDALL.

Mr. POLAND. I call up the bill (H. R. 1587) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth A. Randall, widow of Capt. Fernando Randall. The bill is not on the printed Calendar, as the report was only made to-day.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the conditions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Elizabeth A. Randall, widow of Capt. Fernando Randall, late captain of Company G, Seventh Regiment of Vermont Veteran Volunteers, and that such pension commence at the death of her said husband.

Mr. POLAND. The report in this case is exceedingly voluminous, and I do not think it will be necessary to read it in full. This Captain Randall and his wife (now his widow) lived in the town adjoining that in which I live. They are people whom I have known for many years. I knew Captain Randall before he went into the Army and after he came home from the Army, down to the time of his death. Captain Randall made application to the Pension Bureau for a pension. It turned out that, on the inspection of his papers, the medical examiner was for giving the pension for one disability (there being two), and the chief of the medical board was for granting it for the other disability, and the result was that between the two, as they could not agree upon the cause for which the pension should be given, they gave him none at all. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. I move to amend by striking out the words "and that said pension commence at the death of her said husband."

The amendment was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM STRICKLAND.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call up the bill (H. R. 3994) granting a pension to William Stricklin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Stricklin, late second lieutenant of Company G, Third Regiment Illinois Volunteers in the Mexican war, at the rate of $15 per month.

The amendments reported by the committee are as follows: In line 6 strike out the word "Stricklin" and insert "Strickland." In line 8 strike out the words "at the rate of $15 per month" and insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to William Strickland."

The report (by Mr. STOCKSLAGER) was read, as follows:

This claim is now pending in the Pension Office, and has not been allowed because of a lack of medical testimony. The said Strickland was second lieutenant of Company G, Third Illinois Volunteers, in the Mexican war, and a lieutenant and two privates, together with other reliable witnesses, testify to the soldier's disability.

From the evidence the committee have no doubt that the claimant is clearly entitled to the pension, and the passage of the bill is recommended.

The committee move to amend the bill by substituting the name "Strickland" for the name "Stricklin," as it appears, the latter being an error. And also by striking out the words "at a rate of $15 per month" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pensions laws."

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LEMUEL J. BENNETT.

Mr. PERKINS. I call up the bill (H. R. 552) granting a pension to Lemuel J. Bennett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Lemuel J. Bennett, late of Company —, First Illinois Infantry Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. STOCKSLAGER) was read, as follows:

While serving in Company E, First Illinois Volunteers, in the Mexican war, Mr. Bennett contracted, it appears, rheumatism, disease of the bowels, and fever, which permanently disabled him; but his claim for pension has been rejected because of his inability to prove the origin of disability in a satisfactory manner. It is clear to the committee, however, that he is entitled to a pension, and the bill is reported back with the recommendation that it pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN W. ROBSON.

Mr. JONES, of Wisconsin. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 3833) for the relief of John W. Robson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, arrearages included, the name of John W. Robson, late a private in the Sixth Wisconsin Battery, at the same rate as other soldiers of similar disability.

The amendment reported by the committee is as follows: In lines 5 and 6, strike out the words "arrearages included."

The amendment was agreed to.

The report (by Mr. D. H. SUMNER) was read, as follows:

The accompanying bill asks that John W. Robson, of Madison, Wis., be placed upon the pension-rolls of his country, subject to all the limitations and provisions of the pension law.

His case is a sad one, and his cause meritorious to the last degree, the history of which shall be briefly recited.

John W. Robson, a native of Great Britain, who came to America in 1850, enlisted as a private at Milwaukee, Wis., in the Sixth Battery, Wisconsin Volunteers, September 13, 1861, going at once into training at Camp Utley, Racine, Wis. After training a little less than two months, he was not mustered in, but was discharged, because his body lacked half an inch of the prescribed height. He thus not only lost compensation during that period, but lost his own time and the proceeds of his private business, and was compelled to beat his way home without money, being aided a portion of the way by the kindness of a benevolent lady, who, hearing his parley with the railway conductor, paid the required fare.

A few months later, being still anxious to serve his adopted country, Mr. Robson was informed by Lieut. A. W. Bishop, now of the regular Army, that the question of undersize would probably not be again raised against him, as the needs of the Government were becoming more urgent, and to recruit a company of eleven men, and he should have a suitable office as a reward. He therefore recruited in Sauk County, Wisconsin, the company of eleven soldiers.

In the mean time Lieut. John W. Fancher returned and began recruiting for the Sixth Battery, and wanted Mr. Robson and his recruits. As the Sixth Battery was the one in which he originally enlisted, he went to Milwaukee, taking the eleven recruits, all of whom enlisted with him. Not having a knowledge of the ways of the world, Mr. Robson received no commission for his successful recruiting and enlistment, but went into and through the rebellion as a private, while the credit that belonged to him was enjoyed by Lieutenant Fancher.

After gathering several deserters and about thirty volunteers, Mr. Robson was sent to the front in charge of them, arriving at Rienzi, Miss., within twenty days and in time to participate in the terrible battle of Corinth, October 3 and 4, 1862, which was the first engagement of the Sixth Wisconsin Battery, that had enlisted more than a year before, and from which he had been excluded, as already mentioned.

Thus Mr. Robson, by reason of having been discharged for short stature, lacked about ninety days of being able to veteranize under the act of Congress of 1863. Those who enlisted first with him veteranized under that act and reenlisted, receiving $400 bounty and a forty-day furlough each. He had enlisted with them, but could not veteranize nor receive a furlough or a bounty. He participated in all the battles of his battery, and also served during the period while the veterans were enjoying their bounties and furloughs at home.

He was mustered out in July, 1865, having fought as long and in as many battles, for half as much money, as those who enlisted at the time of his first enlistment.

On returning home, he was taken ill with the rheumatism, chills and fever, and the malarious diseases contracted during army life. He was better and worse at intervals, sometimes confined to his room and sometimes able to be out. While partially convalescent, he was asked by Nye J. Gibbs, adjutant-general of Wisconsin, to superintend the firing of a national salute on the 22d of Februrary, 1866, in celebration of Washington's birthday.

Being an expert artilleryman, which was the reason of the request, he complied, though too ill to attempt any labor or business, and began firing from a cannon relinquished by the Federal Government. The gun, having an imperfection, of which fact, however, he was not aware, exploded a charge prematurely and severed his right arm at the shoulder and otherwise severely injured him.

The wounds were at once aggravated by the malarious poisons which his system had absorbed in the South, and which were still further developed and brought into activity by those injuries, and he is not healed to this day. For five years he was unable to walk without a staff and unable to work. For weeks and months together it was necessary to keep a child or nurse to carry food or drink to his mouth, so deeply were his bones affected by this malaria.

Finally the insidious poison left the wounded part and concentrated itself in his head. A portion of the skull bone was cleft; other portions are now loosening; the cranium is bare, cracked, and feverish, a source of infinite pain, suffering, trouble, and expense, and in such condition as to render traveling away from home impossible without an attendant.

Thus Mr. Robson, who served valiantly through the rebellion with his two brothers, is not only disabled for life, but is also an invalid for life. He was ill at the time of firing the salute of February 22, 1866, the direct effects of his army life; but as he had no hospital record, having served every day without a moment's furlough, and as his legitimate army illness was so overshadowed by and merged in with the results of the accident just mentioned that he and his physicians were for the time unable to clearly separate the legitimate results of the two, he did not apply for a pension. These same difficulties have ever since restrained him from asking an annuity under the general pension laws, though with his friends he never doubted the justness of his claims.

He was preparing to make an application for a pension when the explosion took place; but after that the physician who attended him (Dr. A. H. Rudd) died; the old war diseases mixed and merged with the wounds resulting from the explosion, so that subsequent medical advisers were unable to testify to his exact condition before the injury, though they agreed that his terrible afflictions were originally caused by army life, and thus he has been dragged along, close companion of despair, alternately renewed and deferred hope and poverty.

If those who wish, in dealing with the soldiers, to make the word of promise to the ear and break it to the heart desire, they can, indeed, balance themselves on the technical point that Mr. Robson did not suffer all his disabilities in battle; but he served every day for over three years faithfully and gallantly in the rebellion; the fact that he was one-fourth of an inch under the prescribed standard height deprived him of those bounties, privileges, and emoluments enjoyed by his taller comrades who enlisted with him; he gave his skill and services to fire a national salute in honor of the birth of the Father of his Country, which resulted in shattering an arm and shoulder, and intensifying the operations of the malaria absorbed in the Army; in short, he is disabled, one-armed, and an invalid for life, because, and only because, he was a soldier.

His present deplorable condition of poverty and physical ailments are the direct result of his service to his country, without any qualification or reservation whatever. Because, then, the circumstances attending his disability were such that it would be difficult for him to secure an adequate annuity under the general pension laws, should he, amid so many recipients of aid by special act of Congress, be denied justice?

Mr. Robson, when the country was in the throes of civil war and the result was quivering in the balance, might have fortified himself behind a technicality and even escaped the draft by showing that he was less than the standard height. But he did not. After being rejected once for this reason he tried again, when times were more troublous, and every faithful, patriotic volunteer was a precious gift, and being accepted in spite of the technicality of short stature, bore the burden of a private gunner to the end of the rebellion.

Can this great Government, which he helped to save and for and in whose service he has been physically ruined, now hide behind a paltry technicality, which he scorned in the hour of need, and deny him a few crumbs from our bursting Treasury? This Government must be just if not generous. It has been generous with thousands; let it now be just with this one crippled, sick, and pensionless veteran, the son of a foreign country, who can rest his cause upon nothing but his own merits and the honorable intentions and correct judgment of the Congress of the United States. Do not thrust him aside like an old stagehorse, because the country has had the benefit of his youth and strength, and has no further use for his sick and crippled body, for the time may come when we shall need the services of his young sons now struggling on through the poverty that patriotism entailed upon their father and upon them.

Wherefore your committee recommends the passage of said bill, provided, however, that the same be amended by striking out the words "arrearages included."

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

DAVID M. HARRISON.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 4626) for the relief of David M. Harrison.

No objection being made, the Clerk began to read the bill.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] will state his point of order.

Mr. MATSON. My point is that this is not a bill reported from either the Committee on Pensions or the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and that therefore its consideration is not in order at this time.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Mr. Chairman, I hope no objection will be made to the present consideration of this bill. It is the case of a lost pension check, and the object of the bill is simply to restore the check.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

AUGUSTUS JONES.

Mr. MILLER, of Texas. I call up the bill H. R. 5191, reported from the committee with amendments, granting a pension to Augustus Jones.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the pension now allowed to Augustus Jones, a soldier of the war of 1812, be increased from $8 per month to the sum of $25 per month, to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. JONES, of Texas) was read, as follows:

Augustus Jones, of Columbus, Colorado County, Texas, was born at Kaskaskia, Ill., February 18, 1796, and is now over 88 years old. He served in Capt. Henry Dodge's company of volunteers in 1812, and afterward in Capt. John Scott's company of Russell's regiment, and was honorably discharged in 1814. In the war with Mexico he raised a company and served in Rall's regiment throughout the campaign in Mexico, and was honorably discharged at the close of the war.

February 14, 1871, he was placed upon the pension-rolls at $8 per month. It appears from affidavits of three respectable physicians that said Jones has no means of support for himself and wife except his pension, which is his only means of support, and that he is physically and mentally unable to earn a living, being now nearly blind and very feeble.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment, namely: In line 5 strike out the word "five," so as to make it read "twenty dollars per month."

The amendment reported by the committee to strike out in line 5 the word "five," so as to make it read "twenty dollars per month," was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

T. A. MORTON.

Mr. MILLARD. I call up the bill (H. R. 7336) granting a pension to T. A. Morton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of T. A. Morton, late of Company E, Sixteenth Regiment New York Cavalry, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. BAGLEY) was as follows:

The petitioner, Truman A. Morton, enlisted June 30, 1863, as a private in Company E, Sixteenth Regiment New York Cavalry; was discharged January 17, 1864; filed declaration for pension February 16, 1876; application rejected June 14, 1878, for the reason that alleged injury was received prior to enlistment. His certificate of discharge shows he was discharged on account of deafness; but this was not the ground upon which he applied for a pension. The proof is ample that while Morton and other soldiers were driving in a herd of cattle, for the use of the Army of the Potomac, near Stafford Court House, Va., they had a skirmish with a detachment of Mosby's confederate cavalry; that Morton's horse was shot under him, and a horse of one of Mosby's men fell upon him, injuring him severely in the stomach and bowels. From this injury he has never recovered. He was sent to hospital in Washington, D. C., and discharged from Ladies' Hospital in New York. The testimony as to his soundness and full manly strength prior to and at the time of his enlistment is ample; also, as to the fall of horse upon him and injury therefrom.

Dr. Miller, of Warsaw, N. Y., testifies that he treated Morton for the injury in fall of 1863, when he was at home on furlough; that he treated him immediately after his discharge, and occasionally up to 1877; that said injury was in the right side and in the pyloric extremity of the stomach. Other witnesses testify as to his sickness and inability to work. In August, 1882, the examining board of surgeons state as follows, viz.: "Judging from his (Morton's) present condition and from the evidence before us, it is our belief that the said disability did originate in the service aforesaid and in the line of duty." Also, "that he was thrown from his horse and injured in stomach October 10, 1863," and that he "was laid up in hospital till January 17, 1864, and then discharged from results of said injury."

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EDWARD P. QUINN.

Mr. BAGLEY. I call up the bill (H. R. 7732) granting an increase of pension to Edward P. Quinn.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Edward P. Quinn, of the city of Albany, late a lieutenant of Company D, New York Volunteers, to the sum of $40 per month.

The report (by Mr. BAGLEY) is as follows:

The petitioner was a first lieutenant of Company D, One hundred and twenty-third Regiment New York Volunteers; enlisted June 2, 1863, and discharged May 15, 1865. He received a gunshot wound of the lower jaw in a battle near Kenesaw Mountain, Georgia, June 22, 1864, which shattered the bone, requiring the removal of one-third of it, and rendering him unable to chew food to any extent, and while the wound was unhealed there issued from it into the mouth a foul, bloody, purulent discharge. The soldier also lost the right eye by a fragment of a bursting shell.

For these disabilities the petitioner is now receiving a pension of $24 a month, and seeks by special act to increase it to $40 per month.

A board, consisting of three examining surgeons, under certificate dated September 8, 1873, says:

"That the ball entered the angle of lower jaw, left side, carrying away all of the left side of the jaw, and escaped by the mouth; that he is unable to masticate food and his health is very seriously impaired, and he is emaciating; also that the right eye is destroyed."

Another certificate gives substantially the following description: Gunshot wound, lower jaw. Had resection of the whole of left side of lower jaw, causing great deformity and preventing the mastication of food.

David Little, examining surgeon, says:

"Ball entered near angle of lower jaw on left side and emerged from mouth, carrying away a portion of the jaw. There is a small part of left lower jaw remaining, but it is united to the sound part and plays about loosely with the movement of the mouth; all teeth of lower left jaw are gone. Mastication is greatly impaired. Claimant suffers constant neuralgic pains."

The petitioner is in a bad plight, which the statements sufficiently show. The Pension Office has no power to increase the pension. Similar cases have come before the committee and have been reported favorably, and the House has without hesitation concurred in the reports. The committee think the petitioner is entitled to the relief asked for, and recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment: After the words "Company D," in line 6, insert "One hundred and twenty-third."

The amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to insert before "New York Volunteers" the words "One hundred and twenty-third," was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EMILY AGNEL.

Mr. REED. I desire to take up the bill (H. R. 765) for the relief of Emily Agnel.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas Emily Agnel, widow of Lieut. Col. and Professor Hyacinthe Robert Agnel, of the United States Army, was placed on the pension-roll on the 16th day of December, 1880, and from which date payment of said pension was made: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay or cause to be paid to the aforesaid Emily Agnel pension, at the rate prescribed by law, from the date of the death of the said Hyacinthe Robert Agnel: Provided, That all sums previously paid on account of pension to said Emily Agnel be deducted.

The report (by Mr. STOCKSLAGER) was as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 765) for the relief of Emily Agnel, have considered the same, and beg leave to report in the language of the Senate report on Senate bill 475, for the relief of said Emily Agnel, which your committee indorse, together with the recommendation that the bill pass.

"[Senate Report No. 510, Forty-eighth Congress, first session.]

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 475) granting arrears of pension to Emily Agnel, have considered the same, and respectfully report:

"The claimant, Emily Agnel, is the widow of Hyacinthe Robert Agnel, a professor of French in the United States Military Academy at West Point. He was appointed in 1840, and was continuously on duty there until his death, February 10, 1871. There seems to be no question as to the fact that Professor Agnel died in the service and line of duty, and two witnesses swear that his death was caused by 'intense mental strain and application to his duties.'

"The widow filed her application in the Pension Office December 16, 1880, and was finally pensioned June 12, 1882, at the rate of $30 per month from the date of filing such application. This time for the commencement of the pension was properly fixed under the act of March 3, 1879. The claimant now, by the present bill, asks for arrears from the death of her husband, February 10, 1871, until December 16, 1880, when her present pension began. To support this claim the claimant has filed with this committee her affidavit, that of her son, Francis W. Agnel, and that of James W. Covert, ex-member of Congress from New York, with other papers, showing the following facts:

"That Professor Agnel left an estate of less than $1,000, and after his decease his widow, now over 70 years of age, depended upon a son-in-law, Hiram Cranston, for counsel and assistance, who, at her request, instituted inquiries as to what was due her from the Government. She swears he assured her there was no provision of law to pension her, and that such was the common belief at the military post that she became impressed with this belief, or otherwise she would have lost no time in filing an application; that she also learned of an application made to the Pension Office by the widow of Professor of Ethics and Chaplain John W. French, in which the office disallowed his claim as a professor, and only allowed him a pension as a chaplain, and that she concluded therefore from that fact that it would prove of no avail to make application to the Commissioner, and finally abandoned all idea of applying under the pension laws.

"She further swears that upon laying the case before her Congressional Representative, James W. Covert, she was advised to apply to Congress for relief, which she did by a bill introduced on January 26, 1880 (H. R. 3940, Forty-sixth Congress), which, however, failed to pass; and that it was after the last day of June, 1880, when, under the advice of friends and an attorney, she resolved to apply to the Pension Office with the sole idea of getting the case before the Attorney-General for an opinion, and that it was, as she anticipated, rejected by the Commissioner, but a favorable opinion finally rendered by the Attorney-General. She also swears that she would have made application to the Commissioner of Pensions in the first instance instead of to Congress had it not been made known to her that the Department failed to recognize the position or rank her husband held as within the provisions of the pension laws.

"The affidavit of the claimant's son, Francis W. Agnel, is substantially to the same effect. He swears Cranston, with whom claimant resided, investigated the subject and advised her an application for pension would prove futile, and maintained this opinion till his death in 1877; that about 1877 claimant was informed as to the case of Professor French, and requested the affiant to investigate it, which he did, and discovered that the widow of said Professor French was to that date the only widow of a professor who had applied for a pension to the Commissioner of Pensions on the strength of her husband's professorship in the Army or the Military Academy, and that it had not been allowed; that he so informed the claimant, and they both concluded it would be of no avail for her to make application.

"He further swears he stated the case to his Congressional representative, James W. Covert, who advised Congressional action as the only measure of relief open to the widow, and in consequence a bill was introduced but failed to pass; that finally on his advice, with a view of obtaining more authoritative evidence in the time intervening between the completion of the second session of the Forty-sixth Congress and the convening of the Forty-seventh Congress, and for the use of the committee in Congress, and with a hope of obtaining through the Department of the Interior a reference to the Attorney-General, and that the latter's opinion might prove favorable, an application was made to the Pension Office, but subsequently to the last day of June, 1880.

"The affidavit of ex-Rrepresentative Covert corroborates the above statements in regard to himself, and states 'that despite my uttermost efforts the said measure failed, and that from and including the period of the introduction of the said bill, and for some time subsequent to the last day of June, 1880, from the circumstances of the case, and from my investigation of it at the Pension Bureau and elsewhere, I had formed the impression that Emily Agnel was ineligible for pension under the general law, and that her sole relief vested in Congress.'

"The papers in the case show that the case was approved by the examiner in the Pension Office at $30 a month and certificate was made out. Before it was mailed the Commissioner directed it should be canceled and a new one issued at $8 a month. This latter was canceled and the claim rejected by order of the Secretary of the Interior, February 20, 1882. Upon request of Hon. Walter A. Wood, of the House of Representatives, it was submitted to the Attorney-General for his opinion, which was that the effect of the law making the professors of the Military Academy a part of the Army, and the law relative to their appointment and retirement is to make them commissioned officers of the Army, and that as in pay and allowances they are assimilated to the rank of colonel and lieutenant-colonel, they are, in case they contract disability under the conditions set forth in section 4693, entitled to pension at the same rate as officers of the rank of colonel and lieutenant-colonel. This opinion was concurred in by the Secretary of the Interior, and the present pension allowed.

"The papers in the case of John W. French, referred to by the claimant in this case, have been examined, and show the following facts:

"Professor French died July 8, 1871. The widow filed her claim February 20, 1877, and it was admitted June 6, 1877, at the rate of $20 per month, the full rate allowed a chaplain's widow. The fact of his having been a professor was entirely ignored.

"December 17, 1877, the widow filed an application for increase to $25, because her husband, as professor of ethics, &c., at West Point, was entitled to rank as major. This claim was rejected January 15, 1878, 'on the ground that the pension laws do not provide for professor of ethics, and attorney so informed. The appointment as chaplain conferred the full rank as captain and no more. The rank claimed for (major) was an assimilated rank and no more. His mere relief from duty as professor would have stripped him of rank as major.'

"It appears that this case then remained in statu quo under this decision until February 12, 1882, when a communication was addressed to the Pension Office on behalf of Mrs. French, alleging that Mrs. Agnel had been pensioned at $30, and asking whether Mrs. French was not entitled to the increase she had before claimed as a professor's widow. June 21, 1882, Mrs. French formally applied for correction in the rate and rank, referring to decision in Mrs. Agnel's case as a precedent. September 26, 1882, there was a reissue to correct rate and service to $25 from the date of the death of Professor French, thus giving her arrears to date.

"It appears the question was submitted to the Commissioner by the reviewing clerk, and he replied as follows:

"'I think the rate of pension in this case should be $25, the total rate of major. The question involved is the same as that decided in the claim of the widow of Professor Agnel, cited by you.'

"It would therefore appear that the allegations in the present case as to the action taken and position held by the Department in regard to the right of a professor's widow to a pension are corroborated by the records. The Commissioner of Pensions states, under date of March 4, 1884, that the cases of Professor French and Professor Agnel are the only cases of that character filed in his office.

"The Commissioner of Pensions has, further, made a positive recommendation in this case, which your committee deem of sufficient importance to insert in extenso. It is as follows:

"'PENSION OFFICE, March 26, 1884.

"'SIR: On the 21st instant I forwarded to the honorable Committee on Pensions, United States Senate, the application for arrears of pension of Mrs. Emily Agnel, widow of Professor Hyacinthe Robert Agnel, certificate No. 196076, which was rejected on the ground that the original application was not filed in this office until December 16, 1880, and from which date the pension was made to commence as provided by section 2, act approved March 3, 1879.

"'It was my intention, at the time of transmission of said application for arrears, to set forth the equities in the claim, but through inadvertence they were omitted. It appears that shortly after the death of the claimant's husband correspondence was held with this office as to her title to pension, and the office decided that there was no provision of law under which she could be granted a pension, as her husband was not regularly in the service, but a professor of French in the Military Academy. Subsequently the claimant's son, in 1877, called at the office and had a conversation in relation to the claim with my predecessor, who the son states informed him that in a similar claim adverse action had been taken, consequently the claim could not be favorably considered under the existing laws. Because of the position taken by the office the claimant thought it impracticable to file her claim with the Commissioner of Pensions, and sought relief through Congressional enactment by filing her petition in January, 1880, some six months prior to the expiration of the limitation prescribed by the act of March 3, 1879; hence it appears that the office was instrumental in the delay in filing the application, and by which the claimant was denied the pension from the date of death of her husband, and in view of said facts which establish an equity of which I can not take cognizance, it is recommended that the petition of the claimant be favorably considered by Congress.

"'Very respectfully,

"'W. W. DUDLEY, Commissioner.

"'Hon. JOHN I. MITCHELL,
"'Chairman Committee on Pensions.'

"In view of all the circumstances in this case, your committee think the widow equitably entitled to pension from the death of her husband, and therefore report the bill with recommendation that it pass with the following amendment, namely:

"Insert after the word 'directed,' in line 4, the following words: 'To readjudicate the pension claim of Emily Agnel, widow of Hyacinthe Robert Agnel, as if her application had been filed in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions prior to the 1st day of July, 1880, and.'"

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I can not let this bill go through without calling attention to it. It is a bill reported by the Committee on Pensions, giving this lady a pension on account of the death of her husband, and as will be observed it contains a provision for the payment of arrears. The only reason that can be assigned for allowing arrears of pension in this case is that the widow failed to file her application in proper time because the Commissioner of Pensions had informed her she was not entitled to a pension. Upon this ground she delayed filing her application until a decision was rendered that the widows of persons dying in the Government service as professors at West Point were entitled to pensions. This is the only ground for taking this case out of the general rule. I have called attention to the matter so that members may know what they are voting upon.

Mr. REED. I am bound to say, Mr. Chairman, that the statement of the gentleman from Alabama so far as it goes is correct; but it does not quite cover the whole ground. Application was made in this case, and the Commissioner of Pensions gave information that under the present state of the law it was impossible for a pension to be granted. Thereupon and on account of that statement, instead of proceedings being had at the Pension Office, application was at once made to Congress. Afterward, when the matter came to the knowledge of the Attorney-General, he rendered a decision that these cases were pensionable. Thereupon application was made at the Pension Office, and a pension was granted.

I have here a letter from the late Commissioner of Pensions, Mr. Dudley, stating explicitly (I do not think it necessary to occupy time in reading the letter) that it was the fault of the Commissioner that the application for a pension was not prosecuted in proper time; and in this letter it is recommended on account of the very apparent equities of the case, that the relief proposed in this bill be granted by Congress. I submit that this recommendation is just, and that a decision in favor of the relief proposed in this bill would be a righteous decision.

Mr. MATSON. This proposed pension touches very nearly the line of civil pensions. My understanding is that the husband of this lady never saw any field service; that his service was simply at West Point as a professor. The proposition now is to give the widow arrears of pensions—a thing refused night after night by this House to those who have seen the hardest kind of military service in the field. I do not think this is right.

Mr. REED. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest to him a distinction? The ground on which arrears of pension are in general refused by the House is that the cases coming before the House are outside of the law. This is a case which is entirely within the law. A pension has been granted, not by Congress, but by the Commissioner of Pensions, in pursuance of law. This statement seems to meet the suggestion that this is not a pensionable case. All that this bill is intended to do is to rectify a mistake made by an officer of the Government, whereby this woman was prevented from receiving her pension as early as she should have received it. I submit that under the circumstances this bill does not come within the rule adopted by the House with regard to arrears of pension.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Chairman, I apprehend the gentleman from Maine is not ignorant of that principle of law which excuses no one for ignorance of it. Now, so far as this claimant having been misled is concerned, I doubt not he states the fact. I understand the case that way too, but the fact remains that she failed to file her application in time. There are thousands and tens of thousands of widows in this country who had no knowledge at all of the fact that the arrears-of-pension act had passed, and tens of thousands who filed their pension claims shortly after the time had expired within which they could file their claims for arrears. The question is whether you are going to make an exception of the widow of this man who never saw any field service at all, and refuse pensions to the widows of men who were killed on the field of battle and who did service. I do not think it is right. I can not bring myself to believe this proposition is a righteous one.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass? The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. MATSON. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 18.

So the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ROBERT CAREY.

Mr. HILL. I call up the bill (H. R. 6011) granting an increase of pension to Robert Carey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Robert Carey, late a private in Company I, Ninety-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, at $72 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out "$72" and insert "$45."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELMINA P. SPENCER.

Mr. NUTTING. I call up a bill (H. R. 7262) increasing the pension of Elmina P. Spencer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the pension of Mrs. Elmina P. Spencer be, and the same is hereby, increased to $25 per month; and the Commissioner of Pensions is hereby authorized and directed to place the name of said Elmina P. Spencer on the pension-roll as a pensioner of the United States for the sum of $25 per month.

The amendments of the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4 strike out "$25 per month" and insert "$20 per month;" and in line 8 strike out "$25" and insert "$20;" and add to the bill "said $20 per month being in lieu of all other pensions heretofore granted."

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I should like to hear the report in that case read.

The report (by Mr. BAGLEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions having examined the proofs submitted to it to sustain the right to an increase of pension to Elmina P. Spencer, submit the following facts and circumstances in justification of their favorable action on said bill:

Elmina P. Spencer, in 1862, went out with the One hundred and forty-seventh Regiment New York State Volunteers, as its matron. She joined the regiment at Oswego City, N. Y., on the 27th day of September, 1862, and went with the regiment into active service. She remained with the regiment at Washington, D. C., performing efficient duty as matron and nurse in the regimental hospital. She administered to the wants of the soldiers who were sick with great energy and untiring zeal until November 30, 1862, when the regiment was ordered to join the Army of the Potomac at Falmouth, Va. Women were not permitted at that time to stay with the regiments at the front.

For a little time she was employed as nurse at the Patent Office hospital, Washington, D. C., and then returned to Oswego, N. Y., to gather supplies for the sick of the Army, and was permitted to rejoin the regiment in January, 1863, at Bell Plain, Va. She brought with her at this time a large quantity of supplies which she had gathered with great labor from those who sympathized with the sick and wounded of the Union Army. She was soon after assigned to duty as matron of the first division hospital, First Army Corps, under A. J. Wood, surgeon Second Wisconsin Volunteers. She again rejoined her regiment the last of May, 1863, near Falmouth, Va. Here she remained, attending to the wants of the sick and wounded with great energy and remarkable devotion, until the 12th of June, when the regiment started on the memorable and world-renowned Gettysburg campaign. Here the devotion and heroism of this woman was displayed by her marching with the regiment on this campaign. She took with her supplies for the sick and wounded, and she was ever active in encouraging and helping those who needed assistance.

She knew no fear; she was never too weary to minister personally to the wants of those who were sick or wounded; she never seemed conscious of weariness; the way was never too long or the roads too muddy for her; she was on the battlefield of Gettysburg, exposed to shot and shell, busy during the whole battle furnishing assistance by way of supplies of food, water, and medicine to the sick and wounded. Her acts of devotion at this one battle places her in the first rank of heroic women of the rebellion. She was agent for the distribution of supplies from the various soldiers' aid societies of New York State. She followed the fortunes of the Union Army through its darkest days. She left home and comforts for the dangers and discomforts of the march and battlefield. Her husband was in the same regiment, and died in the service, and on account of his death she now receives a pension of $8 per month. This sum is entirely inadequate for her support, however. She has no child, or home, or property. She is 65 years of age, and bowed down with poverty and the racking pains of disease. She can not, at the most, live long. She is now an object of charity, and the American people owe it to themselves as well as her that the pension be increased from $8 per month to $20 per month.

Several Grand Army posts, scattered from New York to California, have petitioned that this relief be granted.

She was injured by being struck with a spent ball at City Point, Va., from the explosion of an ammunition barge, and now suffers from its effects.

The committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words "twenty-five," in line 4, and inserting the word "twenty" in place thereof. And the committee also amend said bill by adding the following words after the word "month," in line 8: "said $20 per month being in lieu of all other pensions heretofore granted."

Before the reading of the report was concluded,

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania, said: Enough of that report has already been read to satisfy me that this lady is entitled to a pension.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. If my friend from Pennsylvania is satisfied, I am.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I am.

The amendments of the committee were agreed to; and the bill as amended was reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY A. GREENE.

Mr. LE FEVRE. I call up a bill (H. R. 7830) granting a pension to the widow of the late Commander S. Dana Greene, United States Navy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, at the rate of $50 per month, the name of Mary A. Greene, widow of the late Commander S. Dana Greene, United States Navy.

The report (by Mr. ROBINSON, of New York) was read, as follows:

It appears the petitioner is the widow of Commander Samuel Dana Greene, United States Navy, recently deceased.

Commander Greene entered the Navy September 21, 1855, and was actively employed until the time of his death with the exception of eleven months. On January 23, 1862, Commander Greene, then a lieutenant, was ordered to the Monitor, which was at that time being prepared for service at Hampton Roads. Prior to that date he had interested himself in the vessel and thoroughly examined her construction and design, and notwithstanding the many gloomy predictions of naval officers and officers of the merchant marine as to the great probability of her sinking at sea, he volunteered to go in her, and at the request of Lieutenant (now Admiral) Worden, her commander, was ordered as executive officer.

From the date of his orders he applied himself unremittingly and intelligently to the study of her peculiar qualities and to her fitting and equipment. He remained in the Monitor throughout her whole career, taking part in the engagement at Hampton Roads with the Merrimac on the 9th of March, 1862, and in the attack upon Drewry's Bluff, in the James River, on the 15th of May, and only left the ship when she sank under him at sea off Cape Hatteras, on December 31, 1862. Throughout the whole history of the Monitor he exhibited the highest qualities of professional skill and courage, especially during the fight with the Merrimac, when, according to the statement of Lieutenant Worden, he had charge of the turret, and handled the guns with great courage, coolness, and skill.

Lieutenant Worden also states that "throughout the engagement, as in the equipment of the vessel and on her passage to Hampton Roads, he exhibited an earnest devotion to duty unsurpassed in my experience."

The importance of the part borne by the Monitor in this action was recognized by Congress in passing a vote of thanks to Lieutenant Worden and advancing him to a higher grade. Owing to the wound and subsequent illness of the commanding officer no report was made of the fight until a long time afterward. To this fact it was doubtless due that no recognition was ever given to the services of Lieutenant Greene on that occasion, as was done in the case of Lieutenant Thornton, the executive officer of the Kearsarge, after her engagement with the Alabama, in accordance with the precedent in similar cases in the war of 1812. The services of the Monitor on that memorable day were at least as important as those of the Kearsarge in her engagement with the Alabama, and the captains in the two cases were similarly rewarded. Lieutenant Greene, however, to the day of his death failed to receive from the Government any reward in any shape for his distinguished services, although his case was more deserving than that of other executive officers, in that when his commander was wounded he succeeded to the command and retained it till the close of the action.

The exceptional character of the engagement, to the success of which the conduct and skill of Lieutenant Greene contributed in such an eminent degree, marks his case as one deserving exceptional treatment. It may be added that throughout his whole career he bore a high reputation for courage, professional skill, and untiring zeal in the performance of his duties, while his private life was above reproach, and his society sought for in the charming circle of his friends.

It appears further that the father of the petitioner, Maj. Jacob Babbitt, of the Seventh Rhode Island Volunteers, was killed in action at the battle of Fredericksburg on December 13, 1862, and that the death of Commander Greene leaves her in circumstances of great want and destitution, with two minor children of her late husband dependent on her for support.

Your committee may mention that never, perhaps, has a claim come before Congress with such indorsements. The petition of this lady comes before your committee with the cordial indorsement of the Admiral, Vice-Admiral, and twenty-two rear-admirals of the Navy. He was a man universally esteemed by his brother officers of all ranks, and around his bereaved widow their prayers and best wishes cluster.

In this fight with the Merrimac, Lieutenant Greene had hardly attained his majority. His patriotic mother gave him her parting blessing, scarcely expecting him to survive the perilous voyage he was undertaking. He had no time to write to her till after the battle, for he stepped from the terrors of the ocean to the terrible storm of this engagement.

Four days afterward, however, he wrote a long and graphic description of his voyage and of the engagement, from which your committee copy and condense the following extracts. On Thursday, the 6th of March, 1862, they started down New York Harbor in tow of the steamer Seth Low. On Friday, the 7th, a storm was encountered, and from that time until Monday at 7 p. m., eighty-five hours, he was in constant devotion to his duty without sleep or rest. He had outlived two tremendous storms, and had arrived just in time, and without a moment's rest, to fight the greatest naval battle in history. In these eighty-five hours he says he thought he had lived ten good years.

The following are the extracts from his letter:

"The sea was breaking over our decks at a great rate, and coming in through our hawse-pipes forward in perfect floods. Our berth-deck hatch leaked in spite of all we could do, and the water came down under the turret like a waterfall. It would strike the pilot-house and go over the turret in most beautiful curves. The water came through the narrow eye-holes of the pilot-house with such force as to knock the helmsman completely around from the wheel. At 4 p. m. [March 7] the water had gone down our smoke-stacks and blower-pipes to such an extent that the blowers gave out, and the engine-room was filled with gas. Our engineers fought with the gas, endeavoring to get the blowers to work, until they dropped apparently dead. I was nearly suffocated with the gas, but got on the deck after every one had left the engine-room just in time to save myself. The engine stopped and we could not work the pump. I rigged the hand-pump on the berth deck, but as we had to lead the hose out over the turret there was not force enough to throw the water out. We resorted to bailing, and had to pass the buckets up through the turret.

"At 8 p. m. we managed to get the engines to work, and the old tank going at five and six knots. Soon after midnight on Saturday morning another storm arose and again we were threatened with the stoppage of the engines and the blowers. Our wheel ropes jumped off the steering wheel and became jammed. In half an hour we fixed them.

"From 4 a. m. (Saturday, March 8) till daylight was the longest hour and a half I ever spent. I certainly thought Old Sol had stopped in China. At 3 p. m. we parted our hawser, but again secured it without difficulty. At 4 p. m. we passed Cape Henry, and heard heavy firing. As we approached Fortress Monroe a pilot informed us of the havoc of the Merrimac. We immediately cleared ship for action. At 9 p. m. we anchored near the flagship Roanoke. After a visit to the Roanoke we again got under way, and at 11 p. m. reached the Minnesota. I went on board, and just as I got back to the Monitor the Congress blew up.

"At 8 a. m. (Sunday, March 9) the Merrimac got under way. I triced up the port and fired the first gun. For forty-eight hours our officers and men had had no rest and very little food. They had nothing to eat for breakfast but hard bread, and were thoroughly worn out. I had not slept a wink for fifty-one hours, but after the first gun we forgot all fatigue and went to work fighting as hard as men ever fought. I pointed and fired the guns myself. Five times during the engagement we touched each other and each time I fired a gun at our enemy. After fighting for two hours we hauled off for half an hour to hoist our shot in the turret, and at it we went again. At about 11.30 the captain sent for me. I went forward and there found as noble a man as ever lived, his face perfectly black with powder and iron. He told me to take charge of the ship and use my own discretion. We still continued firing.

"The fight was over and we were victorious. My men and myself were perfectly black with smoke and powder. Secretary Fox hailed me and told us we had fought the greatest battle on record. He saw the whole fight. The next morning General Wool and Mr. Fox came on board and congratulated us on our victory. I felt proud and happy then, mother, and felt fully repaid for all I had suffered. When our noble captain heard that the Merrimac had retreated he said he was perfectly happy and willing to die.

"I had been up so long, had had so little rest, and been under such excitement that my nervous system was completely run down. Every bone in my body ached. My limbs and joints were so sore that I could not stand. My nerves and muscles twitched as though electric shocks were continually passing through them, and my head ached as if it would burst. Sometimes I felt as if my brain would come out over my eyebrows. I lay down and tried to sleep; I might as well have attempted to fly. The next morning we got under way and stood through the fleet. Cheer after cheer went up. I was captain then of the vessel that had saved Newport News, Hampton Roads, Fortress Monroe (as General Wool himself said), and perhaps your Northern ports. I am unable to express the happiness and joy I feel to think I had served my country and my flag so well."

After the engagement with the Merrimac Lieutenant Greene received the highest commendation from General Wool, then commanding at Fortress Monroe, Mr. Fox, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and from other distinguished officers who witnessed the engagement. He was subsequently recommended for advancement in the strongest terms by his distinguished commander, Captain Worden, but failed to receive from the Government any substantial recognition in any shape for his very brilliant services. Thornton, deservedly, was made a captain. Worden is worthily wearing the honors of an admiral, but Greene was left to die in neglect and sadness without any adequate reward.

The neglect, we might say the ingratitude, of his country led to his untimely and lamented death, and she, whose father fell at Fredericksburg and whose husband's gallant conduct so largely contributed to the salvation of the Union, lives to lament the loss of father and husband, and can look only to her country to save his and her children and herself from destitution.

In view of these circumstances and of the fact that the services of Commander Greene in the Monitor were of a character so wholly exceptional and unprecedented, your committee are of the opinion that the applicant should receive the pension named in the bill, and recommend that the said bill do pass.

Mr. MATSON. I wish to say in relation to that bill that it proposes to violate the precedents of this House as to increasing the pensions of widows of husbands below the rank of general officers. I apprehend since we made a test in the case of Mrs. Cushing, which presented as strong an exceptional case as could be presented, such cases ought not to be pressed upon the House except in the presence of a quorum. The Committee on Invalid Pensions, and, I think, the Committee on Pensions also, have laid down the rule and adhered to it in this Congress without any variation, although there may have been some exceptions in other Congresses, but they are rare, not to grant increase of pensions beyond $30 a month except to the widows of husbands who held the rank of general officers in the Army or Navy.

This proposes to increase the pension of the widow of a commander of the Navy, who ranks with a colonel in the Army, beyond that amount. I believe, indeed, that a captain in the Navy only ranks with a colonel in the Army, and that a commander ranks with a major only.

Mr. BREWER, of New York. What pension does this woman get now?

Mr. MATSON. Thirty dollars a month, and it is here proposed to increase it to $50 a month.

Mr. LE FEVRE. She gets no pension at all at this time. She will be entitled to $30.

Mr. MATSON. Amend the bill to make it $30, and I have no objection. I think this House, in the absence of a quorum, should not establish so grave a precedent.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, as I understand it, is to strike out $50 and insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws." This would give her a pension of $30 a month.

I wish to state that this bill comes from the Committee on Pensions, but I want it understood that I did not support it any further than agreeing to put her on the pension-rolls, subject to the provisions of the law.

Mr. WOLFORD. Mr. Chairman, I only want to say a few words in relation to this bill. I wish to say that the husband of this widow when alive was a very gallant and a very noble commander. Nobody will dispute, not even the gentleman from Alabama himself, that he deserved well of his country, and that his memory will live as long as the American history will live, green in the hearts of the American people. [Applause.]

That the gentleman from Indiana, who is always sound upon a question of pensions but sometimes a little too strict upon the questions of precedents, is mistaken in reference to this matter I want to submit to the committee. I can call to his attention a bill which was reported by myself from the Committee on Pensions of this House in which this committee, headed and led on by the gallant gentleman from Alabama, refused to give to the widow of Captain Egan a pension of over $30 a month. When that question was under consideration I moved to amend it in the House, with all of these gentlemen present and all fighting against it; I moved to amend the bill and give to the widow of a captain who had performed gallant and meritorious service for his country, but no more gallant than this commander whose case is now before us—I say I moved to amend by inserting $40 per month instead of $30; and although the gentlemen argued it with all the force of their logic and with great zeal and ability, and plead their precedents (and I admit that I care not for precedents), I succeeded in securing the adoption of that amendment.

I say that I do not care much for precedents. This is a law-making power. I stated in a few words, not over three minutes, the gallant conduct and the good services performed by Captain Egan, and the House passed the amendment almost unanimously. It went to the Senate and the Senate passed it without hesitation, and the widow of that officer was granted a pension of $40 a month.

I see not, therefore, why—and I do not intend to detain the committee a minute longer than necessary—why, when a gallant commander who has done a great deal for his country, a brave and gallant man, whether the service was performed on the land or on the sea, a man who gathered a name and gathered blessings innumerable for his country—I see not, sir, I say, why a grateful people can not afford to pay to the widow of such a gallant officer a pension that is worthy of the service rendered. I shall vote with great pleasure, and I hope gentlemen will consider well before they undertake to vote against it, to put this widow on the pension-rolls at the rate which is suggested in the bill, and not leave it, as proposed by the amendment, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws. There is much that I would like to say in this connection, but I shall not detain the committee any longer, and hope we may come to a vote on this question. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to detain the committee from voting upon this bill, but it does seem to me that this case is one which deserves something more than a mere cursory attention from the Congress of the United States. I do not understand, sir, that this widow has any need to come to the House of Representatives to ask for a pension of $30 per month. Certainly if the general laws governing pensions will give her that amount there is no necessity for special legislation upon the subject.

This bill is on the Calendar of this House because the friends of Commander Greene asked the American Congress to take special cognizance of one of the most remarkable, one of the most memorable and important services ever rendered to the United States of America by one of its citizens. I need not go back, sir, to recite in the hearing of this committee the history of the contest between the Monitor and the Merrimac. It stands out pre-eminently in the naval annals of this country. Suffice it to say that from the first shot at Fort Sumter until the last echo of the rifles at Appomattox had died away no man wearing the uniform of the United States Government, of any age, was able to render more important and vital service to the country; and no man of the youth of Commander Greene, within my knowledge, in the history of this country, has ever had it fall to his lot to perform such pre-eminent service as he rendered in the memorable fight at Hampton Roads.

A boy of twenty-two years, finding himself in the midst of a terrific combat suddenly placed in command of a vessel, of a character three months before unknown to naval warfare; his commander shot down, blinded and disabled, at the post of duty, in that mighty contest, with such a foe as had never before been met upon the waters of any country—that young man, taking command in that supreme hour, with possibly not only the destinies of the Union cause but the very highest interests of humanity itself dependent upon the faithful performance of his duty, fought that ship with the gallantry of desperation and a magnificence of courage unexcelled in the history of the world.

Now, sir, the United States Government has been generous in the recognition of such services as that in other cases. In the case of the executive officer of the "Kearsarge" promotion merited and appropriate followed promptly upon the sinking of the "Alabama"—another most splendid achievement, but one whose result was of less immediate and vital consequence than that of the great fight with the armored monster at Hampton Roads.

For reasons which can be found in the records of that time, arising from the disability of Lieutenant Worden, the commanding officer of the Monitor, which prevented him from making at once his official report, the services of Lieutenant Greene were not brought to the notice of the Government in the formal way that carried special promotion, and he never received it. And I think I am stating a fact known to many friends of his in and out of the service that the melancholy, the quiet, sad feeling of neglect which it was natural for him to feel was largely instrumental in bringing about that tragic death which has resulted in this appeal on behalf of his widow, not to the generosity but to the tardy justice of the American Congress. [Applause.]

I undertake to say, Mr. Chairman, that if ever there was a bill presented to this House which justly called for exceptional legislation it is the bill presented here to-night asking the Government to pay $50 a month to the widow of the man who fought and defeated the Merrimac; to this widow who is also the daughter of another gallant officer of Rhode Island troops, who fell dead upon the field of battle at Fredericksburg; to a widow whose dead husband was the son of an old veteran, himself a graduate of West Point long years ago, who gallantly served his country on the fields of Mexico, retired to the pursuits of private life, answered the summons of his country at the first bugle-call in 1861, was shot through the head from cheek to cheek while leading his troops as a brigadier-general, and who in his old age and poverty to-night is able to look over not only his own noble record but also that of two sons given to his country's service, one of them the gallant boy who has written his name in a higher place than where we ask that it shall be put, upon the pension-roll of his country.

I appeal to this House not to hesitate to make an exception in favor of this bill. I assure gentlemen that it has the sanction and the good-will of the officers of the Navy, of which Commander Greene was so great an ornament. I appeal in behalf of that widow who to-night with her two children is waiting to learn from us, the representatives of the American people, whether we have forgotten in these twenty-three short years the service and the victory, the intelligence of which thrilled this nation to its heart's core on that eventful night when men feared and felt that the fortunes of the Republic were hanging in the balance. [Applause.]

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. In all that has been said by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] in relation to the conduct of this gallant officer I heartily concur. I might almost add that nothing could be said too extravagant in his praise.

But, Mr. Chairman, what the gentleman from Maine has said in relation to this officer might be said of all our naval officers during the late war; and when I speak of "our" naval officers I mean yours. I do not remember of any naval officer in the Union service during the late war that did not do his duty for his country.

I wish to bear testimony here to-night, Mr. Chairman, to the other arm of the military service, the infantry and cavalry who served in the Army during the late war, that no braver officers ever marched upon the battlefield than those of the Union Army; and I know but few of them who did not do their whole duty for their country. And yet, Mr. Chairman, we have said that the widow of one of these brave men who may have fallen upon the battlefield shall have only a pension of $30 a month; that is the statute; that is the general law as it stands to-day which was passed during the war and which I do not believe there is a member of this House who has proposed to amend in that respect.

Now, sir, if we are to pass special laws selecting out certain widows and giving them $50 per month, I ask why not amend your general law and say that the widows of all these meritorious officers shall have pensions of $50? Lieutenant Greene did not stand alone in gallant, meritorious service during the late war. You can point if you will to thousands of men, soldiers in the ranks, whose pension is much less than $30, who did gallant service in the station which they held just as faithfully as Lieutenant Greene.

All that has been said by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] is strictly true; I would not gainsay it in the least. But what I do contend for and always have contended for here on this floor is that justice should be done to all alike, and that we should not make exceptions in this way by special enactments.

I do not expect, Mr. Chairman, to defeat this bill, nor do I propose to make any point of a quorum upon it; but as I have been uniformly opposed to this kind of legislation I shall vote against it.

Mr. MATSON. I desire to say a word. When the gentleman from Maine says that it was not necessary for this widow to come here and ask for a pension, I think he spoke perhaps unadvisedly. My information is that her husband committed suicide; that he did not die from any injury, or wound, or disease contracted in the service of his country.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Do I understand the gentleman from Indiana to hold that a person who commits suicide is necessarily beyond the provisions of the pension laws?

Mr. MATSON. Necessarily so.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not so understand it.

Mr. MATSON. Necessarily so.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, I beg pardon of the gentleman. I think there are a number of cases now pending in the Pension Office in which the proof goes to show that the very act of suicide was superinduced by disease contracted in the service.

Mr. MATSON. The law is very clear and distinct. The widow of a soldier is entitled to a pension only in case of death arising from injury, wound, or disease contracted in the service and in the line of duty; so it would be impossible for this widow to obtain a pension under the general law, if I am correctly informed as to the facts of the case, and I believe the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] agrees with me as to the fact that this officer committed suicide. I understood him to so intimate in his speech. That being so, it would be utterly impossible for the widow to obtain a pension from the Pension Office.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I made no intimation of that kind. I said that the feeling of neglect and possibly of injustice which this officer felt had no doubt tended to produce or to hasten his death.

Mr. MATSON. I will ask the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] if he does not know the fact to be that this officer did commit suicide?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I answer the gentleman very frankly that I am not positively informed upon that subject.

Mr. MATSON. What is your information?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not know that that is pertinent.

Mr. MATSON. My impression is that I received the information this evening from the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] himself. I am not certain about it, but I received that information either from him or from some other gentleman who was talking to me in relation to this case.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this claimant comes here to ask a favor of Congress. She can not get a pension through the Pension Office, and she comes here to Congress to ask this favor. I am willing that she shall have the pension that her husband would be entitled to if she could obtain it through the Pension Office. I think that is a favor, a clear favor, but I am willing to grant it. But I am opposed to granting her $50 a month. I am opposed to it because it would establish a dangerous precedent; not because I am opposed to the widow, nor because I do not think that her husband rendered gallant and meritorious service, but because it would establish a very dangerous precedent.

There is no case of a man in the service who discharged his duty faithfully whose widow might not come here and make a similar appeal. Tens of thousands of the men that were in the ranks fell in death upon the very breastworks of the enemy, and their widows are receiving only $8 a month. It is proposed in this case simply because of the opportunity the man had to do something to immortalize himself to give his widow $50 a month. It was all due to the opportunity that he had; that is all there was of it. He was a gallant man and he had the opportunity to distinguish himself. He discharged his duty well; but tens of thousands of others did the same. If it is the sense of this House and the sense of the country that all the widows are to have $50 a month, then it is right to pass this bill, but not otherwise.

Another question that might be inquired into in the cases of these naval officers—for they have extraordinary privileges—is the question whether or not this officer received prize-money, and, if so, how much? That is a pertinent inquiry in cases of this kind. The House can not have forgotten a case that I referred to a while ago, the case of Mrs. Cushing. Her claim was urged upon the attention of the House as an exceptional one, upon the ground that her husband had rendered the most distinguished services that had been rendered by any naval officer.

That was the plea set up for her by the distinguished gentleman from New York, Mr. COX, by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. RANDALL, by the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. KEIFER, by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BAYNE, and by the host of friends who were here urging her claim to a pension of $50 a month. The disposition of the House was to break over the line, but I insisted that we could make a precedent by drawing the line at the rank mark. It is wrong to give pensions on account of rank, but when you come to increasing pensions you can only make a proper precedent by drawing the line at the rank mark. That is the only way; because if you go into the unknown region of meritorious and distinguished services there will be no end to the matter. Congress began many years ago to grant these extraordinary pensions of $50 a month to the widows of officers. The practice began by giving such pensions to the widows of general officers who had been killed in battle.

My impression is now that General Wadsworth, of New York (whose widow, the mother of a gentleman now representing that State on this floor, received a pension of this kind), was killed at the head of his command. So the thing went on until finally it grew into such proportions that the committees of this House were unable to resist the applications for an increase on the part of widows of general officers who were drawing $30 a month. In all such cases the increased pension has been granted, and the same may be said in regard to the widows of officers of the Navy of corresponding rank. It is a grave step to go beyond that, because when you do so there is no line of demarkation.

It is true, as my friend from Kentucky has said, that at the last session a bill was passed increasing the pension of the widow of a captain from $20 to $40 a month; but that was more an act of grace than anything else. Is this thing to go on? If so, where is it to stop? This is a serious question for the consideration of the House.

When the Cushing bill was before the House I felt it my duty, as the Committee on Invalid Pensions had reported upon it adversely, to demand that there should be a quorum of the House to vote upon the bill. I do not feel the same obligation in regard to this bill, because this comes from the Committee on Pensions. I do feel it, however, incumbent upon me to press upon the earnest consideration of members who are here to-night the fact that when we step beyond the precedents we go out upon an unknown sea, and there is no telling where we may land. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that this bill ought not to pass.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to say anything in addition to what has fallen from the lips of the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Maine in laudation of the services of Commander Greene. I wish merely to say a word or two in reply to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] in regard to the precedents heretofore established.

Since I have been a member of this House there has been, if my memory serves me correctly, an instance where a widow of a colonel in the Army was granted a pension of $100 a month. I also remember a case, since I have been a member, in which the widow of a civilian has been placed on the pension-roll at the rate of $5,000 a year.

Now, it does seem to me that if the House has established precedents like those, it is certainly not wrong for us to recognize the pre-eminent services of Commander Greene by giving his widow a pension of $50 a month. I have nothing more to say.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I know that my friend from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] is always fair and liberal in regard to these pension matters, and, therefore, I want to meet one point raised by him which is entitled to consideration; I refer to the point in relation to this question of rank. Now, the cause of this widow being here to-night without the ability to claim as of right a pension of $50 by virtue of the rank of her husband is very clearly shown in the report made in 1868 by Admiral (then captain) Worden. I want to read from this report four or five lines, because it tells the whole story. It shows why Commander Greene at the time of his death had not attained a higher rank. Captain Worden, under date of January 5, 1868, almost six years after that fight to which I have referred, writes in a report to the Secretary of the Navy:

> I desire now to remedy a wrong which I regret should have so long existed, and to do justice to that gallant and excellent officer (Lieutenant Greene), as well as to all the officers and crew of the Monitor, who without exception did their duty so nobly in that remarkable encounter, by placing on the files of the Department the following report.

Then Admiral (at that time captain) Worden goes on to state the indebtedness of the country to Lieutenant Greene. The tardiness of that report was the cause of Lieutenant Greene's failure to receive that recognition by promotion to which he was entitled, and which was extended in the case of the executive officer of the Kearsarge and in almost every other similar case in the history of our naval service. I think my friend from Indiana, when he takes into consideration this fact, will be inclined to waive the objection he has raised here to-night. He goes with us so far as to assent to a pension of $30 per month. I hope he will agree to a pension of $50.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT]; which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "at the rate of $50 per month" and insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I modify that amendment so as to strike out "$50 per month" and insert "$30 per month."

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 12, noes 32.

The question being then taken, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass? it was decided in the affirmative.

MRS. ADELINE E. CHADBOURNE.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. I call up a bill (H. R. 7673) granting a pension to Mrs. Adeline E. Chadbourne.

The bill was read, as follows:

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

AMY A. LEWIS.

Mr. NUTTING addressed the Chair.

Mr. MATSON. I was about to move, Mr. Chairman, that the committee do now rise.

Mr. NUTTING. I have one bill that I should like very much to have acted upon to-night.

Mr. MATSON. If that is all I shall not press the motion now.

Mr. NUTTING. I desire to ask the consent of the committee to take up bill (H. R. 7337) for the relief of Amy A. Lewis. It is to be found on page 47 of the Calendar, near the bottom of the page.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Amy A. Lewis, widow of J. H. Lewis, late of the Twelfth Battalion New York Light Artillery.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLES H. BRIGANCE.

Mr. MILLER, of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 5605) to increase the pension of Charles H. Brigance from $8 to $20 per month, and put it upon its passage.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the pension of Charles H. Brigance, a soldier of the war of 1812, and now 94 years of age, be increased from $8 to $20 per month.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN W. WRIGHT.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate bill No. 1144 and put it upon its passage. It is a bill granting a pension to John W. Wright.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John W. Wright, late a private in Company D, Seventy-seventh Regiment Enrolled Militia of Missouri.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BAGLEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar had had under consideration, pursuant to order, sundry bills on the Private Calendar reported by the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with various recommendations.

BILLS PASSED.

The following bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House without amendment were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 1235) granting a pension to Annie E. Bailey;
A bill (H. R. 7340) granting a pension to John Sparr;
A bill (H. R. 7572) granting a pension to Amos McDowell;

SENATE.

SATURDAY, January 24, 1885.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PUBLICATION OF TREATIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Printing:

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith, in answer to a resolution of the Senate dated January 5, 1885, a report of the Secretary of State and accompanying copies of such treaties and conventions between the United States and foreign powers as are requested by the resolution.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 23, 1885.

FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying documents, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State of the 22d instant, respecting an estimate of an appropriation to enable the Department of State to cause a preliminary search to be made of the records of the French prize courts, from 1792 to 1801, inclusive, to ascertain whether any evidence or documents relating to the claims in question still exist, and, if so, the nature and character thereof; said preliminary search being intended to aid the Department of State to carry out the requirements of section 5 of the act approved January 20, 1885, to provide for the ascertainment of the claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to the 31st of July, 1801.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 23, 1885.

OMAHA INDIAN CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying documents, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of the 20th instant from the Secretary of the Interior, presenting, with accompanying papers, a draught of proposed legislation providing for the settlement of certain claims of Omaha Indians in Nebraska against the Winnebago Indians on account of horses stolen by members of the latter tribe from the Omahas.

The subject is commended to the favorable consideration and action of the Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 23, 1885.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 7th instant, a letter of the Light-House Board, showing the necessity for the construction and maintenance of additional light-houses and buoy-signals in Narraganset Bay Rhode Island, with location and probable cost thereof; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, acknowledging receipt of a resolution directing him to report whether any claimants of lands taken by the Government under the act of July 5, 1882, remain unpaid, and what obstacles, if any, exist to their payment, and stating that he had this day transmitted a report containing the information called for in that resolution; which, on motion of Mr. INGALLS, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SAWYER presented resolutions of tobacco manufacturers and dealers of the city of Edgerton, Wis., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed Spanish reciprocity treaty; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented a memorial of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed Spanish reciprocity treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of 181 citizens of Millville, Pa., a petition of 62 citizens of Cooksburg, Pa., and a petition of 19 citizens of Elk City, Pa., praying that an appropriation be made for the improvement of the Alleghany River and its tributaries; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented a petition of the Real Estate Exchange of New York city, praying for the creation of suitable defenses to New York Harbor; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WILSON presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Idaho Territory, remonstrating against any amendment of the law known as the "desert-land act;" which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LAPHAM presented a memorial of John Blakely, of New York city, importer and manufacturer of tobacco, in favor of the ratification of the proposed Spanish-American reciprocity treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of the Cigar-makers' Union No. 5, of Rochester, N. Y., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed Spanish-American reciprocity treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a memorial of the senate of Nebraska; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATE OF NEBRASKA.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

On motion of Mr. McShane, the following resolution was unanimously adopted by the senate:

Whereas the events of the past year have shown the danger to the cattle interests of Nebraska and of the entire West from contagious disease, and have proved the necessity for and wisdom of the animal industry bill passed at the last session of Congress; and

Whereas a committee appointed by the National Cattle-Growers' Association of America (which association secured the enactment of the above law) is now in Washington endeavoring to obtain the passage of such amendments as will make the law more effective; and

Whereas these amendments are in substance, first, to so regulate the employment of persons by the animal industry bureau as to secure greater ability and usefulness, while at the same time reducing the expense; and second, in the case of disease in States which have no quarantine laws, and in which the executive authorities can not co-operate with the Commissioner of Agriculture to stamp it out, to give power to the President of the United States to prevent the transportation of animals from the diseased districts out of that State into another: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved, That we cordially indorse the amendments proposed and recognize the necessity and wisdom of these measures; and further, we commend them to the consideration of our Senators and Representatives in Congress, with the request that they give to the committee of the National Cattle-Growers' Association all possible aid and assistance in securing the passage of said amendments.

I hereby certify that the within resolution was passed by the Senate January 19, A. D. 1885.

H. H. SHEDD,
President of the Senate.

Attest:

SHERWOOD BURR,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Idaho Territory, remonstrating against any amendment of the law known as the "desert-land act;" which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DOLPH presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Idaho Territory, remonstrating against any amendment of the law known as the "desert-land act;" which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a memorial of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed Spanish reciprocity treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 7046) granting a pension to Alonzo Cornwell; and

A bill (H. R. 4752) granting a pension to William Herring.

Mr. JACKSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2180) for the relief of the trustees of the Christian Brothers' College, of Saint Louis, Mo., to report it adversely and recommend its indefinite postponement.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that go on the Calendar, please.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GARLAND in the chair). On the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri, the bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2263) for the relief of the State National Bank of Boston, Mass., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1000) for the relief of Myra Clark Gaines, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MILLER, of California, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2040) for the relief of Capt. Andrew W. Johnson, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print 3,000 additional copies of the communication of the Secretary of State, containing a list of claimants against France by reason of the spoliations committed prior to the 31st day of July, 1801, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. Upon investigation the committee find that the cost of printing the list will exceed $500. We therefore report in the form of a concurrent resolution, which will be required under the law. I ask that the concurrent resolution, reported as a substitute for the Senate resolution, may be considered at this time.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,000 copies of the communication of the Secretary of State, containing a list of claimants against France by reason of the spoliations prior to the 31st day of July, 1801; of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations to the communication from the President touching these claims and certain evidence now in France, which was referred to that committee this morning. I ask that the committee will give early attention to it, as it is very important to these claimants.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution reported by the Committee on Printing.

The resolution was agreed to.

LIST OF WAR DEPARTMENT EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with law, a list of the clerks and other persons employed in the War Department during the year ended November 30, 1884. I am directed by the committee to report adversely to the proposition to print the report. It seems like an unnecessary expenditure, as all of the information is contained in the Official Register, which will shortly be reprinted, and the expense does not seem to be warranted by the necessity. I ask that the document be laid on the table and that the Committee on Printing be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

Mr. GORMAN. I think the report had better go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland the report will go on the Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. EDMUNDS introduced a bill (S. 2578) to prevent and punish crimes committed by means of explosive compounds; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say that some little time since, my attention being drawn to what would seem to be the duty of the United States in respect of such matters, I requested a friend, having no time of my own at disposal, to make a draught of a bill, and this is that draught. I have only run my eye over it, although it has been on my table downstairs for a week or two, and I can see that the draught is not perfect by any means, and may raise questions between the rights of the United States over such crimes and the duties of the States. I do not think it is perfect in that respect and in some others, but I think it fit this morning to introduce it; and I ask that it may be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, in the hope that that committee will put it into a shape that will, so far as the United States have the power, operate in the direction which its title indicates.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MAXEY introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 114) to provide for printing the annual reports of the Smithsonian Institution; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

AMENDMENTS TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COCKRELL, Mr. GARLAND, and Mr. MILLER, of California, submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the Indian appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF TESTIMONY.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the evidence taken by the Committee on Indian Affairs under resolution of the Senate of date December 3, 1884, be printed for the use of the committee.

SMITHSONIAN REPORT FOR 1884.

Mr. MAXEY submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the annual report of the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum for the year 1884 be printed, and that there be printed 16,060 extra copies; of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, and 6,060 for the House of Representatives, and 7,000 for the Smithsonian Institution.

SUITS FOR DAMAGES.

Mr. HARRIS. If there be no further routine morning business, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed at this time to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7131) to authorize suits for damages where death results from the wrongful act or neglect of any person or corporation in the District of Columbia.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the bill for information.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest that the Secretary read the substitute reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia, and waive the reading of the original bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the committee will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to call the attention of the Senator to a criticism on the bill. Suppose a person should be injured within the District and die outside of it, there would be no remedy under the peculiar phraseology of the first section of the substitute, it seems to me. Although the injury may be committed in this District the death of the person injured may happen elsewhere, which is frequently the case, especially in injuries by railroads. It seems to me that contingency ought to be provided for. I think where the injury is committed in the District and the death occurs anywhere the remedy should follow. I merely call attention to it. Perhaps it may not be a correct criticism.

Mr. HARRIS. Has the Senator from Ohio an amendment that he would propose to meet the difficulty that suggests itself to his mind?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will get a copy of the bill and suggest an amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to offer some verbal amendments. In section 1, line 12 of the substitute, after the word "damages," I move to amend the amendment by inserting the words "for such death;" so as to read:

The person who or corporation which would have been liable if death had not ensued shall be liable to an action for damages for such death, notwithstanding the death of the person injured, even though the death shall have been caused under circumstances which constitute a felony.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. In line 15 of section 1 of the amendment, after the word "recovery," I move to insert the words "under this act:" so as to read:

Provided, That in no case shall the recovery under this act exceed the sum of $10,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. In line 3 of section 1 of the amendment, after the word "whenever," I move to insert the words "by an injury done or happening;" so as to read:

That whenever, by an injury done or happening within the limits of the District of Columbia, the death of a person shall be caused by the wrongful act, &c.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I should like to have the amendment as amended reported.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment as amended, as follows:

That whenever, by an injury done or happening within the limits of the District of Columbia, the death of a person shall be caused by the wrongful act, neglect, or default of any person or corporation, and the act, neglect, or default is such as would, if death had not ensued, have entitled the party injured, or, if the person injured be a married woman, have entitled her husband, either separately or by joining with the wife, to maintain an action and recover damages, the person who or corporation which would have been liable if death had not ensued shall be liable to an action for damages for such death, notwithstanding the death of the person injured, even though the death shall have been caused under circumstances which constitute a felony: Provided, That in no case shall the recovery under this act exceed the sum of $10,000.

SEC. 2. That every such action shall be brought by and in the name of the personal representative of such deceased person and within two years after the death of the party injured.

SEC. 3. That the damages recovered in such action shall not be appropriated to the payment of the debts or liabilities of such deceased person, but shall inure to the benefit of his or her family, and be distributed according to the provisions of the statute of distributions in force in said District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRIS. The bill (S. 2149) authorizing suits for damages in cases of death caused by the wrongful act, neglect, or default of a person or corporation in the District of Columbia, now upon the Calendar, reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, is almost precisely the same as the bill we have just passed. I move the indefinite postponement of the Senate bill.

The motion was agreed to.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7577) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; and on motion of Mr. ALLISON the same was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7970) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 1112) granting a pension to John Sweeney; and

A bill (S. 1144) granting a pension to John W. Wright.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 7872) to remove the political disabilities of Gabriel H. Hill, of Virginia; and

A bill (H. R. 7963) to remove the political disabilities of J. Pembroke Jones, of Virginia.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three hours and forty-seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

AMENDMENT TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CREDENTIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the credentials of JONATHAN CHACE, chosen by the Legislature of Rhode Island a Senator from that State to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of the late Henry B. Anthony.

The credentials were read and ordered to be filed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 7970) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title; and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ATTEMPT TO DESTROY BRITISH PARLIAMENT HOUSE.

Mr. BAYARD submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States has heard with indignation and profound sorrow of the attempt to destroy the Houses of Parliament and other public buildings in London, and hereby expresses its horror and detestation of such monstrous crimes against civilization.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 24, 1885.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

CORRECTIONS.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I understood the Journal as read to state that the motion I made yesterday on the last vote before the recess was to reconsider and lay on the table. My motion was to reconsider, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] moved to lay on the table, and then the House adjourned.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the Journal to be examined and corrected, if necessary.

The SPEAKER. If there be no further correction the Journal will be approved as corrected.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that that change of a vote may perhaps change the result.

The SPEAKER. On that roll-call 129 members voted in the affirmative and 122 in the negative.

CLAIMS OF OMAHA INDIANS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of 20th instant from the Secretary of the Interior, presenting, with accompanying papers, a draught of proposed legislation providing for the settlement of certain claims of the Omaha Indians, in Nebraska, against the Winnebago Indians, on account of horses stolen by members of the latter tribe from the Omahas.

The subject is commended to the favorable consideration and action of the Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 23, 1885.

FRENCH SPOLIATIONS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State of the 22d instant, respecting an estimate of an appropriation to enable the Department of State to cause a preliminary search to be made of the records of the French prize courts from 1792 to 1801, inclusive, to ascertain whether any evidence or documents relating to the claims in question still exist, and, if so, the nature and character thereof; said preliminary search being intended to aid the Department of State to carry out the requirements of section 5 of the act approved January 20, 1885, to provide for the ascertainment of the claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to the 31st of July, 1801.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 23, 1885.

CONTINGENT FUND OF NAVY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a statement of expenditures of the contingent fund for the Navy Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, and ordered to be printed.

THE MESSAGERIES MARITIMES STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimate from the Secretary of the Navy of an appropriation to pay claim for damages of the Messageries Maritimes Steamship Company; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of appropriations required to supply deficiency in the appropriations for the various departments of the Government for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CUSTOM HOUSE, DUBUQUE.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Supervising Architect recommending an appropriation of $10,000 for the approaches to the United States custom-house at Dubuque, Iowa; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, ABINGDON, VA.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Supervising Architect upon the necessity of an additional appropriation for the public building at Abingdon, Va.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MINNEAPOLIS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Supervising Architect, and recommending an extension of the appropriation for the public building at Minneapolis, Minn.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS ALLOWED.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a list of claims allowed which have arisen under the act of July 4, 1864; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENTS ON MESCALERO RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimate from the Secretary of the Interior of an appropriation to purchase certain improvements within the Mescalero Indian reservation in New Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

NORFOLK NAVY-YARD BUILDING.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of the Navy of an appropriation for refitting, altering, and constructing buildings at the navy-yard at Norfolk, Va.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PAYMENT OF CERTAIN COLLECTORS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, with inclosures, transmitting estimate of an appropriation for the payment of certain collectors; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. GLASCOCK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7872) to remove the political disabilities of Gabriel H. Hill, of Virginia; and

A bill (H. R. 7963) to remove the political disabilities of J. Pembroke Jones, of Virginia.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. GREENLEAF, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the pension case of Sarah L. Bragg.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. WOLFORD, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD remarks on the resolution instructing the Committee on the Judiciary to consider and report on the right of the Senate to originate appropriation bills.

Mr. BLANCHARD, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to print remarks on the resolutions offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] yesterday concerning the educational bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up for present consideration the resolution which I offered yesterday in regard to changing the hour of meeting. It is a privileged matter, as I understand.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] calls up for present consideration the resolution offered by him yesterday.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order against this proposition, and ask the reading of clause 43, Rule XI.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

Mr. VALENTINE. I would like to hear the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. My voice is not strong this morning. The reading of the rule will suffice to state my point.

The Clerk read as follows:

All proposed action touching the rules and joint rules shall be referred to the Committee on Rules

Mr. RANDALL. "Shall be."

Mr. KEIFER. There is another rule that relates to this subject.

Mr. VALENTINE. My judgment is that this point of order should have been made yesterday.

Mr. RANDALL. The proposition was not then up for consideration, and I could not make the point. I am advised that points of order were reserved.

Mr. VALENTINE. The point of order now made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania was not made yesterday. The only point of order then made was that under the rules the proposition must lie over one day.

Mr. MILLS. Oh, no; I made the point of order that it changed the rules and must go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. VALENTINE. I read from the RECORD:

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that would change a rule of the House.

Mr. MILLS. Precisely; and must go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. VALENTINE. I knew that the proposition changed the rules; it was the intention and object to do so; but I gave notice——

Mr. MILLS. Well, I make the point now; I reserve it.

The SPEAKER. A point of order has been made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania; but the Chair will hear the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. VALENTINE. I insist that it is too late to make the point of order now, a day having elapsed; and we are entitled now to have the resolution considered.

Mr. RANDALL. I say that the proposition was not up for consideration yesterday, and I was not required to make the point then.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska is entitled to the floor.

Mr. VALENTINE. I will very gladly listen to any statement of my friend from Pennsylvania. I prefer indeed to hear him on this question before addressing the House myself.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not mean to interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. VALENTINE. No; but you are doing it.

I think it would be in order at this time under the rules and practice of the House to make a motion to refer this resolution to the Committee on Rules; but I believe and shall insist that under the practice and rules it is too late at this time to make the point of order which under the rule would send the proposition there.

In the last Congress the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] raised this question, and on the day when he gave notice of a proposition of this kind there was considerable discussion touching this question under the rules. In that case the Chair entertained a motion made by Mr. Robinson, then a member from Massachusetts, by which the resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules. That action, however, was had on the very day the proposition was first presented, and a point of order made was overruled. I say that now, gentlemen having failed yesterday to send this resolution to the Committee on Rules by a point of order under the rules, it is to-day too late to send it there by such a point; you must do so, if at all, by the action of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the point I make is not too late. I submit also that the point was made yesterday by the gentleman from Texas. But the proper time for the point of order to be raised is when the question is up for consideration.

Mr. VALENTINE. There seems to be a misunderstanding or misapprehension of what was done yesterday touching the making of a point of order. Should that question become material, I think it is well to refer to the RECORD to ascertain what was done. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] made the only point of order recorded here in the RECORD. It is in this language:

I make the point of order that that would change a rule of the House.

Mr. MILLS. And must therefore go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. VALENTINE. Now in order to make a point of order effective you must state the exact point.

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, no!

Mr. VALENTINE. Oh, yes! My friend from Pennsylvania has frequently so held in the chair, and has required members to state the exact point. When a member has said, "I make a point of order against the proposition," the Chair has uniformly asked, "What is the point?" and then the member would state it.

Mr. THOMPSON. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] yesterday, when this proposition was presented, demanded the regular order, which reserved all points of order.

Mr. VALENTINE. This was then the regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will state the language adopted by the gentleman from Texas in making the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana will suspend his remarks a moment, and the Chair will suspend business in the House until order is restored on the floor. The gentlemen will resume their seats and stop conversation.

Mr. HOLMAN. The language used is this:

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order it would change a rule of the House.

Now, certainly that is a good presentation of the point of order in general terms, except that it does not refer to that particular rule of the House which requires an amendment of the rules to be referred to the Committee on Rules. It is perfect in all else. I submit the custom is not to reserve the point of order. It is done uniformly in general terms. The Chair will observe that immediately after Mr. MCMILLIN demanded the regular order, so nothing further could occur. I submit according to the practice of the House the point of order was clearly and distinctly made.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to say before I could finish by stating that it must go to the Committee on Rules a dozen gentlemen got up and made the point of order. The gentleman from Nebraska who offered the resolution acknowledged the point of order to be good and waived all further question by saying it would lay over for one day.

Mr. VALENTINE. That is what I thought.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that it is entirely immaterial what was the scope of the objection of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. No objection was needed. We have two rules of the House that control this matter. The first, as mentioned by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], is that this being a proposition to change the rules of the House it "shall be referred to the Committee on Rules." There is no way under the practice of the House to avoid that peremptory command except by suspension of the rules or by a motion to refer to some other committee. The natural order, therefore, is that it shall go to the Committee on Rules unless some other reference be made.

We would not send to any other committee a proposed change of the rules. There is no suggestion of any suspension of the rules in order to give this a hearing. And now the only reliance of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] is on Rule XXVIII, which declares that no standing rule or order of the House shall be changed without one day's notice of the intention to do it. He makes the point that if any member shall give one day's notice to change the rules of the House he shall have the right of the floor as a matter of privilege, without reference to any committee whatever of any and all proposed changes of the rules. The very statement of it is a reduction to absurdity. We could occupy the time of the House any day and every day by simply saying that to-morrow we will propose a change in this, that, or the other rule, claiming the right of the floor to discuss the subject-matter.

The two rules well consist. One is that the Committee on Rules shall first consider and report proposed changes; the other is a limitation on the time of discussion of proposed changes. That the House may not be taken unaware may be one reason of the limitation. But the House has also put on the change of the rules the safeguard that no rule shall be changed until the Committee on Rules shall have had a hearing and reported to the House.

Suppose this referred to the Committee on Rules now to-day, and the committee should meet in five minutes and bring back a report. It might be said, inasmuch as notice was given of it yesterday, it could be heard now. But suppose it had been referred to the Committee on Rules yesterday, and they had reported in five minutes. It could not have been heard, because Rule XXVIII is a limitation of time. The two things are absolutely distinct. You shall not take the House unaware, even though the Committee on Rules reported in favor of a change, and the proposed change must go through the Committee on Rules in order to get the sense of the House.

Mr. THOMPSON. I should like to suggest that the point of order can be as well made now as at any other time—that the point of order in reference to any matter pending can be made whenever the consideration of the question comes up in the House. The rule expressly provides certain matters must be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and that point of order can be made at any time before the consideration is begun. So any matter considered by the House when subject to the point of order—the point is good if made at any time before consideration is commenced. This matter has not been considered by the House, and the most favorable aspect in which it presents itself is that the gentleman has placed himself in position to bring it to the consideration of the House by giving the one day's notice required by the rule. It may now be brought up for consideration, but before being entered upon, it is in order at any time to make the point of order against it. That point of order, under Rule XI, will carry it to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I do not know this point of order has been decided under this system of rules, as they are called, but it seems to me that the power which the House has over its rules is complete and absolute, because it is a constitutional power, and that the House can not take away from itself the power that is conferred upon it by the Constitution. I suppose the House must at any time have the right to change its rules. I do not see how the House can limit itself.

Now, here are two provisions in our rules: the one is that such matters shall be referred to the Committee on Rules; the other is that the House shall not consider such matters unless a day's notice be given. A day's notice has been given of this change of the rule. I take it it is entirely optional on the part of the House whether it shall refer this to the Committee on Rules or not; but if the House thinks it will not refer it to the Committee on Rules, then it seems to me the question is open to the consideration of the House; because otherwise there is no way under our rules by which the rules can be changed except by the consent of the Committee on Rules. There is no way, if the doctrine of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be correct, under our present system, after a proposed modification is referred to the Committee on Rules, to get it out of the clutches of that committee by the House if they do not see proper to report it.

If the doctrine of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be sound, therefore, this proposed action must go to the Committee on Rules, and if they do not choose to report it there is an end of it. Now, we can not deprive ourselves of our constitutional power in any such way. There is no provision in our rules for a motion to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the subject and bring it before the House. Our rules do not provide for any such thing. That would facilitate business; hence it is not permissible under our system. [Laughter.]

I have always supposed that there was one thing which the House could do, and that was to exercise its constitutional power to make rules for its own future guidance. I am certain that I have seen since I have been here, but whether under this system of rules or not I do not remember precisely, this very motion prevail.

Mr. KIEFER rose.

Mr. DINGLEY. With the consent of my colleague I will refer him——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio has been recognized.

Mr. DINGLEY. I merely desire to make a suggestion to my colleague in connection with his remarks. He stated that he was sure of the fact that during his service such a case had arisen, but whether under the old or the new rules he was not certain. I wish to call his attention to the case to which he refers.

In the Forty-sixth Congress, on the 28th day of May, 1879, when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] had proposed to submit an amendment to Rule XXXI as an independent motion, a point of order was made against it; and on the 4th day of June, 1879, a motion to amend the rules as an independent motion was decided to be in order. On the three hundred and eighty-eighth page of the Digest it is stated that—

Notice of an amendment to the rules is in order as an independent motion, but must lie over one day under clause 1 of Rule XXVIII.

I understand the rules as they existed at that time in relation to an amendment to the rules were precisely the same as they are to-day.

Mr. VALENTINE. That is correct. That decision was made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I remember perfectly. The motion was made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. KEIFER. I was about to cite this precedent in the Forty-sixth Congress. But I think there are numerous precedents in that and other Congresses under the old rules; and while I have not had time to examine that provision of the rule under which such decisions have been made, my recollection now is that the present rule is identical with our old rules in that respect. The confusion existing in the minds of members with reference to this subject arises no doubt from the fact that, following the ordinary course of legislation relating to the business in the House, amendments to the rules are required, when introduced, under the call in the regular way for the introduction and reference of bills, &c., necessarily to go under such call to the Committee on Rules.

But Rule XXVIII makes provision for the case of a member offering an amendment to the rules under his individual right as a member; that is to say, that in his right as a member to have the rules changed he may offer an amendment to the rules by giving notice to the House of his intention, in which case the proposed amendment shall lie over one day before being called up for consideration.

Now, the Speaker of the Forty-sixth Congress distinctly ruled on this proposition, which will be found by reference to page 388 of the Digest, in the following words:

Notice of an amendment to the rules is in order as an independent motion, but must lie over one day under clause 1 of Rule XXVIII.

And reference is made to the Journal of the first session of the Forty-sixth Congress, page 437. This is specifically stated here, and covers entirely the case presented by the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska. There is no doubt, sir, but that the House can, if it does not want to vote upon a proposed amendment without having it first considered by the Committee on Rules at any time it could on yesterday—with reference to this proposed amendment, and I think could to-day—by a motion refer it to the Committee on Rules. But I maintain that under the first clause of the twenty-eighth rule it is in order now for consideration, having had the one day's notice provided by the rule.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I maintain that this is not a question of the equity or the wisdom of the rules. It is a question as to what is the rule.

Mr. REED. That first question has long since ceased to be mooted. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Rules do not stand in any different relation toward the House as to reports from that committee than do the other committees of this House. There is no compulsion on them, nor is there any compulsion on any committee with reference to its reports. Next, I maintain that the opinion to which the gentleman refers, if my memory is correct, was delivered before these rules were adopted.

Mr. KEIFER. But were not the old rules identical in this respect with the present rules? I think that will be found to be the case without the change of a word.

Mr. VALENTINE. They are verbatim the same.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Well, there was no point of order made, perhaps. There is a point of order raised here.

Mr. KEIFER. But that rule required, just as this, notice of the proposed amendment to the rules.

Mr. RANDALL. The House has restricted itself as to the manner of changing the rules; and the question of the restoration of that power is one of policy and not of principle.

Mr. VALENTINE. I scarcely know what I ought to do at this time touching this resolution. I deem it very important that there should be a specific ruling on this question. In the last Congress it arose identically as it has arisen here; and it went off without a decision under a motion made by Mr. Robinson, of Massachusetts, as he said for the purpose of relieving the Speaker from any embarrassment at that time. I do not know if the Speaker feels at this time sufficiently informed on the question to make a ruling. I do not know that he has examined the question with sufficient care to make a ruling to-day. I do not know if it is my duty at this time to make a like motion or not. I fear if the Speaker should rule against me on this matter, and hold that the resolution should go to the Committee on Rules, that will send it to a tomb and this Congress will never reach it.

If it be true, as stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], that this House has, by its rules adopted in the Forty-sixth Congress, so placed itself in the power of five members of this body that it can do nothing without their consent, then, indeed, we are in a sad plight, and something ought to be done to get out of this position in which we are placed by a former Congress, and by the adoption of the rules as a whole by this Congress at its first session. Therefore I have raised this question, and I hope that the House will have an opportunity as a body to pass upon it in some shape, as to whether it, sitting here, composed of more than three hundred members, shall be held down, tied down as it were, at the bidding of five of its members, in regard to the doing of any business that it may desire—which a majority, or all, if you please, but one member of this body, may desire to consider.

I hope that the Speaker will give to the House an opportunity to pass upon that question.

Mr. RANDALL. As a decision of mine has been referred to I have caused it to be looked up, and it will be seen after it has been read that it related simply to the question of reference as it involved one day's notice.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SPRINGER. I also gave notice of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Resolved, That Rule LI be amended by adding thereto the following:

"And any pending measure reported but not disposed of shall be regarded as unfinished business, and shall be in order after the morning hour of any day when such business would be in order."

Mr. CONGER. What is that?

The SPEAKER. It is a resolution providing for an amendment of the rules for reference to the Committee on Rules.

* * * * * * *

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] will give his attention. The Chair understood the gentleman to state that he did not ask for the reference of this resolution to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. SPRINGER. I see that according to the ruling of the former Speaker it must be offered for reference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not allow the application as notice given, and states that the practice of the House allows the introduction of these proposed amendments to the rules during the morning hour of Monday for reference.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman did not ask for its reference and does not now, as I understand.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair states that he has not a right now to introduce the resolution, except for reference; and that is based upon the decision of the former Speaker.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I offer it for reference.

* * * * * * *

Mr. CONGER. Then the Chair does not entertain the proposition, as it is not offered for reference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated to the gentleman from Illinois that he can not receive the proposition except for reference, and the Chair understands the gentleman now to introduce it for reference. For this purpose the Chair entertains it.

Mr. RANDALL. It will be observed the point involved here to-day was not entered upon at all in that decision.

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire to say one word about a suggestion of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE]. He states that because a former Speaker of the House was embarrassed by the like question and his party relieved him, therefore the present Speaker should get embarrassed also and leave it to the House to relieve him. It seems to me that that would be a dangerous practice. If the House, in particular squads, for instance, or sections of men, should desire to change the rules so as to get at particular measures, they would vote from interested standpoints. The Speaker decides judicially; and it is perfectly right that as this has been an open question it should now be closed by some sort of ruling. If the Speaker shall be one way or the other—and I have not the slightest idea which way he is—his voice ought to be given to the House at least as argument in case there should be an appeal.

The SPEAKER. Rule XXVIII of the House provides that—

No standing rule or order of the House shall be rescinded or changed without one day's notice of the motion therefor, &c.

The Chair supposes that this notice might be given in two ways. A member might rise in his place and state that on the next day, or upon some succeeding day, he would propose to amend the rules in a certain way; or he might accomplish the same purpose by presenting to the House a proposition to amend the rules in a particular way. And the Chair supposes that the question as to whether or not the point of order can now be made that this proposition must have its first consideration in the Committee on Rules depends upon the same consideration, no matter in which one of those methods the notice might have been originally given.

Suppose a gentleman had risen on the floor yesterday and simply given notice under this rule that on to-day he would propose a motion to amend the rules, stating the character of the amendment, of course no question could then have been made that it must have its first consideration in the Committee on Rules. So it was on yesterday when the gentleman from Nebraska presented his proposition. It was a mere notice to the House under Rule XXVIII of a proposition to amend its rules, and the Chair thinks that the point of order, if it can be made at all, can properly be made to-day when the subject actually comes before the House.

The next question is, whether these rules provide two different methods for their own amendment; that is to say, whether they provide two different methods for bringing before the House for actual consideration a proposition to amend the rules. The Chair thinks not. The Chair thinks the two rules are not at all inconsistent with each other, but they very well stand together.

A proposition to amend the rules can not be considered by the House at all until there has been one day's notice given, either on the floor, as suggested by the Chair, or by the presentation of the proposition itself; but the giving of that notice in either form does not seem to dispense with the forty-third clause of Rule XI, which provides expressly that it shall be referred to the Committee on Rules. If the Committee on Rules should make a report to the House of a proposition to amend the standing rules or orders of this body which had not been referred to them more than one day before the report was made, the Chair would have no hesitation in saying that the report must lie one day on the table before it could be considered. But when a proposition to amend the rules has been made in the House and referred to the Committee on Rules one day before it is reported on, the Chair would have no hesitation in holding that it would then come up for consideration, because all the requirements of both these rules of the House in such a case have been complied with.

The Chair thinks that whatever may be the power of the House itself over its own rules, he is bound by all of them as they stand for the time being, and that this point of order can be made now and is well taken.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REED. I desire to ask the Chair whether a motion can be entertained to consider this proposed amendment to the rules without its reference to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the only way to reach that is to discharge the Committee on Rules from the consideration of the matter, or else appeal from the decision of the Chair and get the judgment of the House that the proposition has not gone to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. REED. I desire to make another parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order to move now to discharge the committee?

The SPEAKER. That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

Mr. REED. I wish to ask the Chair another question. At what time is it in order under the rules to move to discharge the committee?

The SPEAKER. There is no rule of the House prescribing a time when any motion of that character can be regularly made, either as to the Committee on Rules or as to any other committee of the House; but there is a time provided by the rules of the House when motions can be made to suspend all the rules and, by a two-thirds vote, accomplish any parliamentary proceeding that gentlemen desire.

Mr. REED. I will ask the Chair whether the question of a change of the rules is not a question of privilege?

The SPEAKER. Yes; for presentation, and for consideration when presented in a proper way, under the rules.

Mr. REED. Will the Chair allow me to ask another question? I do not know that it has ever been up before, but I would like to suggest to the Chair that this may be a question of privilege for consideration, and that therefore a motion, on a question of privilege, to discharge the committee, might be in order at any time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. A motion to discharge the committee is one which does not seem to be provided for at all by the rules of the House as a regular proceeding. So, motions for the adoption of simple resolutions of the House, concurrent resolutions, and various other parliamentary propositions, are not provided for at all by the rules, but must be made by unanimous consent or by suspension of the rules.

Mr. REED. Then, under the rules of the House, the majority is deprived of the control of its rules, and is relegated to the two-thirds provision.

The SPEAKER. Just as the majority is deprived of power with regard to any other proposition referred to any other committee of the House.

Mr. REED. Then I simply desire to point out to the House that there is no possibility of discharging a committee under our present rules.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his inquiry.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to know whether upon a motion to refer this proposition to the Committee on Rules it is in order to move to instruct the committee.

The SPEAKER. There has been no such motion made.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I move that this proposition be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has referred it to the Committee on Rules by the decision just made, unless that decision be overruled by the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Does the Chair hold that upon the introduction of a proposition of this character it would go to the committee under a point of order without a motion to refer it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so decides.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I will ask the Chair if it is in order, upon the point of order being made, to move to refer the proposition with instructions?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided, upon the point of order, that this resolution goes to the Committee on Rules, just as the Chair would have decided upon a point of order that a bill introduced making an appropriation would go to the Committee on Appropriations or a bill raising revenue to the Committee on Ways and Means. No motion has been made or is necessary to be made to refer this proposition to the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to make another parliamentary inquiry. Will it be in order now to make a motion to instruct the Committee on Rules in relation to this proposition?

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. Only by unanimous consent; and the regular order is demanded. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

REGULATION OF STEAM-VESSELS.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to report back with amendments the bill (S. 1793) to amend section 4434 of title 52 of the Revised Statutes, concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam-vessels. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. That can not be done. The bill will be referred to the House Calendar and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

LEWES, DEL., A PORT OF DELIVERY.

Mr. GLASCOCK, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3570) to constitute Lewes, in the State of Delaware, a port of delivery, and for other purposes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

TRANSPORTATION OF DUTIABLE GOODS.

Mr. GLASCOCK, from the Committee on Commerce, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7569) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

LIGHT-HOUSE AT GRAND MARAIS, MINN.

Mr. WOODWARD, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 4119) relating to the construction of a light-house at Grand Marais, Minn.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

TRANSPORTATION OF LIVE-STOCK.

Mr. CLARDY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably a resolution in relation to the transportation of live-stock by railway companies; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

POWLETT GUN-CARRIAGE.

Mr. ROSECRANS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 8036) to provide for building and testing the Powlett gun-carriage; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

OFFICERS FOR RECRUITING DEPOTS.

Mr. ROSECRANS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, also reported, as a substitute for H. Res. 305, a joint resolution (H. Res. 318) authorizing the appointment from the enlisted men of the Army of one sergeant-major and not exceeding four first sergeants for each of the three general recruiting depots; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 305) was, by unanimous consent, laid on the table.

NATIONAL CEMETERY NEAR BATON ROUGE, LA.

Mr. DIBRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 5751) making an appropriation to construct a road and approaches from the Mississippi River through the city of Baton Rouge, La., to the national military cemetery, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL CEMETERY NEAR MARIETTA, GA.

Mr. DIBRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, also reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 172) making appropriation to build a road from the city of Marietta, Ga., to the national cemetery near that city; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SWAMP LANDS IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. STRAIT, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 834) for the relief of certain settlers on swamp lands in Minnesota; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SALE OF LOTS IN PERU, IOWA.

Mr. LEWIS, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 449) to provide for the appraisement and sale of lots in the town of Peru, Dubuque County, Iowa; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PARTITION OF LAND IN LOUISVILLE, KY.

Mr. YOUNG, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2149) authorizing the partition of certain land in Louisville, Ky., belonging jointly to John Echols and the Government of the United States; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. YOUNG. I desire to state that this report was authorized by the committee some time since, and it was supposed that the bill had been reported, but through some inadvertence or oversight it did not get on the Calendar.

REGISTRATION OF TRADE-MARKS.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on Patents, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. 4553) to amend the law in relation to the registration of trade-marks; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH F. WILSON.

Mr. HALSELL, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7522) for the relief of Joseph F. Wilson.

Mr. HALSELL. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House a request for unanimous consent can not be entertained during the call of committees. Bills must go to the proper Calendar.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SALE OF DISTRICT PROPERTY.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7557) to provide for the sale of real property in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

DAMAGES FOR WRONGFUL ACTS, ETC.

Mr. McCOMAS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 7260) authorizing a husband or wife and next of kin to maintain an action to recover damages for the wrongful and negligent act of a person or corporation within the District of Columbia resulting in death; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DISTRIBUTION OF OFFICIAL REGISTER.

Mr. BRATTON, from the Committee on Printing, reported back favorably joint resolution (H. Res. 314) providing for the distribution of certain copies of the Official Register of the United States; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. SLOCUM, from the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests, reported back, as a substitute for H. R. 7537, a bill (H. R. 8037) to amend the tenth section of the act to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine, &c.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ARREARS OF PENSION.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas, from the Select Committee on Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2802) to allow arrears of pension to certain invalid pensioners whose names were dropped from the pension-rolls and by act of Congress subsequently were restored; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now recognize the gentlemen who were not in when their committees were called.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry, whether the first business this morning is not the unfinished business of yesterday?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not yet concluded the call of committees.

YELLOWSTONE PARK.

Mr. POST, of Wyoming (by Mr. HILL), from the Committee on Territories, reported back favorably the bill (S. 221) to amend sections 2474 and 2475 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, setting apart a certain tract of land lying near the headwaters of the Yellowstone River as a public park.

The SPEAKER. Does it make an appropriation or create new offices?

Mr. HILL. It simply provides for a change of the boundary line of the park.

The bill was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I would inquire, Mr. Speaker, whether the business pending yesterday afternoon at the time the House took a recess for the evening session does not come up properly for action at this time? The purpose was to take up the Mexican pension bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows nothing about the purposes of gentlemen on the floor. There was nothing pending but the motion to adjourn.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There was the motion of the gentleman to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. Yes; to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. All motions in relation to that subject fall with the adjournment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I desire to submit the motion now to go to the business upon the Speaker's table for the purpose of taking up the Mexican pension bill and considering the Senate amendments.

Mr. DIBRELL. I move that the House go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of taking up the agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. That has precedence under the rules of the House, which provide that a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider appropriation bills or bills raising revenue shall take precedence over motions to go to business on the Speaker's table.

HARRIET A. D. CORTS.

Mr. CURTIN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8038) granting a pension to Harriet A. D. Corts; which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOLLETT, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 8039) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I reserve all points of order on that bill.

PROTECTION OF CHILDREN IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia, submitted the following conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to bill of the Senate No. 729, for the protection of children in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

1. In line 11 of section 2, that the Senate recede from disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with the addition of the words "or sight;" so the clause will read "in their presence or sight;" and the House agree to the same.

2. In lines 2 and 3 of section 4, that in lieu of the words "twenty-one," as amended by the House to read "sixteen," both Houses agree to the substitution of the word "eighteen."

WM. L. WILSON,
J. T. SPRIGGS,
E. JEFFORDS,
Managers on the part of the House.

H. H. RIDDLEBERGER,
AUSTIN F. PIKE,
JOSEPH E. BROWN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The following is the statement accompanying the report under the rule:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 729) for the protection of children in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the conference report:

I. In line 11 of section 2, the Senate bill conferred on certain officers "power to arrest without warrant all persons violating within their view any law relating to or affecting the protection of children." The House substituted for the words "within their view" the words "in their presence," as less equivocal. The Senate agrees to this amendment, with the addition of the words "or sight;" so that the clause as now agreed to reads, "in their presence or sight."

II. In lines 2 and 3 of section 4, by the Senate bill it was made criminal to entice, decoy, place, take, or receive any female child under the age of 21 years into any house of ill-fame," &c. The House substituted "16 years" for "21 years." Both Houses now agree upon "18 years."

WM. L. WILSON,
J. THOS. SPRIGGS,
E. JEFFORDS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The conference report was adopted.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO THE RULES.

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Would it now be in order to introduce an amendment or proposed amendment to the rule offered by the gentleman from Nebraska for reference to the Committee on Rules?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. ANDERSON. I send to the desk a proposed amendment which I ask to be referred to the Committee on Rules with the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska.

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided further, That after the reading of the proposed bill or measure, and before the request for unanimous consent to its consideration is announced by the Chair, there shall be given, upon the demand of any member, five minutes for debate in favor of and five minutes for debate against the consideration of the proposed measure.

The proposed amendment was referred to the Committee on Rules.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 7131) to authorize suits for damages where death results from the wrongful act or neglect of any person or corporation in the District of Columbia.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution providing for the printing of 3,000 copies of the communication of the Secretary of State in relation to claimants under the French spoliation claims.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SKINNER, of New York, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. SPRIGGS, for ten days, on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 94, noes 57.

Mr. REED. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 117, nays 116, not voting 90; as follows:

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The first bills in order are those making appropriations.

Mr. DIBRELL. I call up the bill (H. R. 8030) making an appropriation for the Agricultural Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules of the House the bill will be read at length.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. VALENTINE. I think it is not absolutely necessary to read the bill at length before it is read by paragraphs for amendment. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. That has been objected to. I would have asked that, but several gentlemen have desired that the bill shall be read.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. DIBRELL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Agriculture, having in charge the bill making an appropriation in support of the Agricultural Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, respectfully submit the following report:

The bill appropriates $546,290, which is $108,900 less than was appropriated in the last bill, and is $152,820 less than is asked for in the estimates. The reduction is made in the amounts to its statistical division, bureau of animal industry, tea plant, &c.

There is no new legislation in the bill except in the bureau of entomology, which includes a clause in regard to the habits and migration of birds in relation to insects and plants. And in the bureau of animal industry the following was added to make the law more effective, namely:

"And the Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby authorized to use any part of this sum he may deem necessary or expedient, and in such manner as he may think best, to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia, not to conflict with existing law."

And the committee recommend the passage of said bill.

Mr. DIBRELL. I desire to state there is in this bill no increase of salaries and no new officers are provided for. I do not know that any gentleman wants to discuss the bill in general debate. I ask that it be read by paragraphs for amendment under the five-minute rule.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee to say that there is no increase of salaries or offices in this bill.

Mr. DIBRELL. None at all.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. There is a decrease of about $110,000 as compared with the appropriations of the last bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will proceed to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, and read the following paragraph:

BUREAU OF AGRICULTURAL STATISTICS.

For compensation of one statistician, $2,500; two clerks of class 4, $3,600; three clerks of class 3, $4,800; four clerks of class 2, $5,600; five clerks of class 1, $6,000; seven clerks, at $1,000 each; four clerks, at $840 each; two clerks, at $720 each; for collecting foreign and domestic agricultural statistics, and compiling, writing, and illustrating matter for monthly, annual, and special reports, $75,000; in all, $109,300.

Mr. VALENTINE. I desire to say that I notice this item is $25,000 less than the corresponding item in the last appropriation bill. When in the Forty-seventh Congress I had the honor to be chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, and to have charge of the agricultural appropriation bill, that committee deemed it necessary to create, as it were, a new statistical division in the Agricultural Department. I stated at the time to the House that a large expenditure for one or two years would be necessary to place that division upon a proper footing, but that after it once had got in working order a gradual reduction might be had from year to year and the expenses would not be nearly so great after a year or two as what we then asked for. I desire to say that I am now much pleased to see the judgment of the Committee on Agriculture of this House has verified my statement at that time.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Forestry:

For the purpose of enabling the Commissioner of Agriculture to experiment and to continue an investigation and report upon the subject of forestry, and the collection and distribution of valuable economic forest-tree seeds, $10,000.

Mr. DIBBLE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 147 insert:

"Tea culture: For the cultivation and distribution of the tea plants on the Government tea farm, $3,000; of which sum not more than $2,000 shall be expended for salaries and wages of labor."

Mr. DIBBLE. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that there is no objection on the part of the committee to this amendment.

Mr. DIBRELL. There is no objection to that. The committee are willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I desire to state that this matter was left open in order that the committee might hear from the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE], in whose district this little tea farm and these tea plants are located. The committee, when the bill was framed, did not have the information the gentleman has since given us. There was an appropriation last year of $3,000, and the committee left it out until they should hear from the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to inquire whether there is any recommendation from the Commissioner of Agriculture on this subject?

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. There is. The Commissioner recommended the sum mentioned, $3,000. It is simply to take charge of the property of the Government and to distribute such plants as may be on the farm to anybody that will have them.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I wish to inquire is it not the intention to still further engage in the experiments there?

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. Not by any means.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What good, then, can come from this appropriation?

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. The Government has this property, and these plants are valuable, and they have grown to a size that it becomes necessary to distribute them to such parties as want to set them out and grow them themselves. There are 80,000 such plants, and they are ready for distribution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

SILK CULTURE.

For the encouragement and development of the culture and raising of raw silk, $15,000.

Mr. YOUNG. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 150 strike out "$15,000" and insert "$25,000."

Mr. YOUNG. I desire to suggest to my colleague on the committee, for his consideration, that this is probably one of the most important industries among the new ones just being developed in the entire country. In nearly all the Southern States and in every one of the Western States, especially in California, large sums of money have been devoted to this new and growing industry. I have not the statistics before me, but it is my recollection that nearly $50,000,000 worth of silk is imported into this country every year, This is a branch of American industry that heretofore has had no protection whatever under former legislation.

In all our tariff laws there is no protection afforded for this. It seems to me $15,000 is a very small sum, if it is deemed necessary to do anything at all in this direction, for the development of an industry so important and destined in the future to be so great in this country as the culture and production of silk. Therefore I suggest to my colleague [Mr. DIBRELL] that it would not be improper—indeed, it would be an eminently proper thing—to increase this item of appropriation from $15,000 to $25,000.

Mr. DIBRELL. Mr. Chairman, we have given all that the Commissioner of Agriculture has asked for this purpose. Last year the committee left this out, but the Senate added $15,000 to the bill, and it was agreed to in the committee of conference. This year the Commissioner has asked for only $15,000. I admit that this is an important branch of industry in this country; this flag here is an evidence of that fact; but, at the same time, I think $15,000 is enough to appropriate for this purpose at this time.

Mr. YOUNG. My colleague does not seem to have deemed it necessary to follow the recommendations of the Commissioner of Agriculture in other respects. I notice by this bill that the Commissioner's estimate for the expenses of his department for the next year is put down at $699,110, while the committee, disregarding the recommendation of the Commissioner, have reported appropriations amounting only to $546,290. Now it may be true, though I doubt very much whether it is so, that $15,000 is sufficient for this purpose. At all events, the fact that a larger sum is not recommended by the Commissioner of Agriculture constitutes no conclusive argument why this House should not increase the appropriation. If the committee choose to disregard the recommendation of the Commissioner and to cut down his estimates nearly $200,000, it seems to me that they might disregard his recommendation in this instance also, when the question is as to increasing somewhat a very important item in this bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. If the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] will allow me, I will ask him to explain in what way an increase of $10,000 in this item is going to lead to an increase in the silk culture of the United States. What is it proposed to do with this $10,000?

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, I refer my friend from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] to the Committee on Agriculture for an answer to that question. They deemed it necessary to recommend an appropriation of $15,000 for this purpose, and they can doubtless give him the details as to how the appropriation is to be expended. I am not sufficiently familiar with the subject myself to do so.

Mr. WARNER, Ohio. Then, Mr. Chairman, when we have the details, we may be better able to judge whether or not the expenditure of $10,000 more is necessary or wise.

Mr. YOUNG. Is the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] prepared to say that $15,000 is necessary for this purpose?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I am not. I am asking for information.

Mr. YOUNG. Then call on the Committee on Agriculture to inform us upon the subject.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I have called upon the gentleman from Tennessee for the information.

Mr. YOUNG. I confess that I am unable to give the details which the gentleman from Ohio desires; but I know this, that there is no more important industry in this country, among the new and growing ones, than this silk industry.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. We may all agree to that; but what I desire information about is just how this additional $10,000 proposed to be appropriated in this way is going to benefit the silk industry.

Mr. YOUNG. Well, if the gentlemen from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] will inform me how the $15,000 appropriated by the bill is going to benefit the silk industry, perhaps I can then give him information as to how the additional $10,000 would benefit it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. But I can not give that information. I am seeking for information.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the committee had the subject under consideration, and received from the Commissioner of Agriculture all the information that he could impart as to the manner in which he had expended the appropriation made for this purpose in the last annual appropriation bill. The language of the appropriation is, "for the encouragement and development of the raising of raw silk, $15,000." Up to this time the Commissioner of Agriculture has not been able to expend one-half of the sum appropriated last year.

Mr. YOUNG. Then he ought to resign.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. Well, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] has confessed that he does not know in what manner the Commissioner can expend properly and profitably the money now proposed to be appropriated for this purpose, I do not see why he should make that remark, or why the Commissioner should be called upon to throw this money away simply because it has been appropriated. But, Mr. Chairman, with all the information that the committee have they are of opinion that until these experiments shall have gone further than they have gone up to this time $15,000 is all that is necessary, and the committee did not propose to recommend to the House to appropriate $25,000, $30,000, or $40,000 simply for the luxury of making an appropriation.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. With pleasure.

Mr. WARNER. of Ohio. If the Commissioner of Agriculture has been unable to expend wisely the $15,000 appropriated last year, how is he to expend the sum that remains of that appropriation and also this additional $15,000? If there were any such question here as presented itself some years ago in France—the destruction of the silk-worm—I can very readily see how this appropriation might be wisely expended. But, there being no such trouble here, I do not see how the Commissioner of Agriculture is going to expend even the $15,000 in a manner that will improve or help the silk industry in this country.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. In reply to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER], I will state that the Commissioner's report shows that in the first six months of the present fiscal year he had something over one-half of the $15,000 remaining; but he is proceeding judiciously in making experiments, in distributing information, in distributing the silk-worms in different stages to persons who have applied for them, and in assisting parties who are experimenting upon their own means, and he deems $15,000 sufficient to carry on the Department's experiments for the next fiscal year.

That is the opinion of the Commissioner, and I am satisfied that the additional $10,000, if appropriated, would be simply so much more than there was any use for. I therefore hope that the committee will vote down the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment with this remark: I have confessed that I am not acquainted with the details of this branch of the Agricultural Department. I was not charged by the House with the duty of acquiring information upon that subject. My friend of the Agricultural Committee was, and I supposed he would be able to give it. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move pro forma to strike out the last words of the pending paragraph. I make this motion merely for the purpose of stating an interesting fact that came under my observation in the State of Iowa during the last year. I learned from thirty or forty different sources that our ladies are engaging in this industry; they are raising silk-worms, and are exhibiting them at our county fairs. The industry is spreading with wonderful rapidity. The intention of the Committee on Agriculture in reporting this appropriation is that we shall have here at Washington in the office of the Commissioner of Agriculture a depository of information, where those who are employing themselves in this direction may get such information and assistance as they desire. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES.

For stationery, freight, express charges, fuel, lights, subsistence and care of horses, repairs of harness, paper, twine, and gum for folding-room, and for miscellaneous items, namely, for advertising, telegraphing, dry goods, soap, brushes, brooms, mats, oils, paints, glass, lumber, hardware, ice, purchasing supplies, and necessary items, including traveling expenses while on the business of the department, $15,000.

Mr. BUDD. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the provision which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That in order to aid the Department of Agriculture in acquiring and diffusing among the people of the United States useful and practical information on subjects connected with agriculture, and to promote scientific investigation and experiment respecting the principles and applications of agricultural science, there shall be established, in connection with the college or colleges in each State established, or which may hereafter be established, in accordance with the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agricultural and the mechanic arts," or any of the supplements to said act, a department to be known and designated as an "agricultural experiment station:" Provided, That in any State in which two such colleges have been or may be so established the appropriation hereinafter made to such State shall be equally divided between such colleges, unless the Legislature of such State shall otherwise direct.

That it shall be the object and duty of said experiment stations to conduct original researches or verify experiments on the physiology of plants and animals; the diseases to which they are severally subject, with the remedies for the same; the chemical composition of useful plants at their different stages of growth; the comparative advantages of rotative cropping as pursued under a varying series of crops; the capacity of new plants or trees for acclimation within the isothermal limits represented by the climate of the several stations and their vicinity; the analysis of soils and water; the chemical composition of manures, natural or artificial, with experiments designed to test their comparative effects on crops of different kinds; the adaptation and value of grasses and forage plants; the composition and digestibility of the different kinds of food for domestic animals; the scientific and economic questions involved in the production of butter and cheese; and such other researches or experiments bearing directly on the agricultural industry of the United States as may in each case be deemed advisable, having due regard to the varying conditions and needs of the respective States.

That the said experiment stations shall be under the direction and control of the trustees or other governing body of such colleges, who shall have power to appoint a director and such assistants as may in each case be necessary.

That in order to secure, as far as practicable, uniformity of methods and results in the work of said stations, it shall be the duty of the United States Commissioner of Agriculture to determine annually a standard of valuation of the ingredients of commercial fertilizers, upon which the analysis of such fertilizers, as far as made by said stations, shall be based; to furnish forms, as far as practicable, for the tabulation of results of investigation or experiments; to indicate, from time to time, such lines of inquiry as to him shall seem most important; and, in general, to furnish such advice and assistance as will best promote the purposes of this act; but nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize said Commissioner to control or direct the work or management of any such station except as to the standard of valuation of commercial fertilizers. It shall be the duty of each of said stations, annually, on or before the 1st day of February, to make to the governor of the State in which it is located a full and detailed report of its operations, including a statement of receipts and expenditures, a copy of which report shall be sent to each of said stations, to the said Commissioner of Agriculture, and to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

That in order to make the results of the work of said stations immediately useful, they shall publish at least once in every three months bulletins or reports of progress, one copy of which shall be sent to each newspaper in the States in which they are respectively located, and to such individuals actually engaged in farming as may request the same, and as far as the means of the station will permit. Such bulletins or reports and the annual reports of said stations shall be transmitted in the mails of the United States free of charge for postage, under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may from time to time prescribe.

That for the purpose of paying the salaries and wages of the director and other employés of said stations, and the necessary expenses of conducting investigations and experiments and printing and distributing the result as hereinbefore prescribed, the sum of $15,000 per annum is hereby appropriated to each State, to be paid in equal quarterly payments, on the 1st day of January, April, July, and October in each year, to the treasurer or other officer duly appointed by the aforesaid boards of trustees to receive the same, the first payment to be made on the 1st day of July, 1885; but no such payment shall be made to any station until the trustees or other governing body of the college at which such station is located shall have executed, under their corporate seal, and filed with the Secretary of the Treasury, an agreement to expend all moneys received under this act for the sole and exclusive purpose and in the manner herein directed, and to maintain a farm of at least twenty-five acres in connection with such college, and shall also have executed and filed with said Secretary their bond, in the penal sum of $15,000, with two sufficient sureties, approved by the clerk of a court of record in such State, conditioned on the faithful expenditure of and accounting for all moneys so received: Provided, however, That out of the first annual appropriation so received by any station an amount not exceeding one-fifth may be expended in the erection, enlargement, or repair of a building or buildings necessary for carrying on the work of such station; and thereafter an amount not exceeding 5 per cent. of such annual appropriation may be so expended.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri (before the reading of the amendment was concluded). Mr. Chairman, enough of this amendment has been read to indicate to the House and to the Chair its character. It is not only the substance, it is the identical language, of a bill now pending before the House—a bill which has been reported by the Committee on Agriculture. I am compelled to make a point of order upon it, although it is a bill coming from our committee. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CULLEN] who reported the measure has now the authority and direction of the committee to move at the earliest possible time a suspension of the rules for its passage. But it would not be fair to the House or to the Committee on Agriculture to allow this measure to be attached to the general appropriation bill, because it is not only new legislation, but it makes large additional appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BUDD. If the gentleman will allow the amendment to be printed in full in the RECORD I will waive any demand for the further reading.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I have no objection to that. I will state that the measure which the gentleman seeks to present as an amendment received the unanimous vote of the Committee on Agriculture; and every member of the committee will be glad to have his assistance in passing it through the House.

Mr. BUDD. I desire to state, while the point of order is pending——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already sustained the point of order, but will withhold his decision until the gentleman from California has been heard.

Mr. BUDD. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the reading of the amendment will be completed.

Several MEMBERS. Let it be printed.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I object to the amendment being printed in the RECORD unless it be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it unnecessary that this amendment should be read further in order to disclose the fact that it is not in order. Whenever it appears on the face of a paper that it is out of order the point may be made at once, without waiting to hear the remainder of the proposition read.

Mr. BUDD. Is it understood that the entire amendment will be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I object to that unless it is read. I have no objection to its being read; but I object to printing the amendment in the RECORD unless it be read.

Mr. BUDD. I ask, then, that the reading be concluded.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I have no objection to that.

The Clerk resumed the reading, when

Several members objected to the further reading.

Mr. BUDD. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not move an amendment while the point of order is pending. Until this question of order is disposed of no further amendment is in order.

Mr. BUDD. I understood that the Chair had decided the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair withheld his decision in order to hear the gentleman from California.

Mr. BUDD. Then I ask that the Clerk read as a part of my remarks on the point of order——

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a question of order.

Mr. BUDD. But for the purpose of explaining the matter against which the point of order is raised it is in order that the matter should be laid before the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California for the purpose of enlightening the Chair need not call for the reading of the amendment. The point of order is directed to the decision of the Chair and not to the committee. The Chair sustains the point of order, and is of the opinion that a sufficient portion of the amendment has been read to disclose the fact it is not in order.

Mr. BUDD. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. COSGROVE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order to strike out the last word of an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not before the committee. The gentleman moves to strike out the last word of the clause which has been read and upon that he will be heard.

Mr. BUDD. I ask the Clerk to read as a part of my remarks the amendment which he had already begun reading.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the amendment.

Mr. COSGROVE. Is not the gentleman reading a part of his amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has sent it up, and asked to have it read as a part of his remarks.

Mr. COSGROVE. I make the point of order there is nothing before the committee which can be amended, the gentleman's amendment having been ruled out by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman has moved to strike out the last word of the pending clause.

Mr. COSGROVE. The amendment offered by the gentleman has been ruled out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. This is being read as a part of the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. COSGROVE. How can he move to strike out the last word when the amendment is not before the committee?

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. He moves to strike out the last word of the pending paragraph of the bill.

Mr. COSGROVE. I hope the time will not be taken up in this way.

Mr. BUDD. I hope this will not be taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. It will not.

The Clerk finished the reading of the proposed amendment.

Mr. BUDD. My object in offering this bill as an amendment is, that there is but little likelihood under the rules of the House of the committee being able to get time for its consideration. It is a bill of great importance. It is an amendment to the law in regard to the Agricultural Department, which should be made. It is demanded by nearly all the States of the Union; and if we are going to carry on the Agricultural Department and appropriate annually large sums for it we should at least have something practical. Therefore I offered the amendment, knowing the point of order would be raised, for the purpose of having it before the House, that the members might carefully examine the bill for the purpose of passing it, and giving time to its consideration when the committee bring it up.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I desire to say to the gentleman again, and to the House, that on last Wednesday the committee passed a resolution directing the gentleman from Illinois who reported this bill to the House, at the earliest opportunity or whenever it is in order under the rules, to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill, or to offer a resolution to set a day for its consideration. Every member of the Committee on Agriculture, so far as I recollect, is heartily in favor of the passage of the bill.

Mr. BUDD. I understand that to be the fact that every member of the committee desires it, and that perhaps nine-tenths of the House would like to pass it, but unless the rules are amended or suspended it can not pass.

I withdraw my formal amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of the bill whether there was any request on the part of the Agricultural Department for an appropriation for further experiments in the production of sugar from sorghum?

Mr. DIBRELL. Yes, sir; the amount of the bill was $20,000, but I am not certain but the Commissioner asked for $50,000.

Mr. DINGLEY withdrew his formal amendment.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, moved that the committee rise and report the bill and amendment to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had, according to order, under consideration a bill (H. R. 8030) making an appropriation for the Agricultural Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, demanded the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the vote on the passage of the bill will be taken by the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 210, nay 1, not voting 112; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

Mr. DIBRELL. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I guess we had better have them read.

The Clerk then recapitulated the names of those voting.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. CAMPBELL, of New York, with Mr. OCHILTREE.

Mr. HOBLITZELL with Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. LOWRY with Mr. CRAIG.

Mr. GREENLEAF with Mr. BREWER, of New York.

Mr. NICHOLLS with Mr. NELSON.

Mr. HAMMOND with Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR.

Mr. SMALLS. Mr. Speaker, I did not vote because I was informed that I was paired. I have not heard my pair read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the announcement of the gentleman's pair was made on the first roll-call to-day. Under the rules it is not required to announce a pair the second time on the same day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. VALENTINE. I ask my friend to give way for a moment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let us vote the motion down. I want to take up the Mexican pension bill this evening; and for that purpose I hope the motion to adjourn will not be agreed to.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 80, noes 66.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, and Mr. REED demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 48 members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 100, nays 107, not voting 116; as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. LAMB. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. MILLS. I object.

The Clerk then recapitulated the names of those voting.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. FORNEY with Mr. KEIFER, for the rest of this day.

Mr. BUDD with Mr. RYAN.

Mr. HENLEY. Mr. Speaker, I change my vote from "no" to "ay." I see there is no chance of accomplishing any business this evening.

The result of the vote was then announced, as above recorded.

Mr. MILLS. I now move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock to-night.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move to go to business on the Speaker's table, for the purpose of taking up and considering the Mexican pension bill.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Texas has moved that the House now take a recess.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But I was on the floor before the gentleman made his motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the motion of the gentleman in its proper order. The motion to take a recess has precedence over any other motion, except, of course, the motion to adjourn or to fix a day to which the House shall adjourn.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I give notice that if this motion is voted down I shall ask the House to take up the special order for immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Texas that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 36, noes 64.

Mr. MILLS. No quorum.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the motion of the gentleman from Texas prevails would the motion which I have submitted be the pending question to-night when the House assembles?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am inclined to think, then, that we had better vote to take a recess.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. If this motion of the gentleman from Texas does not prevail, I wish to ask whether or not I can call up the special order of April 18 in relation to the Mexican pension bill, reported from the Committee on Pensions? I would like very much to get that before the House for consideration.

The SPEAKER. There is a motion pending to take a recess, and a point of order made that no quorum has voted upon that motion. The Chair would be glad to hear and answer any parliamentary inquiry in relation to the matters before the House.

The gentleman from Texas makes the point that no quorum has voted. The Chair will order tellers.

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw the motion for a recess, and move that the House adjourn.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Is the motion of the gentleman from Texas in order?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I object to the withdrawal of the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Arkansas make a point of order against the right of the gentleman from Texas to withdraw the motion?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. No; I only wish to ask a parliamentary question—whether the motion is in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But I make the point of order that the gentleman has no right to withdraw the motion, a vote having been taken upon it.

The SPEAKER. A vote has not been taken upon the question presented by the gentleman from Texas. An attempt was made to take a vote upon it, but no quorum voted.

Mr. MILLS. And less than a quorum could not take a recess, but can adjourn.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No business has been transacted since the last vote on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to adjourn.

Mr. MILLS. But less than a quorum can adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the decisions on that point to be read.

Mr. MILLS. There can be but two motions in the absence of a quorum—the motion for a call of the House and a motion to adjourn.

The Clerk read as follows:

A motion to adjourn may be repeated, although no question has been put or decided since the former motion—Journal, 1, 23, page 651—but there must have been some intervening business.—Ibid., 1, 31, 1092.

[Another motion submitted, progress in debate, or reading a paper by the Clerk, an order to the yeas and nays, &c., has been considered such "intervening business" as will authorize the repetition of the motion to adjourn.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas, after the motion to adjourn was defeated, moved to take a recess. The Chair entertained the motion and stated it to the House, and the House proceeded to vote upon it; after which the gentleman from Texas withdrew the motion for a recess. All that is the transaction of business, and it appears on the Journal of the House as such.

Mr. MILLS. And I now move to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman now moves that the House adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 86, noes 65.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 54 members voting therefor.

The question being taken, there were—yeas 101, nays 100, not voting 123; as follows:

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. WAIT. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. MILLS. I object.

The SPEAKER requested the Clerk to call his name; and the name of Mr. JOHN G. CARLISLE having been called, he voted "ay."

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw my objection to dispensing with the reading of the names.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I renew the objection.

The Clerk read the names of members voting.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. CALDWELL with Mr. PHELPS, on this vote and for the rest of the day.

Mr. CONNOLLY with Mr. GEORGE, on this vote.

Mr. HOPKINS with Mr. MCCOID, for the remainder of this day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

And accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the following memorial of the Legislature of Kansas; which was read:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 12.

Be it resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That—

Whereas an effort is being made to secure legislation by Congress creating a so-called cattle-trail across the State of Kansas; and

Whereas such a measure would be prejudicial to the interests of the people of this, and beneficial only to parties who neither reside in nor pay taxes to this State: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That our Senators in Congress be instructed, and our Representatives requested, to resist any and all such attempted legislation by the use of every legitimate and proper means, to the end that justice may be done and the best interests of the people of Kansas subserved.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and is hereby, directed to forward copies of these resolutions, properly attested, to the President of the Senate, Speaker of the House of Representatives, and our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

I, E. B. Allen, secretary of state of the State of Kansas, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the original resolution now on file in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my official seal.

Done at Topeka, this 21st day of January, A. D. 1885.

[SEAL.] E. B. ALLEN,
Secretary of State.

Mr. INGALLS. I presume the memorial should be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FRYE. No; it should be referred to the Committee on Commerce, as the bill in relation to that subject is now pending before that committee.

Mr. INGALLS. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SAWYER presented a memorial of the iron mining and manufacturing companies of the Lake Superior region, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed Spanish reciprocity treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MORRILL. I present the petition of S. C. Pomeroy, John Coughlin, William Maipe & Co., O. M. Bryant, Hayward & Hutchinson, B. H. Warner, and a large number of persons and firms, representing business houses of the city of Washington, stating that the best location for the proposed city post-office is square 406, between Eighth and Ninth and E and F streets northwest, and praying that it be purchased by the Government for that purpose. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I also present another petition of the same purport, praying that the location of the proposed city post-office may be on square 406, between Eighth and Ninth and E and F streets northwest, signed by F. B. McGuire, Thomas J. Fisher & Co., R. T. Merrick, N. W. Burchell, H. A. Willard, John Sherman & Co., T. E. Waggaman, and various other persons. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented a petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the improvement of the Alleghany River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the West Branch Lumberman's Exchange, of Williamsport, Pa., favoring the improvement of the West Branch of the Susquehanna River; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HALE presented the petition of S. M. Ackley, lieutenant United States Navy, and other naval officers, praying for legislation in relation to promotion and rank in the Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. FRYE presented the petition of Isaac Emery and others, citizens of Portland, Me., and the petition of C. P. Watlocke and 200 other citizens of Portland, Me., praying for the ratification of the proposed Spanish reciprocity treaty; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Trade, of Bath, Me., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed Spanish reciprocity treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WILSON presented the petition of Oscar Larson and 300 other citizens of Iowa, and the petition of E. W. Farnsworth and 500 other citizens of Iowa, praying for the passage of an act declaring a forfeiture of the unearned lands embraced in the grant to the Sioux City and Saint Paul Railroad land grant, and being the lands withheld from that company by the State of Iowa; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LAPHAM. I present the petition of Alice C. Underwood, of Virginia, in which she recites that her mother, Maria G. Underwood, who was the administrator of the late John C. Underwood, died on the 19th day of July last, and that the petitioner has been duly appointed executrix, and qualified, and given bonds as such. She asks for the substitution of her name in the resolution now pending for an allowance to the estate of her father, John C. Underwood, for expenses incurred in pressing his right to a seat as Senator-elect from the State of Virginia. I give notice that at an early day I shall ask to take up the resolution for consideration. I move that the petition lie upon the table until that time.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of residents of Massachusetts and New York, praying that the United States acquire title to the two canals connecting Portage Lake with Lake Superior, and make those canals free of toll to the public; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HAMPTON presented a petition of the mayor and aldermen of Columbia, S. C., praying for the establishment of a postal free-delivery in that city; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PLUMB. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7299) forfeiting a part of certain lands granted to the State of Iowa, to aid in the construction of railroads in that State, and for other purposes, report it with an amendment. I am instructed by the committee also to ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill at the present time. It is a House bill. The bill and the proposed amendment have been subjected to the scrutiny of all those who are in any wise interested in it by reason of representation, and the amendment is without objection, as I think. It is very important for a good many reasons that the bill should be disposed of at as early a day as possible. While not of that importance which concerns the convenience of a class of people, it is as I think important.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the bill reported by him from the Committee on Public Lands be now considered. Is there objection?

Mr. LAPHAM. I should like to hear it read.

Mr. PLUMB. The amendment of the committee consists of the substitution of a new bill for all after the enacting clause, and I ask that the Chief Clerk may read that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks that the bill be read. If there be no objection——

Mr. BAYARD. I do not desire to delay the Senator's bill, but a resolution was offered by me at the close of the last legislative session which I desire to have disposed of before the close of the morning business.

Mr. PLUMB. If the bill leads to debate or is liable to lead to any protracted discussion, I shall not insist on its further consideration this morning.

Mr. BAYARD. If the Senator assents to it, I will ask him to withdraw his request in order to allow me to call up the resolution offered by me at the close of the last legislative session. I apprehend that that resolution will scarcely lead to debate, and its adoption, I think, ought to take place at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that debate on these requests is not in order, and that the resolution named by the Senator from Delaware will be laid before the Senate when the order of resolutions is reached.

Mr. PLUMB. I think that will probably accomplish the Senator's purpose just as well.

Mr. BAYARD. I shall consent now, but may object afterward.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York, pending the request for unanimous consent, asks that the bill be read for information. If there be no objection the bill will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. For what purpose is the bill being read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHERMAN in the chair). The Chair understands that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] reported the bill from the Committee on Public Lands and asked the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to its consideration. The bill is being read for information.

Mr. HARRIS. We certainly can not consider during the morning hour a bill such as that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee object?

Mr. HARRIS. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee objects, and the bill goes upon the Calendar.

Mr. PLUMB. I give notice that I shall ask the Senate at an early day to consider the bill in the morning hour.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the memorial of J. W. Niles, representing the association of colored people known as the "Indemnity party," and other colored citizens of Arkansas, praying for the equal protection of the laws in securing homesteads, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it lie on the table; which was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. The Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 2551) for the relief of George E. Moore, of the District of Columbia, and also the petition of said Moore praying for certain relief, direct me to report a substitute for the bill. I ask that it be printed, and give notice, it being important as a matter of time that it be acted upon very promptly, that I shall to-morrow morning ask the Senate to take it up and consider it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

ROBERT STRACHAN AND OTHERS.

Mr. PIKE. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1501) for the relief of Robert Strachan, John H. Johnson, Samuel M. Bryan, George Combs, Annie Botts, and George A. Hawkins, to report it adversely; and I am also instructed to report a resolution referring the claim to the Court of Claims. I ask that the resolution may be read and acted upon at the present time.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the claim of Robert Strachan, of Washington, D. C., be referred, in accordance with the provisions of section 1059 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to the Court of Claims of the United States, together with the vouchers, proofs, and papers pertaining thereto, to be heard and determined by said court.

Mr. PLATT. Is that resolution under consideration?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Subject to objection.

Mr. PLATT. I do not object to it, but I should like to inquire what the necessity for it is. Has not the committee the province of referring the claim without the adoption of the resolution?

Mr. PIKE. Not without the sanction of the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. This is the usual course.

Mr. PIKE. This does not come under the so-called Bowman act, but under the general provisions of the Revised Statutes, section 1059.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Mr. PIKE. I move that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

SMITHSONIAN REPORT FOR 1884.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, reported without amendment the following concurrent resolution; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the annual report of the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum for the year 1884 be printed, and that there be printed 16,060 extra copies, of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, and 6,060 for the House of Representatives, and 7,000 for the Smithsonian Institution.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE SENATOR ANTHONY.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2577) to authorize the printing of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Henry B. Anthony, to report it without amendment, and I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MOTHER OF J. P. RINGGOLD.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred a resolution to pay the mother of John P. Ringgold, deceased, late clerk to the Committee on Commerce, a sum equal to six months' salary, to report it favorably and without amendment. I ask that the resolution be immediately acted upon.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution; and it was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the mother of John P. Ringgold, deceased, late clerk to the Committee on Commerce, a sum equal to six months' salary as clerk aforesaid at the rate of $2,220 per annum, out of the "miscellaneous items" of the contingent fund of the Senate, the said sum to be considered as including the funeral expenses and all other allowance.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 2579) granting a pension to Catharine S. Hewett; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BECK introduced a bill (S. 2580) allowing the widow of E. Rumsey Wing, late minister to Ecuador, one year's salary; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 2581) for the relief of C. M. Nittig; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 2582) to create the office of assistant chief signal officer, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MILLER, of California, introduced a bill (S. 2583) for the relief of Charles Murphy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 2584) for the relief of Christian R. Purdum, Henry E. Clark, John M. Lamb, and Julius C. Shainwald; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 2585) for the relief of James Albert Bonsack, of the State of Virginia; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 2586) for the relief of Ira Hawarth; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENTS TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COCKRELL, Mr. MCMILLAN, and Mr. VEST submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the Indian appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (S. 729) for the protection of children in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 8030) making an appropriation for the Agricultural Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PROTECTION OF CHILDREN.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to bill (S. 729) for the protection of children in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

1. In line 11 of section 2, that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with the addition of the words "or sight;" so that the clause will read "in their presence or sight;" and the House agree to the same.

2. In lines 2 and 3 of section 4, that in lieu of the word "twenty-one," as amended by the House to read "sixteen," both Houses agree to the substitution of the word "eighteen."

H. H. RIDDLEBERGER,
AUSTIN F. PIKE,
JOSEPH E. BROWN,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

WM. L. WILSON,
J. THOS. SPRIGGS,
E. JEFFORDS,
Conferees on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

ATTEMPT TO DESTROY BRITISH PARLIAMENT HOUSE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. "Concurrent or other resolutions" being in order, the Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted on Saturday last by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD].

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States has heard with indignation and profound sorrow of the attempt to destroy the Houses of Parliament and other public buildings in London, and hereby expresses its horror and detestation of such monstrous crimes against civilization.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I am better satisfied after the lapse of a day to ask now for the adoption by the Senate of the resolution offered by me at the close of the last legislative session, because this body has now the opportunity to affirm deliberately what spontaneously and instinctively prompted expression on the instant of information of the uncivilized, cruel, and barbarous attempt to destroy in another country human life, and with it public buildings dedicated to a government of laws, in the vain hope, possibly, to gain relief from suffering by thus overthrowing law itself in its very citadel, and at the cost of suffering and death to innocent persons.

It seemed to me eminently proper that as a law-making body of the American people the Senate should express its antagonism to a spirit which by destroying law will necessarily destroy all hopes of that liberty that can only exist under law.

To give emphatic expression to the meaning of this action, I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware asks for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution. It is usual first to ascertain if the call for the yeas and nays is seconded.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. When we reach that point I shall make the motion to refer.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion to refer the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia moves to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations, on which motion the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President, I ask to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations because I presume that that is the appropriate committee for the reference of such a resolution. I can receive information such as we have had here with "profound sorrow;" I am not always prepared to say that I receive it with "indignation." I would prefer that the Committee on Foreign Relations should report back the resolution after they shall have received more information than we have up to this time.

I believe the President of the Senate, on Saturday evening, ruled that this was legislative business, and that it should properly go into the legislative Journals or the record of the Senate, and I supposed it was understood here that what was said in connection with the resolution at that time would also make a part of the Senate record. It does not so appear. Warranted by the ruling of the President of the Senate, I can go back to Saturday evening and there find that a number of Associated Press telegrams were read in the Senate announcing that certain things had occurred in England, and then it was that the Senator from Delaware offered this resolution. I asked that the doors might be opened and the injunction of secrecy removed, when the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] asked that the resolution might go over until this morning. That is the record. Now we have it this morning in the regular order of business.

It is a resolution expressive of the indignation of the Senate of the United States at the blowing up of certain buildings in England, because forsooth it was destructive of buildings in which the laws of England are made which guarantee liberty to the subjects of Great Britain. That reason is not sufficient to induce me to vote for the resolution. We can not be expected to approve all the methods of the Irish people, but while we are preparing and experimenting with dynamite to blow vessels out of the water and to drown people in the ocean, it scarcely becomes us to say that a people who do not constitute a government and can not make a proclamation of war shall not use the same instruments of war that we would use under the same circumstances. Put any of us in a country where we could not own land, where we could not exercise the God-given right of owning a foot of land, even though we earned it by the sweat of our faces, and then see what kind of methods we would employ.

I do not mean to justify the method, but I do mean to say that I shall not here vote for any resolution that may be distorted into an expression of sympathy, or even of common fellowship, with a country that knows nothing but tyranny, that practices nothing but cruelty in her wars, and gives none of her subjects the exercise of that liberty which we say on this side of the Atlantic belongs to every one. But a short time ago both Houses of the United States Congress were somewhat disturbed by the rendering of a judicial opinion in England, then trying some Irishmen, in which the judge violated every principle of the common law (and about all I like England for is her common law), violated every principle of the Bill of Rights, of Magna Charta, of the Constitution of the United States, by determining a question of fact for the jury itself. Was there any expression of indignation here by the Senate then? None that I heard of; none that the country has heard of. If an English judge can sit upon the bench there, with an Irishman before him on trial for his life, and can say to the jury "these are the facts," and that elicits no expression of indignation on the part of the law-making power of the United States, then I ask to be excused from expressing my sympathy in a matter such as we now have under consideration.

Now, sir, I say again that I am not here to approve these methods; but we do know the fact that there is war absolute between Ireland and England, so far as Irishmen without a government can make it. We are so neutral here as that some Senators think we ought not to dig a ditch without the consent of England—so liberal in everything that we can not express an opinion about anything concerning England unless it is an opinion adverse to a poor, struggling island that we need not fear.

Ah! sir, we find the fact staring us in the face to-day that a government which boasts of its common law, of which the Senator from Delaware has spoken as a government of law and liberty, has not dared to do justice to the population of Ireland for a hundred or more years. Though her natural increase of population has been equal to that of England herself, yet 2,000,000 less people inhabit the island to-day than did inhabit it two decades—twenty years—ago.

I am not here to express an opinion on matters of this sort or resolutions of this kind under these peculiar circumstances. I am entirely willing to let those people alone, for any resolution that we pass will be construed there as an expression of sympathy and fellowship with a country of cruelty and tyranny in dealing with her provincial subjects.

For that reason, and for that alone, I ask to have this resolution referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Mr. President, I do not wish to enter into any debate on the questions raised by the Senator from Virginia. I do not think it necessary to refer this resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations, because I believe it is expressive of the sentiment of the American people universally, including all classes of citizens of the United States, and I think we can vote upon it without any report from a committee.

Mr. LAPHAM. I offer an amendment, which I trust the Senator from Delaware will accept.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is not in order pending a motion to refer.

Mr. HOAR. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It may be read for information.

Mr. LAPHAM. I think it will receive unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "London," in the third line, it is proposed to insert:

And to imperil the lives of innocent and unsuspecting persons.

Mr. BAYARD. I very gladly accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware modifies his resolution by accepting the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. The yeas and nays having been ordered, it requires unanimous consent to modify the resolution. I suppose there will be no objection, however.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there unanimous consent that the resolution may be modified in the way proposed? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I am forced to object to it. I object because I do not understand that we have any information on which to base such a resolution. I do not understand that we have any information here upon which to base such a resolution as this, and therefore I object. I can see every day where we get information of some building being blown up or something being done; but we do not act here on that sort of information. I object to the modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia objecting, the resolution is still pending without amendment; and the question is on the reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 2, nays 58; as follows:

YEAS—2.

Riddleberger,	Van Wyck.

NAYS—58.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Jonas,	Pike,
Bayard,	Dolph,	Jones of Florida,	Platt,
Beck,	Frye,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,
Bowen,	George,	Kenna,	Pugh,
Brown,	Gibson,	Lapham,	Ransom,
Butler,	Gorman,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Call,	Groome,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hale,	Manderson,	Slater,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hampton,	Maxey,	Vance,
Chace,	Harris,	Miller of Cal.,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Harrison,	Miller of N. Y.,	Walker,
Coke,	Hawley,	Morgan,	Williams,
Colquitt,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Wilson.
Conger,	Ingalls,	Palmer,
Cullom,	Jackson,	Pendleton,

ABSENT—16.

Allison,	Fair,	Lamar,	Sabin,
Blair,	Farley,	Logan,	Saulsbury,
Camden,	Garland,	Mahone,	Sewell,
Edmunds,	Hill,	Mitchell,	Voorhees.

So the motion to refer was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. LAPHAM. I now renew the amendment I offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from New York will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "London," in line 3 of the resolution, it is proposed to insert:

And to imperil the lives of innocent and unsuspecting persons.

So as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States has heard with indignation and profound sorrow of the attempt to destroy the Houses of Parliament and other public buildings in London, and to imperil the lives of innocent and unsuspecting persons, and hereby expresses its horror and detestation of such monstrous crimes against civilization.

Mr. BAYARD. I believe I have the right as the mover of the resolution to accept the modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays having been ordered, it can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. FRYE. There can be a reconsideration of the vote ordering the yeas and nays, I think, without difficulty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment may be acted upon in a moment by a vote.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I shall not object any longer to having the resolution improved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia withdraws his objection to the modification.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Yes, sir, and I now move to postpone the consideration of the resolution until Wednesday immediately after the morning hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia withdraws his objection to the modification proposed by the Senator from Delaware, and it is incorporated in the resolution.

Mr. BAYARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I withdraw the objection to the amendment of the Senator from New York only because I think the resolution is in such shape that it can not be very materially damaged or improved by any amendment that may be placed upon it. I ask that the Senate postpone the consideration of the resolution until Wednesday immediately after the morning hour. We shall have had time then to know exactly what we are expressing our sympathy with in the resolution. We know nothing this morning that we did not know Saturday afternoon. We are rushing in here to pass a resolution that is to fix our position of sympathy on one side or the other of a contest that we can not close our eyes to or fail to see is going on; and we have nothing upon which to base it except the cablegrams of Saturday evening and those which appear in the newspapers of this morning.

Now, sir, I think the Senate of the United States can afford to wait until Wednesday. The passage of this resolution to-day does not place back any stone that has been blown from place by dynamite; the passage of this resolution to-day does not restore a lost limb or a life, if there be one lost. It simply puts us upon record here as the Senate of the United States in the expression of sympathy with England and against Ireland. That is what it does; nothing more, and nothing less; and when this resolution is passed, that will be the shape into which it will be distorted, I care not how it may be amended or how it may be improved by gentlemen who offer amendments to it.

I am not much of a stickler for precedents; but I question whether the Senate can find a precedent that will justify this hasty action here on Monday morning. I can not close my eyes and declare I will not see. I know as well what the bug is under this chip as I know that the resolution is pending here for the consideration of the Senate. It is not a question of socialism; it is not a question of nihilism; it is not a question of murder by one man of another; but it is a great and growing question that has been great from its inception, and has been growing from the time that it started.

If I could simply vote for a resolution that would express my regret at the death of a policeman over yonder—and I believe he is the only man, so far as I have heard, that was killed—if I could express my regret at the injury of any children and women in London, if I could express my regret here at the mere fact of the Parliament houses having been blown up and the Tower of London having been shaken, if the resolution were put in that form, I should vote for it readily. But when you offer a resolution which is really expressive of the sympathy of this Government with that, then I am not ready to vote for it and can not. Though I may be the only one voting against it, I may reverently thank God that I have got moderately used to voting by myself. I therefore ask that this resolution go over until Wednesday. I think that is a reasonable request. By that time we shall have more information. We shall have time then to frame a resolution expressive of our regret at the death of any of our friends if any of them have been killed; we may express our regret for those who have been maimed by name, if that be Senatorial; but to express any regret or to express anything that may be construed by any possibility into an expression of even common fellowship with the Government of England in the struggle which Ireland is making against her or she is making against Ireland, I can not and will not vote.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not propose to enter into any discussion at this time. The state of my throat and lungs would prevent it if I were otherwise inclined. I only rise in consequence of a word which has been uttered by the Senator from Virginia and in consequence of an intimation which I see reported in the morning papers attributed to the representative of her Britannic Majesty's government in this country.

The Senator from Virginia seems to treat the occurrence which has taken place in London, of the authenticity of the reports of which there can be no question, as if it were a method of warfare adopted by Ireland or the Irish people against England, and their method of asserting their rights in the contest which has been going on for so many centuries. Now I have among my own constituency, in the city where I dwell and in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, a very large number of persons of Irish descent. They are an intelligent, patriotic, manly, brave race. Their clergy are scholars and men of learning, men of piety, men of humanity, and men of charity. Their youth are growing up under the influence of American institutions and American schools, acquiring with a marvelous rapidity the habits of free government and the character which becomes freemen and sovereigns in a free government. And I think I am justified in stating that the doctrine expressed in this resolution is their doctrine as it is the doctrine of all other American citizens; that whatever wrongs they have to complain of, great as they have been as is admitted in the past, great as they continue to be as I believe in the present at the hands of England toward the island of their origin, and for which they have the love that all mankind have for the spot where they or their ancestors were born, the making by secret methods of assassination a warfare, not upon the wrongdoer, not upon the representative of the wrongdoer, not upon the army the instrument of the wrongdoer, but upon unoffending women and children, is as repugnant to the nature of that generous and brave race as it is to the nature of any other class of American citizens.

I see attributed to Her Britannic Majesty's representative at Washington the suggestion that the Government or people of the United States have in some mode been to blame or remiss in the matter of legal prohibition against such designs originating in this country, and I see reported from the British press some indications of a feeling there that America has been at fault in extending her right of asylum upon her soil to Irish exiles. I believe America has always performed the duties of neutrality as required by the law of nations and as required by a sound and wise regard for the interests of other civilized nations. We can not undertake to deal with mere speech; we can not undertake to deal with mere violent expressions of indignation; we can not undertake to deal with mere vapor; and, if we did, those things would be more dangerous to foreign governments if they were repressed than if they were suffered to be discharged and pass off in the natural way.

I think the United States will be as ready to make strict and efficient laws as she has in the past against the actual originating crimes, offenses, violence upon her soil directed against foreign governments or foreign peoples as any other nation ever has been or ever will be. Certainly we can submit our conduct in that respect to a comparison with that of the Government of Great Britain without shrinking or flinching.

But that is not the question of the present hour, and I should not have adverted to it but for these utterances which have been attributed to the British minister.

I shall give my vote for the resolution submitted by the honorable Senator from Delaware, with great confidence that in giving it I express the opinion of the brave and manly American citizens of the Irish race who are among my constituents, and the brave and manly lovers of Ireland as the land of their nativity, as much as the opinion of any other class of American citizens.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President, I should not ask the indulgence of the Senate a moment longer but for the fact that the Senator from Massachusetts has assumed that I hold that this proposed mode of warfare was adopted by the Irish people. I said I was not called on here to approve the method even if it had been adopted. I disclaim that I have any knowledge of this, and I also deny that any other Senator here has any knowledge upon which he can base any assumption as to whether this was the work of a few people or a number of people, whether it was the work of one man or a thousand or a million. That is the reason I asked that we shall not express any opinion about it at all. I repeat that I am not called upon to express my approval of these methods. I am not called upon to express my disapproval of anything, nor to express sympathy with England in this matter. That was all, and that was the only reason why I objected to the resolution.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I regard the resolution offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] as appropriate, and it will command my cordial support.

If the deplorable transaction to which it relates concerned only the destruction of private property and the lives of individual citizens, the resolution might be held to be out of season and irrelevant, but it is manifest that the dynamite was employed to accomplish a public purpose—to destroy the lives of the members of the Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, and the houses in which the British Parliament convenes, the most venerable parliamentary assembly in the world, upon which our own Congress was modeled by our forefathers, who were, it must be remembered, born and reared British subjects.

Kindred in institutions and in blood, it is meet and proper that the American Senate should express its sympathy for the law-givers and people of the United Kingdom upon the occasion of their escape from so great a public calamity and its abhorrence of the atrocious crime that was designed. But, sir, not only was the purpose reprehensible, but the means employed were simply diabolical.

Persons who use dynamite stealthily and by secret plots and agencies to take life and destroy property dedicated to public or private purposes place themselves in the category of those who find in poison the proper means to execute the basest passions of the human heart.

The plotters and perpetrators of the foulest crimes by these methods and means are what pirates are on the sea—they are assassins, the most accursed and degraded of all criminals. They are the common enemies of mankind—hostes humani generis.

Sir, they are no patriots, but the enemies of their country, whatever may be the country that endures the shame to harbor or to own them. They are not soldiers, for no man that ever carried a musket bravely on the field of battle could find it in his heart to do murder by stealth; soldiers can not be assassins. Nor are they brave men, for secret murder is the resort of craven cowardice.

Above all, they are not Irishmen, for Irishmen are patriots; they are soldiers and brave men, who never strike in the back.

Ireland does not seek a remedy for the wrongs that centuries of unjust oppression have imposed upon her by poison and dynamite, by assassination and crime. She will find it in the intelligence and manhood of her sons and in the resources of civilization, which offer to her, and to all others who may be suffering from tyranny, the hope and means for the recovery of justice and freedom.

I see, therefore, in this resolution nothing unfriendly to Ireland, but a fitting expression on the part of the American Senate, nay, on behalf of the American citizens of Irish descent, brave and manly and heroic, in whatever part of our land they may live—a fitting expression of our sympathy for those who have escaped a great catastrophe, and our earnest detestation of a species of crime that stains the civilization of our age.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I observe in the dispatches from London, printed on Saturday evening and yesterday morning, that there was a profound feeling expressed among the citizens of Great Britain in favor of bringing some pressure to bear upon the people of the United States to prevent further operations by those who are employing dynamite as an instrument of destruction. The dispatches further said that this sentiment had been somewhat mollified by information of the bill offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] in the Senate of the United States, as expressive of a determination on the part of the American people that this Government should not be held in any way whatever responsible for these revolting outrages. I notice also an additional statement, that at a railway station an American traveler was assailed by infuriated Englishmen because he was an American, and only escaped violence by the display of use of his revolver.

Mr. President, I shall vote for the adoption of the resolution offered by the Senator from Delaware, not as expressive in any way whatever of the inculpation of the American people in these crimes; not because I believe there has been any sympathy on the part of the United States with those who have been engaged in them; not as an apology; not as an implication of any conviction that there has been guilty complicity on the part of any of the citizens of this country, but only as a declaration of my abhorrence of these methods that have been employed, and my conviction that those who employ them are not alone the worst enemies of the cause that they assume to represent, but of the cause of civilization and good government everywhere.

Sir, the bombs that shattered the walls of the Parliament Houses of England and the Tower of London shook the foundations of every capital in Christendom. There was no parliament house from Paris to St. Petersburg that did not tremble at that blow. Such acts are declarations of war against society, and merit and must receive the condemnation and abhorrence of all patriotic and thoughtful men.

But, sir, there is something worse in society than dynamite, and that is the passions, the wrongs, and the guilt which make dynamite possible. The worst dynamite is in the soul of man. Poverty, helpless and hopeless, oppression, ignorance, vice, the wrongs of centuries, are the ingredients of that minister of destruction. Every effect has its cause. Tyranny makes the nihilist. Despotism makes the Carbonari and the Commune. Free and happy citizens do not murder monarchs, nor destroy their capitols; and I intend by my vote on this resolution to express my detestation of injustice everywhere, and to say further that if it assumed that the American people or that the Irishmen naturalized in America are in any way responsible for or in sympathy with these crimes, or are in any manner their accomplices and abettors, I repel and disavow it.

The terrible events of Saturday convey a solemn and portentous lesson. No matter what opinion the student of history may have about the course of England toward Ireland for centuries; of her policies in the East Indies, in China, in Egypt, in New Zealand, in all portions of the earth where her power has been exerted, there can be but one opinion of the lesson that these occurrences teach; and that is, that for nations, as for men, there is nothing ultimately so unprofitable as injustice. The thief robs himself; the murderer inflicts a deeper wound upon himself than that which slays his victim; a nation or a state that imposes chains upon any portion of its citizens or its subjects places heavier manacles upon itself than those which bind its helpless victims; and those who deny the rights of mankind or impair the essential prerogatives of freedom anywhere must not forget that behind them, silent and tardy it may be, but inexorable and relentless, stands, with uplifted hand, the menacing specter of vengeance and retribution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Virginia to postpone the further consideration of the resolution until Wednesday next.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. As the Senator from Kansas has referred to one incident, I have a paper in my hand giving a full account which I will read:

An American traveler, whose name is not known, was in a train of the Northwestern Railway going from London to Liverpool on Saturday, when an excited discussion arose over America's responsibility for the dynamite explosions. The opinion was freely expressed that the United States was greatly to blame for harboring such men as O'Donovan Rossa. The American defended his country in vigorous language, and was attacked by a crowd of the passengers. The American drew a revolver and kept his assailants at bay until the train reached Chester, when he jumped from the carriage and escaped.

That is about as nearly killing an American as I can hear that any Englishman came by the explosion, according to the dispatches which we had read in the Senate up to Saturday evening, when this resolution was promulgated. I can appreciate very fully what the Senator from Kansas has said, and I make the application as I suppose where he intended to direct it when he said dynamite is in the souls of men and men make dynamite possible. I am not defending dynamite. I am not here to defend the use of dynamite; I am not here to condemn it. I am not here to condemn it because it is used in violation of laws or of constitutions by a people who have no government with power to declare war. I can recall—and it is an unpleasant recollection—what transpired once at Harper's Ferry, when the lives of women and children were placed at imminent risk. That was at a time when the Constitution of this country said that slavery might live south of a certain parallel of latitude. I can remember these things, and the public sentiment of this country said that the men for whose benefit the Harper's Ferry raid was intended to liberate ought to be free, and they justified the means to that end. Constitutions were pierced by pikes, and laws were trodden under foot; and yet the decision of this country was finally that constitutions were made only to guarantee the liberties to which men were entitled. I say here, sir, from this place, that the people of Ireland, save and except only the fact that they are not chattels subject to sale and delivery, are as much in slavery as the African was in the South; ay, more, for among these certain persons could own property and, in some States South, vote; but an Irishman can not even own the land where he lives except with the consent of the British Crown. Ask me then to give expression to anything that can be tortured into sympathy with England in a matter of this sort! I can not and will not do it.

It is true, as the Senator from Louisiana says, these Irishmen are not soldiers. No, sir; they are not citizens even. Soldiers are never assassins, he says. True, brave soldiers never were. An Irishman can not even be a citizen, much less a soldier, and he can not be a policeman unless he first turns his back upon his own country. If the blowing up of the Parliament House of England shook every government center from Paris to St. Petersburg I am glad to know that we did not feel the thrill over here; and but for the introduction of the resolution offered by the Senator from Delaware, it would have passed away with the dispatches of Saturday and Monday morning.

Now, sir, I ask whether any Senator here has heard a single reason advanced why the Senate of the United States should pass this resolution. There is no reason except the one that the resolution was offered and is pending, and you dare not vote against it. That is the only reason for voting for it. When we vote for it we do something affirmative; and if we were wise we would do nothing affirmative, and then we could be charged with no neglect of duty.

No single reason has yet been advanced why this resolution should pass. It just simply stands here as a resolution of an experienced Senator from the State of Delaware, and therefore it must pass. That is all there is in it. If there is any other reason I have failed up to this time to find it in anything that has been said in its behalf.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, the American people have twice had solemn experience of the awful crime of assassination. In each case the wild news went shuddering on the wings of the lightning to the uttermost corners of the earth, and from every tribe and nation, pagan and civilized, came back solemn and indignant denunciation. The crimes in question to-day are far worse, far meaner, far viler, and more devilish. They have not the logic of assassination; they are not directed, as the bomb was against Alexander or against Napoleon, to the ruler of a country. They are simply an insensate dash against humanity. Who suffers? Two poor policemen, fifteen or twenty women or children out for a holiday visiting the public buildings. What "good" will this resolution do? I do not know. It does me good to curse the crime. It does the world good to hear from the whole world a denunciation of such deeds.

I should have been glad to simply record my name in a unanimous vote of the Senate in condemnation. I decline to discuss any of the questions which mere imagination can connect with it. The Irish agitation has nothing to do with it. I protest that I never heard an Irishman who did not lament such outrages, because fools charge them to his race. I lay aside all other questions, and I protest that men of all creeds, all races, and all nations curse this work.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia to postpone the consideration of the resolution until Wednesday next.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yea 1, nays 62; as follows:

YEA—1.

Riddleberger.

NAYS—62.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Jackson,	Pike,

So the resolution was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Concurrent and other resolutions are still in order.

Mr. CULLOM. It is now within a few minutes of 2 o'clock, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. McMILLAN. I hope the Senator from Illinois will withdraw that for the purpose of allowing morning business to be presented.

Mr. CULLOM. I will withdraw the motion for morning business.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to say a word before that motion is put, if I may be allowed. I hope the Senate——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent to address the Senate on the motion of the Senator from California that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. CULLOM. I shall not address the Senate at length. I only rose to express the hope that the Senate, instead of going into executive session to-day, would give its consideration to the unfinished business, the bill in relation to interstate commerce. I think if we are going to secure any legislation upon that subject, we ought to proceed with the consideration of the bill until it is concluded and some measure is passed. I hope that the Senator from California will not insist upon his motion to-day, but will allow us to go on with the consideration of that bill. I think in one or two days, at any rate, we shall be able to complete the consideration of that bill and get some measure through the Senate. I think it will be a saving of time, as well as securing legislation on an important subject, if that bill be allowed to proceed.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent to address the Senate on this motion. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from California will proceed.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I am forbidden by the rules to state the reasons why I make this motion, but those reasons are well known to all the Senators present. There is business before the Senate which can only be done in executive session that is of more pressing importance than any other. I am as anxious to have a bill passed of some sort regulating interstate commerce as the Senator from Illinois, but in the condition of affairs I deem it proper to press forward the other business which is before the Senate.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I desire to ask the Senator from California to withhold his motion for a moment, as I desire to take up Order of Business 866, being Senate bill 1291.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York appeals to the Senator from California to withdraw his motion.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Only for a moment.

Mr. MILLER, of California. What is the bill?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I desire to call up a bill for passage.

Mr. MILLER, of California. That can be done to-morrow morning. I would rather not give way now.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. It will take only a moment, as it will not lead to discussion.

Mr. MILLER, of California. If it causes no discussion, I yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California withdraws his motion.

LANDS FORMED IN SAGINAW BAY.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate bill 1291.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1291) to quiet and confirm the title to certain lands in the Saginaw Bay, in the State of Michigan. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that had better be read in the first place. I should like to hear it read to see whether it is subject to objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information if there be no objection.

The bill was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion that this bill be now considered.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments. The first amendment was after the word "relinquished," at the end of line 8, to strike out "and granted;" so as to read:

That all the rights and title of the United States in and to all the accretions and marsh formations now existent connected with and added to Mai-Sou Island; in the Saginaw Bay, situate in township 16 north, of range 9 east, in the State of Michigan, since said island was surveyed under the authority of the United States, are hereby relinquished to the person who at the time of the passage of this act has the legal title to said Mai-Sou Island, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That before such relinquishment shall take effect the person having the legal title to Mai-Sou Island as aforesaid shall pay to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, for the use of the United States, one dollar and a quarter per acre for the land so relinquished.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. In the fifth line I move to strike out the word "added" and insert "adjacent," so as to read "connected with and adjacent to Mai-Sou Island."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. It seems to me there ought to be some explanation of this bill. It may possibly be all right, but we know nothing about it except that the United States is giving away a lot of land.

Mr. CONGER. Will the Senator allow me to offer the amendments I propose?

Mr. PLATT. I have no objection to that being done.

Mr. CONGER. I move to insert in the sixth line, after the words "range nine east," for the purpose of confirming this: "In sections 3, 4, 8, 9, 10, and 17 in Huron County." This is an amendment to limit and define the relinquishment. A little of this marsh and accretion land comes in each of these sections, and I wish to limit it to the sections.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I move to add at the end of the proviso:

And a survey and plat of said relinquished lands shall be filed in the United States land office at Saginaw, State of Michigan, and in the General Land Office, city of Washington, District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business of the former sitting, being the bill (H. R. 5461) to regulate interstate commerce and to prohibit unjust discriminations by common carriers. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

Mr. CULLOM. I only rise to express the hope that the Senate will proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I ask unanimous consent to lay aside the regular order until the other bill is finished.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that the regular order be informally laid aside and that the Senate continue the consideration of the bill taken up on his motion.

Mr. CULLOM. I inquire of the Senator from New York if there is going to be debate?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. The amendments are all offered and are all agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. Then I shall not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none, and the Senate resumes, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill last before the Senate. The Senator from Michigan has proposed an additional amendment. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. I ascertained upon inquiry at the desk that there is no written report accompanying this bill. I ask the Senator who reports it what amount of land is thus disposed of?

Mr. CONGER. I only know from the map of the original survey of an island in Saginaw Bay some six or seven miles from the mainland; that at the time of that survey there was near it shoal land upon which reeds and rushes grew under water. Since that time by subsequent examinations and surveys a different state of things is found to exist. This island was sold and conveyed by patent to the party whose assignee is now claiming it. By the action of the waves on the bay there has been a channel formed through the island and the soil has been driven from the island toward the mainland and increased the elevation of the land under water so as to make the marshy land adjacent to it suitable for use. The island lies remote from the mainland in Saginaw Bay. The waters around it for several miles are so shallow, only five or six feet in depth, that they are not used for navigation purposes. The owner of the island purchased it twenty-five or thirty years ago and desires to connect the marshy land and reclaim the land which has washed away and now forms accretions, for the purpose of further improvements upon it.

There is a map the Senator can see among the papers which explains the situation better than I can in words. There is perhaps no conflicting claim in regard to any use or occupancy of these marshes, but the bill itself reserves all rights that anybody may have.

Mr. BAYARD. It is not the question of right, but we ought to know, before we pass such a bill, in definite terms what is the area of land released; and this being public land of the United States the usual reservation of metals and minerals should accompany the grant. This is a release of the title of the United States to whoever may be privately entitled in the presence of that release of the land; and as there has been no report accompanying the bill, I think there ought to be a very definite statement of the amount of land released and that it should be accompanied with a reservation of all mineral rights to the Government. It may be that this reservation of mineral rights may amount to nothing, or it may be a great deal.

I am aware that in one of the islands, and possibly more, in Lake Superior a silver mine, probably the richest in the country, if what I have heard is true, has been discovered, and has been worked under water. Of that the Senator probably knows more than I; but certain it is that if these be public lands, and there is any deposit of minerals, the usual reservation in that respect ought to accompany the grant. Therefore I should move to amend, in the absence of further information upon the subject, by adding a provision that all mineral rights are hereby reserved to the United States. I move that as an amendment to come in at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware proposes an amendment, which will be read.

Mr. BAYARD. I move to insert:

Provided, That all mineral rights in the said lands are hereby reserved to the United States.

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection to that. This shoal is, as is all land underlying the water in Saginaw Bay, of a limestone formation, of which the Charity Islands are a sample. There are no minerals in this land, not even any quarries of stone of any value. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I did not understand the Senator from Michigan. May I ask him how much was added by the accretion to this island?

Mr. CONGER. I have sent for a map which will show very clearly. I should think, as near as I can recollect the land as shown by the map, corners of it at least, which I had mentioned in the amendment, four or five sections of a township, there may be embraced one hundred and fifty, perhaps two hundred acres of this shoal, flat land. The island itself, Mai-Sou Island, which was surveyed, meandered, sold, and patented, and is owned by parties asking for this legislation, embraces about one hundred and fifty-four acres. It lies in a kidney-shaped form, and this accretion is in the hollow of it, while the island has been washed away to make the accretions and has filled up the shoal places on several sides of it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I notice that a word has been changed. The bill spoke of accretions "added" to the island. The word "added" is stricken out and "adjacent" put in place of it. That would seem to extend it further than was intended by the original bill. The word "adjacent" would probably take it a good way and might give rise to a very liberal construction hereafter. Why is the word "adjacent" used?

Mr. CONGER. At one part of the island it is connected directly without any water with the surveyed island by accretion proper. In the other place there is a little space of water between the main island, a few rods across, where there is a sort of lake or channel, not filled up as much as beyond. It is not all added to it. Therefore I changed the word "added" to "adjacent." The probable result of the passage of the bill may be that by means of dikes around this land there will be two or three hundred acres adjacent to an island which is now occupied, and the added land may be made pasture land, improving the value of that property in the county of Huron.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I can see a reason for allowing this privilege of accretion added to the island, but I can not see the force of the proposition to give the privilege to a new island that possibly may be creating there.

Mr. CONGER. It is all connected as dry land.

Mr. VAN WYCK. There may be a series of islands there connected together.

Mr. CONGER. This, except for the purpose of a fishing shanty and such things as that, is so much under water that in particular stages of wind it is pretty much all overflowed. I see no objection to the bill, representing that county. I see no objection to anybody improving what is now a mere waste marsh of reeds and rushes. The plan is to improve it and make it a place of resort for the inhabitants of Saginaw and Bay City for summer enjoyment.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. They are to pay the full price charged by the Government for the land?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir. Although the land is utterly worthless, the men propose to pay the ten shillings an acre which would be charged on the opposite shore.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It is all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the bill the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the right to all minerals is hereby reserved to the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8030) making an appropriation for the Agricultural Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, being House bill No. 5461.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and eighteen minutes spent in executive business the doors were reopened.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE DUNCAN.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, communicated to the Senate the resolutions of the House on the announcement of the death of Hon. WILLIAM A. DUNCAN, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair.) The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 26, 1885.

Resolved, That this House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. W. A. DUNCAN, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that fitting tribute may be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect the House shall, at the conclusion of these ceremonies, adjourn.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I offer resolutions, and ask that they be read at the desk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of WILLIAM A. DUNCAN, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended in order that fitting tribute may be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect the Senate shall, at the conclusion of these ceremonies, adjourn.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, it is my sad duty to announce to the Senate the death of WILLIAM A. DUNCAN, late my colleague in the House of Representatives from the State of Pennsylvania, which occurred on the morning of Friday, November 14, 1884, at his home in the historic town of Gettysburg, Pa.

Mr. DUNCAN was born in Franklin Township, Adams County, Pennsylvania, on the 2d day of February, 1836. After receiving a common-school education he went through his preparatory course for college at Mercersburg, Pa., and entered Franklin and Marshall College at Lancaster, where he was distinguished for his talents and close application to his studies, graduating in 1857, on which occasion he was selected to deliver the valedictory address of his class.

After leaving college, he entered the law office of Robert G. McCreary, esq., at Gettysburg, where he diligently pursued his studies, and on the 15th of August, 1859, was admitted to the bar, and at once entered upon the active practice of his profession.

Being possessed of a versatile mind, with an open, generous, and genial nature, full of magnanimity, and particularly devoted to his adopted profession, he became one of the most promising members of the Adams County bar, and very soon acquired a large practice. It is said by one who knew him intimately that "his professional career was characterized by devotion to his profession, fidelity to his clients, and marked courtesy in his relations to the court and members of the bar."

Mr. DUNCAN practiced law successfully for over twenty years. Possessing much natural ingenuity and industry, these with his uniformly gentlemanly bearing and high integrity rendered him skillfully armed and equipped for the contests at the bar and made him successful in his business affairs. He had a broad and cultivated mind, a keen and polished utterance, and a pure and patriotic heart. Always fair and candid, he sought no unfair advantage in argument, but invariably conceded to his opponent the same honesty of motive which he claimed for himself and which was universally accorded him. His good and reliable judgment rendered him very useful as a citizen in the conduct of any enterprise of public concern. He was patient, prudent, and far-sighted, and his astuteness was especially apparent before a jury. For years before his death he was in full practice, having a large share of assigned estates intrusted to his excellent management; and, as is generally the case in rural districts, his practice was of a miscellaneous character, rendering it necessary for him to give it close and constant application, which in the progress of time seriously affected his health.

In 1862 he received the nomination for the office of district attorney by the Democratic party of his county, of which he was an ardent and faithful adherent, and was elected in October of that year. While holding this position he performed his duties with such fidelity and impartiality that he was renominated in 1865, but owing to divisions in his party was defeated.

In 1868 he was again nominated for the third time for that position, and was elected, when he again proved himself worthy of the trust bestowed upon him by his fellow-citizens.

In 1882, after a very spirited contest, he was nominated by his Democratic friends to the Forty-eighth Congress to represent the nineteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, composed of the counties of Adams, Cumberland, and York, a district very strongly Democratic, and elected by 3,177 plurality. After taking his seat in the House he was assigned to duty on the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Education, where he served with great credit to himself and his constituency.

Mr. DUNCAN was renominated last summer to represent his district again in the Forty-ninth Congress, and was elected in the succeeding election by 4,262 plurality. His re-election two weeks before his death, although suffering at the time with an incurable disease, was a high compliment to his sterling worth and showed the universal esteem in which he was held.

Mr. DUNCAN was a thorough and consistent Democrat. Having been imbued with the principles of that party from early childhood, his faith in its teachings and his zeal in its service increased yearly. At home he was one of the foremost leaders in its councils and an elegant and aggressive champion in defense of its traditions, but, like the great majority of his party in the State, was a firm and steadfast supporter of the doctrine of protection. It being his first term in Congress, he was too modest and retiring to obtrude his opinions upon the House or enter into discussion with older and more experienced members, but had he been permitted to live through the coming Congress he would have proven himself capable of sustaining in debate the measures he advocated with skill and good judgment.

One of the greatest characteristics of Mr. DUNCAN'S life was his abounding good nature and his unfailing charity toward others. If anything derogatory of another was said in his presence, he was sure to defend the absent one or to change the course of conversation by some humorous or diverting remark into other and more congenial channels. He had no ill to speak of others, even of those who may have treated him unkindly and unjustly.

Mr. DUNCAN was married in 1863 to Miss Catharine Schmucker, a daughter of Rev. S. S. Schmucker, D. D., an eminent divine of the Lutheran Church, an organization very large in numbers and which has in its membership some of the ablest and purest people in the State. Miss Schmucker, brought up under the teachings of a father of great strength and purity of character, was a worthy helpmeet to her husband and made his home a charming one, remarkable for its cultivated simplicity in a community noted for its intelligence and unostentatious hospitality.

Mr. DUNCAN had always enjoyed vigorous and robust health until about four years ago, when symptoms of pulmonary trouble began to develop to such an extent that he was compelled to abandon his legal practice. Although he employed the best medical skill and was extremely careful in his habits, the disease gradually gained headway. He returned to his home after the adjournment of Congress in July last. As the summer advanced his health rapidly declined, and for several weeks before his death he was unable to leave his residence. He grew weaker constantly, until death relieved him, dying calmly and peacefully in the presence of his wife and family.

Mr. DUNCAN was a Christian. He trusted in God and publicly avowed his allegiance to Him. His many virtues, which so fondly attached many warm friends to him, will be missed at his office, at his fireside, at the bar, and in these Halls.

In the Gettysburg Star and Sentinel of Tuesday evening, November 18, 1884, I find the following resolutions adopted at a meeting of his former associates at the bar:

That we have heard with profound sorrow of the death of our late brother, Hon. WILLIAM A. DUNCAN; that by his demise our bar has lost an able lawyer and prudent counselor, our county a useful man and a good citizen, our Congressional district an honorable gentleman and a faithful representative.

That the court, its officers, and the bar attend the funeral of the departed.

That these proceedings be entered on the records of the court, and be published in the county papers.

That we present a copy of these resolutions to the family of our lamented associate, and extend to them our deepest sympathy, and commend them to the Consoler of the afflicted and the Healer of all sorrow.

Mr. President, in my association with men in public or private life I have never heard of one who possessed a character more lovely. Strong in his convictions of right, fearless in his expression of them, he had the rare faculty of impressing his antagonists with the purity and sincerity of his motives, so that when they could not approve his position they never failed to respect the reasons which he gave to sustain it. Thus it was that he left no sting behind and his strongest political opponents were among his warmest personal friends.

During my service in the Senate we have been frequently called upon to mourn the death of fellow-members endeared to us by ties of association and friendship. In the death of Mr. DUNCAN I feel that we have not only lost a worthy associate, but the State which I have the honor in part to represent has lost an able and efficient representative. Our colleague has passed beyond the river that separates life from death, time from eternity! He has passed forever from these Halls, and has left behind him an honorable name and an unsullied reputation.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, the neighbors of the late WILLIAM A. DUNCAN say he was manly, generous, talented, true.

To have achieved honorable position while young, and to have increased his reputation not only as a faithful guardian of public trust, but as a man in the social and daily walks of life, he must have possessed sterling qualities of head and heart. Graduating in 1857, he was chosen to deliver the valedictory. Admitted to the bar in 1859, he, by dint of hard study, honorable deportment, a good education, and native talent, rapidly rose in his profession, and acquired a large and lucrative practice. The high estimate placed upon him by his professional brethren is the best assurance of his honor as a man and ability as a lawyer.

He made friends wherever he went and retained them. He was a man of good culture and earnest application.

Three years after his admission to the bar he was elected district attorney, and to the same office five years later.

In 1882 he was elected to the Forty-eighth Congress, and in 1884 was elected to the next Congress. His last election speaks volumes. Stricken down by the dread disease, pulmonary consumption, the shadows were gathering thick and fast around him before the canvass was closed. The scythe of Death was whetted and ready to cut the brittle thread. The people knew that his days and hours were numbered, yet they showed their love and respect for the dying man by re-election to the position he had so worthily filled. Two weeks later he was numbered among the dead.

If a man die shall he live again? is the ever-recurring question.

The Creator by whose almighty fiat were launched, we know not when, countless worlds into boundless space, gave them laws infinitely wise and so nicely adjusted that this vast universe moves unerringly, so perfectly that the intellect of man can calculate centuries in advance the precise moment of an event resulting from those laws.

The infallible operation of the infallible laws of creation proves an infallible Law Giver.

The crowning glory of creation is man, with his mighty intellect, his soaring ambition, his lofty aspirations, his resistless energy; with a moral nature leading him pleasantly into the paths of gentleness, mercy, and benevolence, with an inborn veneration for the author of his existence. Can it be that such a God would create such a man, who, in obedience to the laws of his existence, has achieved such amazing triumphs over matter and such mighty triumphs over mighty intellects, and yet would doom that man to annihilation with death? Can it be that such an intellect incased in a frail mortal body should die because the body dies? Through the unending cycles of eternity the soul of man will go onward expanding in the presence of the Omniscient. If a man die he shall live again.

WILLIAM A. DUNCAN was a man of many virtues, beloved by all who knew him, and best by those who knew him best. The memory of the just is blessed.

WILLIAM A. DUNCAN has finished his course on earth. He acted well his part. We scatter flowers over his grave. "He shall return no more to his house; neither shall his place know him any more."

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. President, already on two occasions during the past week we have been called upon to suspend our ordinary proceedings to pay respect to the memories of those who have been called by death from the public service. The voice of eulogy uttered upon those occasions has scarcely died within the Chamber ere we are called again to mourn the departure and commemorate the virtues of another fellow-laborer. The chair of WILLIAM A. DUNCAN in the House of Representatives is vacant. He was born in Adams County, Pennsylvania, in 1836, and died at Gettysburg, Pa., on Friday, the 14th of November, 1884, in the forty-ninth year of his age. Endowed by nature with a high order of talents, his intellectual powers were developed, enlarged, and invigorated by a liberal course of study and mental discipline at his alma mater, Franklin and Marshall College, from which he was graduated in 1857. After faithful and diligent application through a regular course of legal study and training he was admitted to the bar in 1859. Thus thoroughly furnished for his work, he entered upon the practice of the law, and devoted himself to his profession. By his ability, integrity, and industry he soon acquired an extensive practice, which he retained throughout his professional career of twenty-five years, during which he was twice elected by the people district attorney of his county.

He had an exalted view of the dignity and importance of the profession, and fully appreciated both its privileges and its responsibilities, and believed that for the administration of justice both lawyers and courts were to co-operate. In the trial of causes, therefore, he sought the truth and did not pervert justice; he was true as well to the court as to client. In his professional life he was not influenced by sordid or mercenary motives; he never turned a deaf ear to the cause of the poor or friendless, and was ever ready to defend the oppressed.

After so many years of arduous professional labor he consented to become a candidate for the House of Representatives of the United States, and in 1882 was elected by his constituents to represent the nineteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania in the Forty-eighth Congress. He was a Democrat, but, with the majority of his party in Pennsylvania, he believed in the principle of protection to American industry.

His service in the House of Representatives was limited to a single term. During the Congress of which he was a member he served upon several important committees of the House.

Having participated so many years in the jurisprudence of his State he was enabled by his intellectual ability, his legal learning, his large experience, wise counsel, and sound judgment, to take a high position among his colleagues and to render valuable and efficient service in devising and framing the legislation of the nation. He was diligent, conscientious, and faithful in the discharge of his public duties, and his generous and honorable bearing and upright character won for him the high esteem and regard of his colleagues in the House of Representatives.

But those loved him most who knew him best. After his first term of service, although it was evident death had marked him as a victim and that he must very soon yield up his life, his constituents in November last re-elected him as their representative in the next (Forty-ninth) Congress. This was the benediction of those who had been the companions of his youth, the friends of his manhood, and who saw him and knew him in the daily walks of life. No higher or clearer expression of confidence and regard could be given by a constituency to their Representative; no greater reward could be received by a public servant.

The crowning characteristic of the life of our departed friend remains to be noticed. He was a faithful and sincere Christian; the graces which adorned his character were the fruits of his Saviour's love, and his daily life, which commended him to the favor and regard of his fellows, was the expression of his faith in Christ—this faith which prepared him to live, prepared him also to die.

If timid nature for a moment shrank at the approach to the dark valley the voice of the risen Saviour came to him in reassuring accents from the other side, "It is I, be not afraid;" and in the response of his faith his last song was the sweetest, as he sang with the Hebrew poet—

I shall be satisfied when I awake with Thy likeness.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, again we are called upon to record our expressions of regret over the loss of a good man. WILLIAM A. DUNCAN, of Pennsylvania, in the prime of his manhood and the beginning of his usefulness, has passed away forever. In his untimely death the Church has lost a sincere Christian, the bar an able lawyer, Congress an upright and useful member, and the country a devoted and patriotic citizen. It is hard for us to comprehend the wisdom of Providence in designating a man so circumstanced as a victim for the grave. After long years of study and preparation we find him, in his forty-seventh year, entering the other House as a member of the Forty-eighth Congress from one of the most important districts in his State. He had won his college prizes and passed on to the bar. There, in honorable competition with the able lawyers of his State, he acquired legal fame, and his intercourse with the people satisfied them that he was a fit person to represent them in the great parliamentary body which sits at the other end of the Capitol. The business of the bar for a time is put aside. Briefs and clients no longer interest him. The modest and unpretending country court-house, so long the scene of his patient and honorable labors, is overshadowed in his mind by the vast proportions of this great structure wherein his talents are to be exerted in the interest of a great nation. The stimulus of lofty and honorable ambition takes the place of ordinary professional promptings, and he comes here full of hope and heart and life, and gives his best talents and services to the interests of his country.

He served with great credit to himself and his district in the Forty-eighth Congress, and was re-elected to the Forty-ninth Congress at a time when the dark shadows of death was almost before his eyes. Conscious as his people were at that time that he would not be able to serve them in the new Congress, with a generous appreciation of his faithful services, they decided to console the last hours of his life by a public indorsement of his labors here, and show to the world that in the approaching death of WILLIAM A. DUNCAN Pennsylvania and Congress were about to lose a faithful representative and an honest man. It is not for us to pass upon the wisdom of the Almighty in matters of this kind. If from Mr. DUNCAN'S years, learning, industry, and honesty we are at liberty to infer that his death terminated a career full, with assurances of future usefulness, on the other hand it is possible that Providence interfered to save him from protracted suffering, and that, under the wise dispensation of the Almighty, what appears to be our and his country's loss is in reality his gain.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, not eventful the life that has closed. Spent amid stirring scenes and in troublous times it stands out against them in contrasts to be remarked. Born in that central State, the Keystone of the arch of Commonwealths, where—where politics seems to be of every day—he was not a politician. Living on that, which one of the most stupendous events in modern history has made holy ground, where the strongest of human passions held fullest sway, and "dire was the noise of conflict," at far-famed Gettysburg, where "it seemed as though men fought upon the earth and fiends in upper air"—he was a quiet looker-on and not a soldier.

Pennsylvania holds the scales,
And neither South nor North prevails—

But he "acted well his part." It comes not to every man that he shall fill a page, or require even a line, in the world's history. Yet the uneventful lives seem the happiest ones, and the "mute, inglorious Miltons" of earth are usually the ones to envy, if content with life is its chiefest blessing. Of a genial nature, he made many friends, "well-springs in the wilderness," who loved him in life and mourn his too early death. Trained in the schools, he loved books, "those monuments of vanished minds," "delightful when prosperity happily smiles; inseparable comforters when adversity threatens."

Well balanced and intellectual, his pursuits were those of the scholar and his enjoyments those of the student. He could well exclaim:

My mind to me a kingdom is,
Such perfect treasure there I find.

Called to the bar, he became one of its leaders in his locality. Devoted to that "exacting mistress, the law," she gave him full return in a large clientage, to whose interests he was devoted.

Of upright character, he was universally esteemed, and it came naturally, from the recognition of all these commendable qualities, that his neighbors chose him to represent his Congressional district in the Forty-eighth Congress. Suffering during his term from that fell disease of which he died in November last, he was not able to place an imprint upon any of the legislation of the last session; but fresh and well deserved appreciation of his worth came to him when, while upon the bed of death, he was re-elected to the House of Representatives.

To me WILLIAM A. DUNCAN was personally unknown, but when, at the request of a colleague who esteemed him highly, I looked over the detail of his life that I, a native of the grand old Commonwealth that he honored as it honored him, might pay fitting tribute to his memory, I was charmed with its symmetry and could not but admire the features I have so feebly portrayed. A life so beautiful, a career so even gave promise of a useful future.

It is most apt to depict him growing with the years of experience into the trusted legislator, the wise counselor, respected of all men, of service to the State, until with ripened age came fuller honors, and at last with the full allotment of years would come the end to the rounded life. But it was not so to be. "God's finger touched him and he slept."

Mr. President, I second the adoption of the resolutions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Before the question is put, I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. MITCHELL], who desired to take and would have taken part in these proceedings, is unavoidably detained from the Senate to-day.

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

PUBLIC BUILDING, FORT SCOTT, KANS.

Mr. FUNSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. 292) for the erection of a public building at Fort Scott, Kans.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill will be taken up. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the post-office, United States courts, and other Government offices, at the city of Fort Scott, State of Kansas. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed, for the site and building complete, the sum of $100,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than forty feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Kansas shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owners thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER. In accordance with the statute, the Chair will lay before the House the following concurrent resolution for reference to the Committee on Printing.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, January 24, 1885.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,000 copies of the communication of the Secretary of State, containing a list of claimants against France by reason of the spoliations prior to the 31st day of July, 1801; of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. FOLLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with the morning hour.

Several MEMBERS. "Regular order!"

The SPEAKER. By the rules the morning hour is dedicated to the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills. The rule provides that the Speaker shall call the States and Territories for that business. That rule ought to be complied with.

FIRE IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I rise to offer a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana states that he desires to present a privileged resolution. The Clerk will read the resolution, and afterward the Chair will decide whether it is a matter of privilege or not.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be instructed to inquire into the origin of the fire which occurred on the roof of the House this morning, and report to the House what measures, if any, are necessary to give greater security against fire to the roof and the files and records of the House thereunder; and the said committee shall have leave to report thereon at any time.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I understand that there are very many valuable documents which were endangered by this occurrence, and I think this is a privileged matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is properly a matter of privilege.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the regular order is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference to appropriate committees. Under this call resolutions and memorials from State and Territorial Legislatures, resolutions of inquiry addressed to the heads of Departments, and propositions to amend the rules may be presented for reference.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SELMA, ALA.

MANUFACTURE OF GUNS.

Mr. ROSECRANS introduced a bill (H. R. 8041) to provide further aid and encouragement to perfecting and manufacturing the highest class of guns, &c.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

OREGON RAILROAD.

Mr. SUMNER, of California, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads, and ordered to be printed:

Whereas it appears from the reports of the Commissioners of the General Land Office that the California and Oregon Railroad Company has failed to complete its line of road within the time required by law; and

Whereas no attempt was made during more than ten years to complete or build any part of said line of railroad, although said company had ample means to do so; and

Whereas on March 18, 1884, the above-recited facts were called to the attention of the President of the United States, and a protest duly made and filed protesting against the appointment of commissioners to examine said line of railroad; and

Whereas it is stated that the President has recently appointed three commissioners to examine and report on said line of railroad: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, That the President of the United States be requested to inform this body, if not incompatible with the public interests, what were the reasons which impelled him to appoint said commissioners to examine and report upon said line of railroad from Redding northwardly, notwithstanding the fact that the only act of Congress under which any grant was made to said company is now null and void.

TAXATION OF GRAPE SPIRITS.

Mr. HENLEY introduced a bill (H. R. 8042) to relieve pure grape spirits from taxation in certain cases; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

RELIEF OF ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (H. R. 8043) for relief of certain officers of the United States Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

NAVY YARD, ETC., ON BLYTHE ISLAND, GEORGIA.

Mr. NICHOLLS introduced a bill (H. R. 8044) to appropriate $500,000 for the purpose of establishing a navy-yard and a depot of supplies on Blythe Island, in the harbor of Brunswick, State of Georgia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas in the year 1857 the Government of the United States purchased on Blythe Island, in Glynn County and State of Georgia, 1,100 acres of land for the sum of $130,000, with the purpose of establishing thereon a navy-yard and naval depot; and

Whereas the said land is still the property of the Government, never having been used as originally designed; and

Whereas said property is land-locked within the harbor of Brunswick, Georgia, the waters of said harbor being open to navigation during the entire year, and that an abundant supply of timber for ship-building purposes is open and within easy reach of said island:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized and directed to establish a navy-yard and depot for supplies on the said Government land on Blythe Island, in the State of Georgia; that the sum of $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, to carry out the provisions of this act, and that the same shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy.

FEES PAID BY VESSEL-OWNERS, ETC.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, introduced a bill (H. R. 8045) to amend section 4382, Revised Statutes, relative to fees levied and collected from owners and masters of vessels in domestic commerce; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS SAINT CROIX RIVER.

Mr. TOWNSHEND (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 8046) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Saint Croix River at the most accessible point between Prescott, Wis., and Taylor's Falls, Minn.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ABOLITION OF THE INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I ask leave to present the following preamble and resolution [reading].

Mr. BLACKBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to know, Mr. Speaker, whether the gentleman from Kentucky, my colleague, is under the call now being made by the Chair complying with its rules in sending bills or resolutions to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not yet know what the resolution is.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is what I am trying to find out.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. If my colleague will possess his soul in patience he will know.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I can not until my question is answered by the Chair as to whether the gentleman from Kentucky is in order in the call now being made in the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not tell without seeing the resolution or hearing it read whether it is such a one as will be in order under the present call or not. If it is a resolution of inquiry, addressed to the head of a Department, it is in order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. It is a joint resolution, and if my colleague will possess his soul in patience he will know it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will not possess my soul of such patience until I ascertain whether the resolution the gentleman proposes is or is not in order for presentation in this manner.

The SPEAKER. Joint resolutions are in order under this call; the gentleman says he offers a joint resolution.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If this is a joint resolution I demand its reading from the Clerk's desk. In this connection I desire to ask the Speaker whether the reading of the joint resolution, if it be a joint resolution, by the gentleman from Kentucky entitles it to go into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I ask that the resolution, if it be one, may be sent to the Clerk's desk and be disposed of in the order in which such resolutions are ordinarily disposed of.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire in the first place to read it myself, after which I will send it to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The practice of the House has always been to send such matters to the desk, to be read by their titles by the Clerk; but the Chair does not know of any rule prohibiting a member from reading his own proposition on the floor of the House if he desires to do so. The Chair thinks that a member may, when he offers a resolution, read it himself before sending it to the desk.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I would inquire of the Chair whether there is a rule or precedent allowing the gentleman from Kentucky to read a resolution of this character on the floor of the House?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I object to this interruption, and hope it will not be taken out of my time. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. And I very much regret the gentleman's objection to being interrupted, but it does not make the slightest difference. I desire to ascertain what the rule is in this respect, and to have it enforced. I rise, therefore, for the purpose of making a direct parliamentary inquiry of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to ask whether or not there is a rule or precedent to warrant the reading of a joint resolution or bill, under a call of States like this, by a member offering such paper, instead of sending it to the Clerk's desk and having it reported in the hearing of the House by the Clerk?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated that it is aware of no rule upon the subject. The custom has been, and the practice of the House, to send such papers to the desk to be read by the Clerk. But it frequently happens that members proposing resolutions in writing read them themselves from their seats in the hearing of the House before submitting them to the House from the Clerk's desk. As the Chair has stated, however, there seems to be no rule upon the subject, only the practice of the House, which governs in such matters.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In order to determine the question, and by way of a precedent, I object to the gentleman from Kentucky reading a resolution which he proposes to offer in this manner; and I ask the Chair to rule upon the question.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I can assure my colleague that there is nothing whatever in this resolution which interferes with his theory of State rights.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The assurance of my colleague does not count with me very much. I insist upon a ruling by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky can not be prevented, the Chair thinks, from reading his own proposition——

Mr. BLACKBURN. But it does not go into the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. But he can not make comments or submit any remarks upon it while the House is proceeding under this call.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I submit to the ruling of the Chair, with the distinct understanding that this is not printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Well, this will go into the RECORD: That it is a blow or criticism against the Secretary of the Treasury and Commissioner of Internal Revenue for extending the bonded period seven months without authority of law.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have no doubt the Secretary of the Treasury can survive the blow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky will proceed to read his resolution.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I want to hear the gentleman from Kentucky as to what this proposition is. If it is to be read I want to know what it is.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to read so the gentleman from Arkansas can hear me.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I do not want the gentleman to suppose that I am making any objection.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, concluded the reading.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky will send the resolution to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I ask for the reading of it from the desk.

The SPEAKER. This resolution is not in order under this call. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. It is a joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. It is simply a House resolution, and not in order under the call of States for the introdution of bills and joint resolutions.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Then I desire to adds the words "Be it enacted," &c.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can take the resolution and put it in such form as he chooses. It is not before the House under this call.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. These words were inadvertently omitted, and I desire to insert them.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be returned to the gentleman from Kentucky.

CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS OF KENTUCKY.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (H. R. 8064) to regulate the jurisdiction of the circuit and district courts of Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, also introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 319) to abolish the office of Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the entire system of internal-revenue taxation; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I call for the reading of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the joint resolution be read.

Objection was made.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I claim that I have a right to have the joint resolution read.

The SPEAKER. It has been read once.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Not from the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. It was read by the gentleman himself.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. This resolution has not been read. The Chair decided the other was not a resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not decide it was not a resolution. The Chair decided it was not in order under this call in the form in which the gentleman read it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I ask that the resolution which I have sent to the desk be now read, that it may be seen if it is in order.

The SPEAKER. No point of order is made upon it. The preamble and resolution are the same; only the form is changed.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. The Chair assumes that.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The joint resolution was read at length, and was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FORNEY, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 8120) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOLMAN. All points of order are reserved upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. The points of order will be reserved.

Mr. FORNEY. I give notice that I will call this bill up for consideration immediately after the bill making appropriations for the District of Columbia is disposed of.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HOLMES, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 1144) granting a pension to John W. Wright; and

A bill (S. 1112) granting a pension to John Sweeney.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BARBOUR. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, this day being the fourth Monday is set apart for the consideration of such business as may be presented by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague from Mississippi on the committee [Mr. JEFFORDS].

RECOMMITMENT OF A BILL.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to ask that House bill 7489 be recommitted to the committee, with the accompanying report.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the title?

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7489) to define the duties and liabilities of the District of Columbia under certain executed contracts.

The bill was recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I believe the Committee on the District of Columbia have no other business to present to the House today. I am instructed, therefore, by the committee not to make any further claim to the attention of the House. I desire to state, however, that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOLLETT] has in his charge two bills, both of them important measures, to present to the House, which are germane to the business of the District of Columbia, one of them being connected with the establishment of an additional police force for the ceremonies of the inauguration and the other the annual appropriation bill for the District.

TEMPORARY POLICE FORCE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. FOLLETT. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to submit a report, with an accompanying bill, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration in the House.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8121) to enable the commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order during the ceremonies of the inauguration of the President, and for other purposes.

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. FOLLETT. I ask unanimous consent to present this bill for consideration at this time in the House.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let the bill be first read.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. Is this a bill to make provision for the public display on the 4th of March?

The SPEAKER. This is a bill to provide for an additional police force, as is customary at such times.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $6,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary (one-half payable from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and one-half from the revenues of the District of Columbia), is hereby appropriated, to enable the Commissioners to maintain public order and to protect life and property during the ceremonies of inauguration of the President, from the 25th of February to the 5th day of March, 1885, inclusive; and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and required to make all needful rules and regulations for preserving public order and protecting life and property, and for regulating and fixing the fares by public conveyances during the aforesaid period, and to prescribe penalties for the infraction of such regulations; and such rules and regulations made, as provided, shall have the same force and effect within the District of Columbia as if enacted by Congress.

Mr. FOLLETT. This report from the Committee on Appropriations, and the bill accompanying it, are in response to two communications from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitted through the Secretary of the Treasury, requesting that provision shall be made for an extra police force during the inauguration ceremonies. It has been customary for several years past, I will state, to increase the police force of the District on such occasions. I do not deem it necessary to consume time in discussing the matter; so, if there be no objection to considering the bill now in the House, I shall ask the previous question upon the engrossment and third reading of it.

Mr. McCOMAS. Before unanimous consent is given I would like to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. FOLLETT. Certainly.

Mr. McCOMAS. I desire to ask the gentleman, when he says that this appropriation is customary, whether the amount now appropriated is the customary amount?

Mr. FOLLETT. It is perhaps less than was appropriated four years ago.

Mr. McCOMAS. That is all I desired to ask.

Mr. FOLLETT. This provides substantially for the payment of two hundred policemen for that time, in addition to the regular force.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the demand for the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FOLLETT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THE DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOLLETT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

Mr. FOLLETT. I move to take up for consideration the bill (H. R. 8039) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, and that the first reading of the bill for information be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. FOLLLETT. I ask the Clerk to read the report of the committee.

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. FOLLETT), as follows:

The Committee on Appropriations, in presenting the bill making appropriations for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, submit the following in explanation thereof:

The estimates upon which the bill is based will be found on pages 190 to 197 of the Book of Estimates, and, exclusive of the water department, aggregate $3,480,147.97, one-half of which amount, or of such amount as Congress may appropriate, is required to be drawn from the revenues of the General Government, and the remaining one-half to be levied upon the taxable property and privileges in the District of Columbia, other than the property of the United States and the District of Columbia, pursuant to section 3 of the act approved June 11, 1878, entitled "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia." (Statutes at Large, volume 20, page 102.)

The total amount recommended to be appropriated for the general expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1886 in the bill submitted herewith is, exclusive of the water department, $3,419,163.96, of which sum the General Government is required to pay $1,709,581.98, that being the one-half of the whole sum. The whole amount recommended is $60,984 less than the estimates.

The one-half of the whole amount appropriated for the current fiscal year and payable by the General Government is $1,699,493.27, being $10,088.71 less than the one-half contained in the accompanying bill for 1886.

The amount recommended for the water department and payable from the water revenues, and which is not included in the sums above, is $189,396.27. The amount appropriated for the same purposes for the current fiscal year is $186,349.

New legislation of a general character is recommended in the bill as follows:

"The accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to adjust and settle equitably the accounts of the late commissioners, allowing such of the same as are manifestly just and proper.

* * * * * * *

"That the records of the surveyor of the District of Columbia shall be public records.

"That hereafter the commissioners shall deduct $1 each month from the pay of each policeman, which sum so deducted shall be added to and form a part of the present police fund, to be kept under the control of the commissioners, and be invested in United States or District bonds; and said police fund shall be used for the relief of any policeman who, by accident, while in the actual performance of duty, or by service not less than fifteen years, shall become so permanently disabled as to be discharged from service therefor; and in case of his death from such accident, leaving a widow, or children under 16 years, for their relief: Provided further, That such relief shall not exceed for any one policeman or his family the sum of $50 per month; and a sum not exceeding $75 may be allowed from said fund to defray the funeral expenses of any policeman dying in the service of the District."

A provision of the same import, applicable to the fire department, is also contained in the bill.

"The District of Columbia shall be allowed credit, as a part of its revenues, for one-half of all drawback certificates heretofore received or that may hereafter be received for general taxes under the acts of June 27, 1879, and July 5, 1884, less any of said drawback certificates already credited thereto."

The estimated receipts from the taxes and other revenues of the District for the fiscal year 1886 are, in detail, as follows:

Estimated assessed value of real estate, at $1.50		$89,500,000
Estimated assessed value of real estate (agricultural), at $1		3,800,000

Water-rent		130,000
Water-taps		2,500
Water-permits		2,600
Total		190,100

Mr. FOLLETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to get the attention of the committee but for a few moments in the presentation of this bill; and first I desire to call attention to the matters of new legislation which appear in it. The first provision is one directing the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust and settle equitably the accounts of the late commissioners, allowing all such sums as are manifestly just and proper.

There are involved in this provision about $19,000—between $19,000 and $20,000—of unadjusted accounts of the late board of commissioners. These accounts arose largely from the fact that Congress provided for the work of reassessment or readjustment of the assessment upon the property of the District of Columbia without providing for the clerical force necessary to accomplish that work. The work was made imperative; the commissioners were directed to have it done; but no appropriation was made for the purpose of employing the force necessary to do it. The result was that the commissioners employed a force, paying them out of the contingent fund which had been appropriated for contingent expenses. The First Comptroller of the Treasury held that clerical force for such work as that could not be paid out of the contingent fund, and hence these accounts have remained unadjusted to this time. This provision simply authorizes an equitable adjustment of those accounts, leaving it discretionary with the proper officers to determine which one of these accounts ought to be allowed and the amount that ought to be allowed.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does it make any difference so far as the expenses of the Government are concerned?

Mr. FOLLETT. Not at all.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand that the contingent fund is ample for the purpose, the only difficulty being it could not be used for that purpose.

Mr. FOLLETT. The money has been paid. The only question now is of crediting the old board of commissioners with the disbursement. From the investigation I have made personally of the accounts I am satisfied all of them were paid for the benefit of the District of Columbia, and that the commissioners ought to be credited with them.

The next item of new legislation is a provision that the records of the surveyor of the District of Columbia shall be public records. They have a surveyor here in the District, but his records he has stoutly insisted were private records, and therefore belonged to him, and the District commissioners have no control over them. To obviate that trouble the District commissioners requested that this officer should be made a salaried officer, and should pay such fees as he collected into the treasury for the general benefit of the District and the Government. The Committee on Appropriations prefer to leave the officer as a fee officer, but by provision of law to make the records of that officer, for he is to all intents and purposes a public officer, public records.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think that provision is in the bill.

Mr. FOLLETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not in the bill; it was stricken out in committee.

Mr. FOLLETT. No; the provision making it a salaried officer was stricken out, but the other provision remains in lines 132 and 133.

Mr. BLOUNT. You do not claim there is any salaried officer in the bill.

Mr. FOLLETT. No. The chairman misunderstands me. The committee struck out the provision making the officer a salaried officer.

Mr. RANDALL. The provision creating a new office is out.

Mr. FOLLETT. Yes, sir; but the provision to make the records public records is in.

The next new legislation in the bill is to create a relief fund for the police department in the District as we did last year for the fire department—taking out from the compensation of each one of the police of the city $1 per month to be set apart for a relief fund to be used for such men and officers of the force as may be disabled in the service.

The next provision that is new legislation is, that the District shall be allowed credit as a part of its revenues for one-half of all drawback certificates heretofore received or that may hereafter be received for general taxes under the acts of June 27, 1879, and July 5, 1884, less any of said drawback certificates already credited thereto.

Under the act of Congress by which it was provided that one-half of the expenses of running the District government should be paid by the Government and the other half by the District those expenditures included not simply payment of current expenses, but payment of the indebtedness then existing against the District and the interest on that indebtedness. After the passage of that law an act was passed in 1879 requiring the collector of taxes of the District to receive in payment of taxes drawback certificates which had been given on a readjustment of taxes alleged to have been improperly assessed. In other words, the District of Columbia in the collection of the taxes takes these drawback certificates and thereby pays the entire amount of that indebtedness resulting from the readjustment of the tax.

The Secretary of the Treasury or the First Comptroller of the Treasury has declined to allow a credit to the District for those drawback certificates unless it were necessary to allow it for the purpose of meeting the amount of appropriations that were made in the fiscal year in which those drawback certificates were received; and therefore there are of these drawback certificates at that credit some $25,000, as I now remember, for which the District has received no credit. It has been deemed just and proper that the District should receive credit; having received these drawback certificates as so much cash in the collection of taxes, that they should be credited with that amount as against a like amount contributed by the Government for the purpose of paying the expenses of running the government of the District of Columbia.

Those are the items of new legislation incorporated in this bill. The appropriation in this bill, as in all the bills that have been reported for some years past for charities in the District of Columbia, is large. There are two new items upon this bill; three, perhaps I should say. One is for the construction of a new building for the benefit of the females who are sentenced to the workhouse, a building for the female convicts separate from the building in which the male convicts are confined. Workhouse facilities are now totally inadequate for the convicts that are sent there. In the male department there are from twenty to twenty-five male convicts put in one room, sleeping in bunks, and sometimes two together, for the purpose of giving room to accommodate all that are sent to the workhouse. I know of no workhouse in the country that is so crowded as the workhouse in the city of Washington. At the close of the war the Government turned over what property it had in that vicinity to the city of Washington, or to the District of Columbia, to be used for the purposes of the Washington asylum. There are two large magazine buildings, one of which it is supposed at a cost of $20,000 can be converted into a building for the accommodation of female convicts sent to the workhouse. The committee deem it important that that work should be done. The commissioners requested it, and no one who has visited the Washington asylum and seen the kind of accommodation there furnished would hesitate for a moment to say that the appropriation should be made.

There is another item under the head of charities, an appropriation of $15,000 for the purchase or construction of a building for the national homeopathic hospital of the District of Columbia. It is claimed by residents of the District of Columbia that all the charities now are under the exclusive management of the allopathic school of physicians, and for the purpose of testing the two systems in part; and for the purpose of accommodating those who desire to be treated by the homeopathic system, they request that an appropriation shall be made for the construction or erection or purchase, as they may deem best, of a homeopathic hospital. The committee have recommended $15,000 for that purpose.

Another new provision in the matter of charities is for the construction of an additional building for the National Association for Destitute Colored Women and Children, and an appropriation of $18,000 is recommended for that purpose. At the time of the establishment of this association for destitute colored women and children a number of barracks that had been occupied during the war by the Government were turned over for occupancy by this charity. Some two or three years ago an appropriation was made by Congress for the erection of one new building. That building has been completed; and now, for the purpose of completing and furnishing the room that is desired for the purposes of this charity, they ask that another appropriation shall be made for the construction of a building adjoining this for the purpose of accommodating the children who are under the care of the association; and the committee have recommended an appropriation for that purpose.

Of course, appropriations that are made for charity, or for almost any purpose in the bill, necessarily come out of the amount that can be appropriated for street improvements; for that seems to be and is substantially the flexible appropriation of the bill which must suffer so far as other appropriations are made or is benefited by the reduction of other appropriations. The committee this year have appropriated for the improvement of streets and the making of new streets $265,000, all that it was deemed possible to appropriate or proper to appropriate in view of the other appropriations of the bill.

I may say here that it is impossible in any appropriation bill for the District of Columbia to satisfy all the people of all the parts of the city. Complaints are made that one portion of the city is getting more money for street improvements than it ought to have, and the same complaint comes substantially from every portion of the city.

I have said now, I believe, all that I desire to say except upon one point. There are here in the school system two superintendents of schools—one of them the superintendent of the white schools and the other the superintendent of the colored schools. A number of persons have waited upon different members of the committee with the request that the schools shall be put under one head and one management. About one-third of the children of school age in the District of Columbia are colored children and two-thirds white. We have been paying for several years a salary of $2,750 to the superintendent of white schools and a salary of $2,250 to the superintendent of the colored schools. I believe myself that it would be a wise system to place all these schools under one head and one management; but I am satisfied that that change can not now be made without producing friction such as would result injuriously to the schools. Therefore the committee have thought it advisable to leave the system as it found it, leaving to some future Congress the work of placing the schools under one head and one management. Therefore we have this year proposed no change and made no recommendation in that regard.

Mr. Chairman, I believe I have said all I desire to say at this time. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that general debate be now closed.

Mr. FOLLETT. I ask unanimous consent that general debate be now closed and that the bill be read for amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, general debate on this bill will be now closed and the bill will be read for amendments. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The Clerk, proceeding to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment, read as follows:

WASHINGTON AQUEDUCT.

For engineering, maintenance, and general repairs, $20,000.

Mr. LONG. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 171 insert:

"For the redemption of four certificates of indebtedness, issued by authority of section 7 of the act of the Legislative Assembly, approved June 26, 1873, dated July 1, 1873, of the denomination of $50 each, with interest payable semi-annually at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, numbers 8824, 8826, 8827, and 1828, payable July 1, 1878, $366.96."

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to have some explanation of that amendment.

Mr. LONG. These are certificates representing indebtedness of the District issued some years ago. They are of the amount of $50 each, and the whole sum is only $200, with interest. The certificates represent the indebtedness of the District, which of course should be paid. In the course of business a notice was issued of a time at which these certificates must be presented for audit and for payment. Nearly all the certificates of this class were presented, but it so happened that these particular certificates were held by a man who is now in distress and poverty, who at the time did not know that such notice had been issued, to whom, in fact, the notice never came, and who, when he did present his certificates, found that the time for their presentation and payment had expired.

I am informed that the District commissioners state that no other certificates are likely to be presented, and, in fact, that all have been paid with the exception of these and a few others. There is no probability that any others will be presented, but whether that is so or not this man certainly should be paid, and I hope there will be no objection made to this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. Is the whole of this amount to be paid out of the District treasury or only half of it?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the terms of the bill this appropriation is to be paid half out of the District treasury and half out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. LONG. I suppose that only half the amount will be paid by the District under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Then that ought to be stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill so provides.

Mr. RANDALL. I thought that possibly this claim originated prior to the date of the act dividing the expenses between the United States and the District.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOR THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.

For one chief engineer, $1,800; one fire marshal, $1,000; one secretary, $900; two foremen acting as assistant chief engineers, at $1,200 each; seven foremen, at $1,000 each; seven engineers, at $1,000 each; seven firemen, at $800 each; two tillermen, at $900 each; nine hostlers, at $800 each; sixty privates, at $780 each; three watchmen, at $600 each; one veterinary surgeon, $300; repairs to engine-houses, $1,000; for fuel, $2,250; purchase of horses, $2,500; forage, $6,000; hose, $2,250; repairs to apparatus and new appliances, $4,000; contingent expenses, including office-rent, horseshoeing, furniture, washing, oil, medical and stable supplies, harness, blacksmithing, labor, gas, and other necessary items, $6,500; in all, $108,100: Provided, That hereafter the commissioners shall deduct $1 each month from the pay of each fireman, which sum so deducted shall be kept as a firemen's relief fund, under the control of the commissioners, and be invested in United States or District bonds, and shall be used for the relief of any fireman who, by accident, while in actual performance of duty, or by service not less than fifteen years, shall become so permanently disabled as to be discharged from service therefor; and in case of his death from such accident, leaving a widow or children under 16 years of age, for their relief: Provided further, That such relief shall not exceed for any one fireman or his family the sum of $50 per month; and a sum not exceeding $75 may be allowed from said fund to defray the funeral expenses of any fireman dying in the service of the District.

Mr. FOLLETT. Under the provision in the bill of last year, which is substantially the same as this, except that in this bill the word "hereafter" is used so as to make the provision permanent, the word "fireman" has been given a construction by the First Comptroller of the Treasury which makes an amendment necessary. He limits the term "firemen" to the seven firemen provided for in the bill. I therefore offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 386 strike out the word "fireman" and insert the words "employé of the fire department;" in line 389 strike out the word "fireman" and insert the words "employé of the fire department;" in line 395 strike out the word "fireman" and insert the words "employé of the fire department;" in line 398 strike out the word "fireman" and insert the words "employé of the fire department."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. As I understand, the meaning of this bill is that the government of the District costs annually about three and one-half million dollars, of which the Government of the United States pays one-half, or $1,700,000. The effect is that the taxes on the Government property in the city of Washington and District of Columbia amount to about $1,700,000. Is not that the fact?

Mr. FOLLETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That would seem to be a pretty good tax for the property which the Government owns here. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. FOLLETT. I move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House with the recommendation that it pass as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8039) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, had directed him to report back the same with sundry amendments, and the recommendation that the bill with the amendments do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the amendments to this bill as reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FOLLETT. I ask that the question be taken on the amendments in gross.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the question will be submitted on the amendments in gross. The Chair hears none.

The question being taken, the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the passage of the bill.

Mr. FOLLETT. As the hour has arrived which was assigned by order of the House for addresses on a deceased member, I will not ask a vote on the passage of the bill at this time, as the rule requires that the vote must be taken by yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that if the previous question be ordered now upon the passage of the bill it will come up to-morrow as the first business in order after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. FOLLETT. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

DEATH OF HON. W. A. DUNCAN.

The SPEAKER. The hour of half past 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair will bring to the attention of the House the special order assigned for this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Monday, January 26, 1885, at 2.30 p. m., be fixed as the time for paying appropriate honor to the memory of Hon. W. A. DUNCAN, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I submit the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That this House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. W. A. DUNCAN, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that fitting tribute may be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect the House shall, at the conclusion of these ceremonies, adjourn.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. Mr. Speaker, Hon. WILLIAM A. DUNCAN, the subject of these funeral rites, was born in Franklin Township, Adams County, Pennsylvania, February 2, 1836. He died at Gettysburg, in his native county, November 14, 1884, in his forty-ninth year. His paternal ancestors originally went from the neighborhood of Edinburgh to Donegal, Ireland, from whence, about the year 1750, his grandfather, Seth Duncan, emigrated to the United States, and located in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania. He there married and lived till late in life, when he removed to Abbottstown, then York (now Adams) County. Seth had a number of children, most of whom became notable people. It was indeed a remarkable family. James and Matthew were brave officers in the Revolutionary war. William, after whom our late colleague was named, represented Philadelphia in the State Assembly as representative and senator for several terms and was an aid to Governor Simon Snyder during the war of 1812. His son, Abner L., was a distinguished lawyer in New Orleans, whither he had gone in 1806. He was one of General Jackson's aids at the battle of New Orleans, and counsel with Edward Livingstone in defending that general during his trial before Judge Hall for proclaiming martial law. His daughter Hannah became the wife of John Nicholson, the famous comptroller-general of Pennsylvania and partner of Robert Morris, the great American financier of the Revolution. Another daughter married Judge William Moulder, of Philadelphia. The most of them lived to a ripe old age. His son, Adam Seth Enos Duncan, the father of Mr. DUNCAN, was an exception. He died in 1840, aged 51 years. He, too, had been a soldier, serving in the war of 1812–'13 at Lundy's Lane, Chippewa, and Black Rock, and was twice wounded.

On the maternal side tributary rills of Pennsylvania-German blood steadied and calmed the Scotch-Irish flood of many generations coursing in his veins; for both grandmother and mother were of that race who more than two hundred years ago brought from the banks of the Rhine the arts, sciences, literature, and religion of a Christian civilization and planted them firmly in Pennsylvania.

Mr. DUNCAN, therefore, in his extraction was a Pennsylvanian, representing in blood and lineage the two great stocks which have so strongly impressed their characteristics on that State and made her a powerful, prosperous, and substantial Commonwealth.

It is a remarkable family record even for good old Pennsylvania. Yet our friend's whole life shows that he did not depend for laurels upon his dead ancestors; he was rather actuated by the famous sentiment of the eloquent Ulysses:

> Nam genus, et proavos, et quæ non fecimus ipsi,
> Vix ea nostra voco.

Nevertheless, if we would correctly weigh a man's life and character we must know the mold in which he was cast. We must all act for ourselves; but something of our characteristics we owe to our forebears, as a noted American writer puts it:

> Though nature appears capricious some qualities she carefully fixes and transmits, but some, and those the finer, she exhales with the breath of the individual as too costly to perpetuate. But I notice also that they may become fixed and permanent in any stock, by painting and repainting them in every individual until at last nature adopts them and bakes them in her porcelain.

With these antecedents Mr. DUNCAN was left an orphan at the age of 4 years with two brothers but a few years older, to the charge of a widowed mother. Nothing of the past worthy of preservation for her children was permitted to be lost by this estimable lady. Her affectionate care carried them through the troubles of childhood, followed them through the temptations of youth, and even after their careers of manhood had opened. She died in 1880 at the advanced age of 80 years, having found the reward of her motherly devotion in seeing her boys grow into successful business men and honored citizens. Heaven grant us many such women! They are the Cornelias of the Republic.

Presumably Mr. DUNCAN early showed an aptitude for intellectual pursuits, as he matriculated at the age of 17 at Franklin and Marshall College, Lancaster, Pa., in 1853. He graduated in regular course in 1857 as valedictorian of his class. This fact attests the eminent rank he attained while a college student as scholar, thinker, and orator. After graduating he entered the law office of R. G. McCreary, esq. (who preceded him one short year ago to the other world), at Gettysburg, the county seat of Adams, and in due course was admitted to the bar in 1859. He applied himself zealously to practice. Industry, diligence, and integrity brought with them the confidence of his associates, of the community, an extensive practice, and made his professional career a success. Endowed with such qualifications, combined with an agreeable address and methodical and regular habits, promotion to places of public trust became a matter of course. By the election of the people he filled the office of prosecuting attorney for Adams from 1862 to 1865, and so acceptably that he was again chosen to fill the same position from 1868 to 1871. He was also for a long time solicitor for the county, and filled various other local offices. In November, 1882, he was elected to represent the populous and intelligent counties of Adams, Cumberland, and York, comprising the nineteenth district of Pennsylvania, in the Forty-eighth Congress.

Here let us pause in our count of the unvarnished items that so far have made up this man's life. He did not flash into notice like a meteor, illuming the heavens to the great admiration of the lookers-on, and then disappear; nor did he become notorious by reason of any great noise he made or others made for him. We find him taking his origin in a quiet little township in Adams County, going through the phases of infancy and boyhood, beginning a career of study, till it brought him to the college door. He entered at the beginning. He steadily pursued his way, looking neither to the right nor to the left. The culmination of that course was the winning of its most coveted prize. He entered the arena of real life in the ranks of the profession of his choice. He there gained its most desirable and substantial rewards. He placed himself in contact with the public.

Public trusts became his legitimate possession and public usefulness his habit. No doubt he had conflicts in the race of life, but he preserved through them all his own self-respect, the confidence of the community which had known him from boyhood, and of all with whom he associated. He was indeed a type of those men who, whether they become more or less famous, whether they adorn private station or public position, bring to humanity its most lasting and substantial achievements; who well deserve the commendation of one gifted with more than poetic inspiration, who has said—

> All my life long
> I have beheld with most respect the man
> Who knew himself and knew the ways before him,
> And from amongst them chose considerately,
> With a clear foresight, not a blindfold courage,
> And, having chosen, with a steadfast mind
> Pursued his purposes.

With such antecedents he became a member of this body. With such a record the constituency which honored him and those who knew him had a right to expect a continuance of his usefulness. But Providence willed otherwise. An insidious disease, the appearance of which had given occasion for solicitude some six years ago, had already laid so heavy a hand upon his mortality that the usefulness of his Congressional career was paralyzed at its very threshold. And though the excitement and interest natural to every one upon entering a new field seemed at the beginning of this Congress for a while to kindle new life, it was but the last flicker of the divine spark premonitory of approaching extinction. Those of us who noted these changes saw full well that his days were numbered. He seldom appeared at the meetings of his committees, Education and Military Affairs. His wasted form and feeble gait were seldom seen, and his seat was but seldom occupied.

After the adjournment in July last and his return home, he rarely left the house, except on pleasant days to take short drives. This continued till a month before death, during which time I learn he was constantly at home, and often, owing to a difficulty in breathing, unable to converse with his friends. In the long, weary hours spent by him in the ante-chamber of death, he learned fully to realize his condition, and to become resigned to it. In vain friends spoke hopefully of renewed strength and prolonged life. He gave them no encouragement. Overruled by these friends, he allowed his party to honor him with a renomination for Congress, but his subsequent re-election crowned with success a brow already damp with the dews of death. Having renewed the religious vows of his early youth, and armed as he was with Christian faith in a Redeemer, he calmly awaited the beginning of a new life. In the early morning hours of November 14, 1884, at Gettysburg, his spirit peacefully took its everlasting flight.

Standing to-day at the grave of WILLIAM A. DUNCAN, my mind at this stage of our political history is irresistibly carried back to a suggestive episode in his career. In 1856, while yet a beardless youth upon the threshold of active life, he became the chosen ambassador of his instructors and fellow-pupils as the representative of his alma mater to bear congratulatory messages to James Buchanan, the last President of the United States of his party, on his election to the Presidency.

Twenty-eight years elapse—years crowded with tremendous events, bringing with them tremendous changes and affecting the social and political life of millions; bringing with them, too, overthrow after overthrow upon the party in whose supremacy his warmest sympathies were enlisted; and after years of toil and effort in her behalf, in the crowning hour of her success, and at the very start of a race involving most important results to him and his political household, like Moses on Pisgah's top, in sight of the Promised Land, his eyes close in death.

It is a question among men whether strict propriety does not require that on occasions like this the participants should mask their feelings and restrain the flow of natural emotions. Let those who prefer play the part of the stern Roman. I prefer to be the Greek, who weeps and still remains a man. For, in this solemn presence, occupying from early youth the relations I have to our dead friend, the first victim among my Pennsylvania colleagues since my connection with this House, the recollection of long-faded days transports me back over the gaps of time, place, and circumstance. Once more I stand with him on the perilous edge of an unknown future—unknown, but filled with glorious promise and pleasing prospect. When the alluring splendors of hope gilded life's bright morning with honor, wealth, and fame, beckoning on over untrodden and untried paths, there we parted, each bent upon his respective mission, each pursuing his separate path, converging here with many things then hoped for realized to both, his hoped for, unrealized balance absorbed by death. It is the one sad lesson of life—the chalice that sooner or later is commended to the lips of all—the vanity of human wishes. Yet the magic spell of that time projects a softening, soothing halo—to which no human heart can be insensible—into the very gloom of this hour.

I should hesitate to intrude upon the privacy of the domestic circle on an occasion like this; but it is due to those who survive him to say that the symmetry of our friend's rounded career, visible to the public eye, did not want the harmonious complement of a prosperous wedlock. Perhaps no one may tell how much of his success was due to this union. In 1863 he wedded Miss Catherine W. Schmucker, daughter of Rev. Dr. Samuel S. Schmueker, president of the Theological Seminary at Gettysburg, who is now deceased, the honored head of a family distinguished in the annals of the Church, in the learned professions, and in the higher walks of literature. The fruit of the union was four sons, now aged respectively 20, 19, 17, and 13 years. Happily they live to console, to comfort, and to sustain the bereaved widow in the bitter affliction of this irreparable loss. They are the legatees of many honorable family traditions, of which no doubt they will prove themselves worthy. I trust they will hold up without reproach in the battle of life the noble standard that fell from the grasp of their progenitor only when his hand was nerveless in death.

His end was universally lamented and regretted. The resolutions of respect and sympathy passed by his former associates at home, and the large concourse of sorrowing friends upon his interment, bear amplest testimony to this. All that lay in human power to avert or break the force of the blow has now been done, but—

They can not render back
The golden bowl that's broken at the fountain,
Or mend the wheel that's broken at the cistern,
Or twist again the golden cord that's loosed.

I doubt not that those of us who during the last session saw the too frail body that encased the immortal soul of our late associate must feel it to be better far to anticipate that hour when the breath of Almighty Power shall resurrect it from the dust, and change the body corruptible in time into the body incorruptible in eternity.

Thus ends my painful duty, a duty performed as best I could. I have not disfigured my face with grief as one without hope, nor indulged in vain lamentation, nor obscured with indiscriminate eulogy the memory of our late colleague. Not so have I purposed or performed. But as one who first learned to know him and become his friend years back in the college days, I have endeavored in decorous and befitting words to lay an honest tribute on his tomb—a tribute not unwarmed I hope by some rays of the ancient faith, some gleams of home pride, some cheering beams from the memories of long ago.

Mr. SWOPE. Mr. Speaker, as the successor, fellow-townsman, and life-long acquaintance of WILLIAM A. DUNCAN I feel impelled, not only or chiefly by time-honored custom, but much more by the dictates of friendship, esteem, and regard for high mental and moral excellencies, to offer a few words of tribute to the memory of my predecessor.

A monotone of sadness pervades the literature of every race and comes wailing down to us in the song and story of all the tribes of men. To be born is but the beginning of death. All the forces and potencies of nature seem at once to combine against the structure which she herself has reared. From the initial moment life is a struggle which yields no crown to the victor, and to the vanquished suffering, decay, and death. If life were to be estimated only by its last and culminating result, or by its continued contest with all destructive agencies, then, indeed, it would be true that—

Man was made to mourn.

The teachings of the pessimist would be in accordance with sound philosophy, and life itself would be evil, and only evil.

But man is himself a predominating factor in the economies of nature. He fills a larger place in the moral than he occupies in the material universe, and stands on a plane so far exalted above all other creations, that his life can not be measured by his length of days in the land. It is estimated not by years so much as by deeds; not by cycles of time so much as by eras of events. In the material universe not an atom of matter is ever lost, though constantly assuming new forms and combinations.

A drop of water which to-day may be tossed in wild commotion on the waves of the deep may to-morrow glitter in the dew-drop or fall in a tear. Thus every act of man is followed by an ever-widening circle of consequences and results, and forever reappears in novel and varied phases of existence. It may itself become a propagating germ, to be multiplied and reproduced throughout all time. This large view of the vast results which may be attained in a life which has not yet reached its meridian may in a measure reconcile us to the untimely loss of those who have not lived long, but well.

Mr. DUNCAN had the honor of being chosen by the people among whom he was born and reared, and so by them well-known and trusted, to represent them here. And though his usefulness was to some extent impaired by failing health and ever-increasing weakness, yet such was their firm faith in his honor and honesty of purpose and action, that they again re-elected him as their Representative for the Forty-ninth Congress. This in itself is a testimony of no slight or dubious character to his worth, ability, and conscientious regard for the interests of the people whom he most closely represented. Nor is the constituency of the nineteenth district of Pennsylvania by whom he was chosen wanting in the eminence and distinction of the men whom they have sent here in times past. Whatever differences of opinion may have prevailed, and may still prevail, in regard to great public interests and national policies, there can be no differences respecting the ability and patriotism of the Representatives chosen by the people who supported my lamented predecessor. Nor was my honored friend wanting in a watchful, careful, and intelligent regard for their interests.

But his patriotism was broader than his district. He regarded that as a fragment, however valued and prized, of the great and noble old Commonwealth of which it is a part; and this again as only a member of a national family of States, constituting one grand and glorious Union, whose honor and prosperity is the highest goal, to which all should be at once tributary and subordinate.

With no tormenting ambitions for public office, and but little experience beyond the cares of a local and honorable relationship to the community in which he lived, Mr. DUNCAN was sent here more by reason of the reputation he had gained as a good citizen, able lawyer, diligent worker, and an incorruptible patriot than because he had won any renown as a representative or legislator. That he did not disappoint or forfeit the confidence of his constituency, the faith of his party, or fail in his duty to the Commonwealth or to the county, is seen in the significant fact that he was returned on his second candidacy with a largely increased popular vote over his first election.

I may state here that which may be allowed me, as his personal friend and confidant in his last hours, that he wanted but this to smooth and make easy his path to the grave, already open to receive him, for he died just one week after his re-election. This is not the time to enlarge upon the strain and stress which is laid upon a member when his personal convictions of what is right and just are at variance with those entertained by many of his friends and by most of his constituents. Happy is he who escapes this ordeal, this trial by fire, and most happy he who in the long run and final result can demonstrate that he was right.

Those who have known Mr. DUNCAN only in this legislative hall can form no conception of the man. His first step here was the initial movement toward his grave, and every day accelerated the pace of the relentless disease which, hour by hour, sapped and undermined his vital forces. Still he fought a good fight against his remorseless foe. He gallantly contested every step; and could he have been placed under more favorable circumstances of climate and situation he might have protracted the contest for many years. But, sir, though often besought by family and friends to quit his post and forsake his duties he remained here, fulfilling all the responsibilities of his position until the close of the session, when, with every duty performed, and his public trust fulfilled, he came home to die in sight of those blue mountains at whose base he was born, and whose lengthening shadows, as the sun sinks behind them, almost reach his grave.

It has been said by the great dramatist, who was noted for his accurate portrayal of the human heart and his philosophic interpretation of the motives of human conduct, that—

The evil that men do lives after them;
The good is oft interred with their bones.

However true this adverse and discourageing estimate of the durability of good deeds may be, it can be accepted only with many limitations and under very unfortunate conditions of society. I prefer to believe in the truth of a higher, more inspiring, and philosophic sentiment:

The memory of the just is blest,
The name of the wicked shall rot.

I believe in the essential immortality of good deeds. Those that are such are not and can not be buried with the bones of their authors, but live after and follow them.

Nay, sir, it is a cheering truth that of "the good men do time but the impression deeper makes, as streams their channels deeper wear." It is only when death has lent its solemn sanction to a completed life, and time has confirmed the value of thoughts and deeds, that their wisdom and unselfishness are rightly appreciated.

No man takes in the range and altitude of a mountain while environed by near-jutting prominences and thick forests. The chain needs to be projected against a remote horizon, girding which may be seen the long-drawn and towering massiveness of the whole. Thus it is that we contemplate those colossal figures which awe and inspire us along the granite ranges of history.

The virtue, purity, and patriotic devotion which look upon us from their secure heights to-day in the characters of Washington, Jefferson, and others on like Alpine summits are all the more conspicuous and impressive because of the distance from which we contemplate them. The ages will never displace them from their eminence nor shrink their solid dimensions. In the same measure and by the same law will every humbler name take its enduring place among the stabilities of the future. We may therefore confidently commit the record of our deceased brother to the keeping of that favoring genius who protects and guards the archives of the past.

WILLIAM A. DUNCAN was born in Franklin Township, Adams County, Pennsylvania, on February 2, 1836. After such preliminary training as was at that period accessible in country schools he entered Franklin and Marshall College, from which he graduated in 1857 with the highest honor. During his college course he displayed marked ability as a clear thinker and graceful writer, which qualities he enlarged and developed during his whole career. After leaving college Mr. DUNCAN studied law in Gettysburg, and was admitted to the bar in 1860. In 1862 he was elected district attorney, and re-elected in 1868. In 1874 he was the nominee of Adams County for the State senate. He was also a member of the State central committee. In 1882 he was elected a member of the Forty-eighth Congress of the United States, and was re-elected November 3, 1884. He died November 14, 1884.

While a close professional student, and a hard worker in all the details of his business, so that he commanded the unlimited confidence of his clients, he did not neglect the ordinary duties which pertain to a good citizen. He has been identified with every organization which had for its object the welfare and improvement of the community in which he lived. He was genial, kind, and courteous, and was most loved by those who knew him best.

In his domestic life his even and equable temper, his kind consideration for those about him, his hospitality to his friends, and his constant love for his wife and children, shone forth with peculiar luster. During the long period of his weakness and depression his devoted wife administered to his wants, relieved him of such burdens as she herself could bear, and with an entire devotion which ended only with his life sacrificed everything for him.

With the love of partial friendship, with the sorrow of a bereaved community, we interred the remains of our brother in the soil of a field made memorable by the bloodiest battle of cruel war.

He rests on the summit where carnage and death held their bloody revels twenty-one years ago, but where now all is peace and stillness, where the summer breezes blow softly from the blue mountains which overlook the plain now smiling with peace and plenty.

In the adjoining cemetery, where—

> Each in his narrow cell forever laid,
> The rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep, rests all that is mortal of my lamented friend and predecessor.

Let us trust that each of us, before the final result comes, may have contributed his share, humble though it be, to the happiness, prosperity, and progress of his race, so that it may not truly be said of any one of us "he has lived in vain."

Mr. ATKINSON. Mr. Speaker, as the Highlander will not pass the tumulus of his friend without adding a pebble thereto, so I offer a brief tribute to the memory of my late colleague, WILLIAM A. DUNCAN, in whose honor these services are held to-day. It is fitting that we should turn aside for a little while from our daily duties to record our testimonials of esteem for one who faithfully and honestly performed his duty as a Representative, who conscientiously and laboriously served his constituents even when declining health made his onerous duties doubly difficult, and who thoroughly enjoyed the confidence and respect of the intelligent constituency which sent him to this House.

We can render him no other service; but it is a service which he well deserved, so that we may not perform it as a mere matter of official duty or custom, but because his gentle and amiable disposition, his fidelity and honesty, his industry, and his sacrifices for his country secure it for him as his just due.

The district which I have the honor to represent adjoins that represented by Mr. DUNCAN, but my acquaintance with him began only at the beginning of the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress. When I first met him I was impressed with his amiability and gentleness of disposition. A thorough gentleman, of refined and cultured tastes, I found him an interesting companion, and soon learned to appreciate him as a valued friend. Although disease had set its impress upon him, he never seemed to think of himself or his physical misfortunes, but bravely and unflinchingly bore the burden which would have fallen on a man of less courage with crushing force. He attended to his public duties with careful attention to detail and a total disregard of self, as if animated only by a desire to achieve the greatest results in the brief time which he knew was allotted him to live, apparently believing that—

> We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths;
> In feelings, not in figures on a dial.
> We should count time by heart-throbs. He most lives
> Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.

Mr. DUNCAN'S humblest constituents could call upon him for his services, feeling assured that his business would receive as careful consideration as the more important affairs of the influential. He was polite and courteous to his fellow-members of this House and kind to his inferiors. As a lawyer he loved his profession, and although not without ambition for public life, yet acted as if the highest honor to which he aspired was to be distinguished in the profession of his choice.

Bringing fine literary culture to his professional studies, he thoroughly mastered the principles of the law and applied them readily and accurately to the facts presented in a cause. His intellectual abilities were of a high order, and he possessed a diversified knowledge outside the range of his profession rarely obtained by the laborious practitioner of the law.

He acquired a large practice soon after he was admitted to the bar, and his unwearied devotion to the interests of his clientage was one of the inducing causes which produced the disease of which he died. Few men possessed as great and enviable popularity as Mr. DUNCAN. His popularity was not accidental or evanescent, for his constituents had known him from his childhood.

Soon after he came to the bar he was elected district attorney of his native county, and so satisfactory was his performance of the duties of that office that he was again elected to the same position. After his first election as a Representative in Congress he felt that his failing health would not enable him to bear the exertion and fatigue incident to a canvass for re-election, and he would willingly have declined the honor of a renomination. But his many friends insisted that he should again be a candidate, and he reluctantly yielded to their importunities.

His physical inability rendered him unable to canvass his district, but the confidence of his people was so marked, that he was elected by a larger majority than when he was first a candidate. No higher compliment could have been paid to his personal worth.

Two weeks after his re-election death called him from the scenes of his struggles and his earthly triumphs. He fell in the meridian of his useful and honorable career; and his unfinished life, if the expression may be used, is well typified by a broken column. From the spring and summer of his career we had a right to expect an abundant autumn. We regret that by his untimely death this body and his people have been deprived of those matured fruits for which his character and attainments had justified us to hope.

His body has been laid to rest among his kindred upon the historic Cemetery Hill at Gettysburg, which two decades ago vibrated with the thunder of that mighty cannonade which marked the turning point of the struggle for the maintenance of the Union. The fierce conflict over, the nation dwells in peace, and may this peace be emblematical of the peaceful repose of his spirit since the conflict of his life is ended.

The sainted dead of the nation, who died that the Union might live, lie in the national cemetery at his feet. On the morning of the resurrection none can be in nobler company.

> He has outsoared the shadow of our night;
> Envy and calumny and hate and pain,
> And that unrest which men miscall delight,
> Can touch him not and torture not again;
> From the contagion of the world's slow stain
> He is secure; and now can never mourn
> A heart grown cold, a head grown gray, in vain—
> Nor, when the spirit's self has ceased to burn,
> With sparkless ashes load an unlamented urn.

Mr. POST, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, he whose memory we honor to-day and whose death we mourn was a modest, unassuming, honest, and faithful citizen. Content to perform with zeal and fidelity whatever duties his environment imposed he sought not renown, but courted rather that more subtantial boon, the confidence and esteem of his neighbors, with whom he was brought into daily contact and among whom he sought to achieve an honorable reputation.

During his brief term of service in this House Mr. DUNCAN was precluded from attendance upon its sessions often for several days in succession by reason of delicate health. At the time of taking his seat the ravages of disease had grievously impaired his powers of endurance, and he was therefore obliged to abstain from all social festivities, in order that his whole strength might be husbanded for the discharge of official duties. Hence it came that his acquaintance among his colaborers in this body was exceedingly limited and his usefulness necessarily curtailed. For many years it had been his ambition to represent his district in Congress; and who can imagine the bitterness of his disappointment, when at last, the coveted prize being attained, he found himself physically incapacitated for active participation in the work of legislation.

In this contentious body, with its iron-bound, inexplicable rules and utter disregard for individual feeling; where recognition can only be obtained as the result of intellectual prowess, parliamentary finesse, or sheer force of will; where the power is wielded by a few of the legislative elders, and a new member is chiefly considered as a necessity in making up a quorum, a man in robust health and in the full vigor of manhood's strength may well be overwhelmed by the paucity of his chances for gaining a foothold; how utterly futile of accomplishment, then, this task must have appeared to our deceased friend, who entered this Hall enfeebled by disease and with emaciated frame.

Stricken down while yet comparatively a young man, deprived of an opportunity for displaying in public life whatever talent or adaptation therefor he may have possessed, in eulogizing the dead upon this occasion we can only speak of the character and reputation sustained by him in the private walks of life. In his intercourse with his fellows the deceased was kind, considerate, and courteous. In his business relations he was conscientious, fair, and generous. As a lawyer he was able, industrious, and successful. To all trusts confided to his keeping he was faithful, and as a husband and father he was loving, tender, and true.

A little more than a year ago the Forty-eighth Congress convened in its first session. In the year that has passed so quickly, as quickly as vanishing breath, the shadow of death has frequently darkened this Chamber. Of those who then came commissioned to this House of Representatives, bearing with pride such evidence of popular favor and eagerly hoping for higher honors, several have already gone to join the great majority. Life's fitful fever being over, they sleep. As the Death King has entered here with swift and echoless tread and borne away one after another of our associates, we are reminded of the uncertainty of life, and the great and solemn truth is forced home upon us that it is appointed unto all once to die.

WILLIAM A. DUNCAN was born in Adams County, Pennsylvania, February 2, 1836. After graduating with high honors from college he read law and was admitted to practice in 1859. Aside from serving two terms as district attorney for his county he held no other official position until his election to Congress. Always a strong partisan and taking an active interest in political matters, he was frequently a delegate to conventions, county and State.

Notwithstanding the fact that at the close of the last session Mr. DUNCAN returned to his home much prostrated, and it was apparent that the end of his earthly career was near at hand, and while unable to go about among them, his constituents unanimously renominated him for re-election, and at the election he was chosen by a large majority, thus attesting the regard of his people for their distinguished Representative. The certificate of the return judges of this election was received two days before his death.

I was one of the committee of the members of this House designated by the Speaker to attend the funeral obsequies of the deceased held in the quaint but historic little borough of Gettysburg. In that vicinity he had lived all his life, and from the immense concourse of mourning friends gathered there to pay their last tribute of respect it was evident that by those who had known him long and intimately he was beloved. There, side by side with those of his kin who had gone before, we laid him to rest, and as we retraced our steps from the city of the dead, leaving him asleep upon the breast of Mother Earth, we felt that a good man had gone from among us to his eternal home.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I rise more for the purpose of joining my colleagues in paying a tribute to the memory of Mr. DUNCAN than with the view of saying anything which may enlighten the members of the House about his characteristics or his life. My acquaintance with Mr. DUNCAN was formed at the beginning of the present Congress; and I was brought into more or less intimate association with him by his being a member of the Committee on Military Affairs. I also met him frequently, and our social relations were somewhat intimate and always pleasant.

As Mr. DUNCAN appeared to me, a most prominent characteristic of his nature was that he was essentially and in every respect a gentleman.

Every element which goes to make up that desirable character was possessed in a conspicuous degree by him. He was studious always to avoid the mere suggestion of anything that would give offense. In his intercourse with others he was kindly, genial, respectful, treating all as equals.

The members of his own family—his sons and daughters—shared his association as adult equals are wont to do; and I have more than once observed the respect and consideration that were shown each other in the discussion of topics, and how free each felt to express his or her opinion, unawed by paternal austerity, fully encouraged rather by the mutual confidence and regard that prevailed in that good family.

Notwithstanding this genial, kindly temperament of Mr. DUNCAN, I am told that in the legal forum he conducted most vigorous fights, and that in professional controversies his brethren of the bar always regarded him as a foeman fully worthy of their steel. In Congress, being a new member and subjected to those unfavorable opportunities which new members have always to encounter here, he had but little chance to show the metal he was made of; but I am convinced from his course in the Committee on Military Affairs, from the decided conviction he expressed on subjects coming before that committee, that if his health had permitted him to live longer among us and it had been equal to the performance of the multifarious duties devolved upon us, here in the legislative forum he would have made his mark as he did in the legal forum before he came here.

Mr. DUNCAN was comparatively young, and it was a misfortune to his great State and to his constituency that he was taken off so soon. In the rough-and-tumble fight of this world and in the rugged contests which seem to exist always in this body it is not easy for a man of quiet, amiable, and gentle manner to make himself conspicuous before the country, but after a while, after the lapse of time, and with some experience, I feel he would have risen to a commanding position in this House, and that his abilities would have gained the fullest respect and admiration of his fellow-members.

His people have lost an honest and worthy man, his constituents a faithful and just Representative, and his family a good father and kind husband; and I sincerely join with my colleagues in paying this last tribute by this great body to the memory of Mr. DUNCAN.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, upon the first day of the present session of Congress, when Representatives were exchanging salutations upon their reunion after a few months of separation, the cheerful greetings were silenced and the business of the House was suspended by the announcement that during the vacation two of our fellow-members had passed away from earth and would meet with us in this Hall no more.

Thus in the midst of our joyousness we were reminded that a dark shadow enveloped the households of two of our late companions. In the full enjoyment of our own active life and vigorous health we were reminded that death had stricken down two of those who sat here with us but a few months since. And we come to-day in a formal manner to honor the memory of WILLIAM A. DUNCAN.

There is much of the true philosophy of life in the Latin maxim, de mortuis nil nisi bonum. For it is unmanly to attack those who can not defend themselves. But in speaking of the dead the tendency is rather to indulge in exaggeration of their virtues. The friends of our departed colleague have no occasion to invoke the charity of silence; and it is quite certain that by extravagant eulogy we would do violence to the nature and wishes of him whose memory we honor.

By native capacity and educational acquirements Mr. DUNCAN was well equipped for a useful and honorable life. But, unfortunately, his mental vigor was not fortified by physical strength. He was always delicate. The insidious disease which undermined his life and bore him to an untimely grave crippled his energies, and to a great extent marred the perfection of his promised career. Taken away just at the period when a man's fame, if he is to have any in political life, is first forming, we can only conjecture what his success would have been. But there is enough known to excite sincere regret at his removal from his new career, when we remember that he was a man of cultivated mind, inflexible integrity, lofty aspirations, and courteous manners.

Mr. DUNCAN was never an aggressive man, but quiet, unobtrusive, and extremely modest. Yet, with all of his amiability, he was not without resolution and self-assertion. In his antagonisms he never excited enmity; in his successes he never aroused envy. The gentleness of his disposition, the frankness of his manner, the integrity of his character, made him many friends and many mourners at his death.

I had the sad satisfaction of attending the funeral of our respected colleague, and witnessed the universal evidence of high esteem in which he was held by all of his neighbors. The entire community followed his remains to their last resting-place in the historic cemetery which overlooks the town of Gettysburg, and manifested their profound respect as the body was laid away in that peaceful and lovely spot which had been the scene of a bloody and memorable conflict. As his calm life was undisturbed by the angry contentions around him, so his last, sweet sleep will be unbroken by the turbulent memories which throng the air above his grave.

The gentlemen who have preceded me have spoken at length of Mr. DUNCAN'S public services, and further allusion to them is needless.

I present my estimate of his character as a modest tribute to the memory of a modest man.

I move the adoption of the resolutions.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and in accordance therewith (Mr. HEMPHILL being in the chair as Speaker pro tempore) the House (at 3 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 27, 1885.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Montana Territory, remonstrating against the leasing of any portion of the Crow Indian reservation to corporations; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. GEORGE. I present a memorial of the Federation of Labor Unions of this city, and as it is very short I ask unanimous consent that it be read.

There being no objection, the memorial was read, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS FEDERATION OF LABOR UNIONS,
Washington, D. C., January 26, 1885.

To the Senate of the United States:

The undersigned, by authority of the Federation of Labor Unions of the District of Columbia, for and in behalf of the members of that body engaged in the building trades, respectfully protest against the passage of Senate bill No. 2507, to amend the law concerning mechanics' liens in the District of Columbia.

Workmen employed by contractors and builders were frequently defrauded before the passage of the present law, which fully protects them in their just rights by giving them a first lien on the product of their labor; and we submit that the efficiency of the law should not be impaired by the passage of the proposed amendment.

E. W. OYSTER, President.
J. F. BILLINGSLEY, Secretary.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PALMER presented the petition of Ward's Detroit and Lake Superior Line, the Detroit Dry-Dock Company, the Star Line Steamers Company, Frank E. Kirby, Capt. John M. Johnston, and 48 others, citizens of Detroit, Mich., praying that the United States Government acquire ownership and control of the two canals crossing Point Keweenaw, Lake Superior, Michigan, as recommended by the Secretary of War; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MILLER, of California, presented a petition of furniture and chair manufacturers of New York city, praying for the ratification of the proposed Spanish reciprocity treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented the petition of A. G. Brown and 199 other citizens of Kittanning and vicinity, in Pennsylvania, praying for the improvement of the Monongahela River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Franklin Institute of Pennsylvania, praying for an appropriation to reimburse that institution for moneys paid on Government account; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Franklin Institute, of Pennsylvania, praying that the Commissioner of Patents be directed to deliver to that institution one bound copy of the specifications of patents relating to electricity; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. MORRILL presented the petition of L. Deane, Mann & Co., B. U. Keyser, W. Burris, G. B. Towles, Newton Crawford, H. Q. Keyworth, L. R. Trembly, and other citizens of Washington, D. C., praying that square 406, between Eighth and Ninth and E and F streets northwest, may be selected as the site for the city post-office and for the enlargement of the Post-Office Department building; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. DOLPH presented the petition of Elizabeth G. Illsley, of Ipswich, Mass., widow of Charles E. Illsley, late private Company A, First Regiment Maine Infantry, praying that she be granted a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MAXEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2295) to grant a right of way to the New Orleans and Mississippi Valley Railroad Company for the construction of a railroad and telegraph line through the United States public grounds at Baton Rouge, La., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. COLQUITT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of R. K. Baird, praying for an increase of pension, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the prayer of the petition was denied.

Mr. MORRILL. I report by direction of the Committee on Finance the bill (H. R. 4976) for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar favorably with amendments, and I desire to give notice that I shall endeavor to call up the bill for the consideration of the Senate on Tuesday next.

Mr. HARRIS. I simply desire to say that that report is not the unanimous report of the committee, but is the report of a majority.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1955) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the Richland Volunteer Rifle Company, of Columbia, S. C., fifty breech-loading Springfield rifles, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1687) authorizing the President to appoint and retire J. Madison Cutts as a lieutenant-colonel of the United States Army, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HAMPTON. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2194) for the relief of George A. Curden, to report it with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed. I will state that this bill is for the relief of an officer who lost his personal effects by fire. The adverse report is made because a general bill has already been reported to the Senate covering all such cases. I therefore move that this bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following petitions, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the prayers of the petitions denied:

The petition of Mrs. M. H. Dunn, praying an increase of pension from $30 to $50 per month; and

The petition of Mrs. N. Cushman, widow of the late Commander C. H. Cushman, praying for an increase of pension.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of William H. H. Gilley, praying to be allowed a pension, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 2587) granting a pension to William H. H. Gilley; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 1927) granting a pension to O. F. Miller;

A bill (S. 1969) granting a pension to William T. West;

A bill (H. R. 297) granting a pension to Violet Calloway; and

A bill (H. R. 1397) granting a pension to Albert O. Laufman, late second lieutenant of Company A, Sixty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1951) granting a pension to Martin Bever, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Charles B. Spencer, praying for an increase of pension, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the prayer of the petition denied.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1171) granting a pension to Isabel Campbell, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1709) granting a pension to Leonora A. Boyden, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CAMDEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4238) granting a pension to Sallie Ingham, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 947) granting a pension to Powhattan B. Short, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5670) to authorize a retired-list for privates and non-commissioned officers of the United States Army who have served for a period of thirty years or upward, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2492) to prevent the discharge from the military service of the United States of graduates from the Military Academy under the provisions of section 3 of chapter 181 of the Supplement to the Revised Statutes, and for the repeal of the said section, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2381) to amend "an act providing for two additional associate justices of the supreme court of the Territory of Dakota, one additional associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of Washington, and for other purposes," approved July 4, 1884, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5691) amending section 764 of the Revised Statutes, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SLATER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. 513) granting a pension to James Coffey, of Oregon, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1731) granting an increase of pension to Frances H. Downes, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (H. R. 6197) granting a pension to Peter Falkner; and

A bill (H. R. 4569) granting a pension to David Urbansky.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 5926) granting a pension to John Maloney;

A bill (H. R. 2908) granting a pension to James McManus;

A bill (H. R. 3565) granting a pension to William Eurele;

A bill (H. R. 6084) to restore the name of Walter H. Crow to the pension-roll; and

A bill (H. R. 2432) for the relief of Mrs. Jane Young.

Mr. WILSON. I am also directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4856) granting a pension to Bvt. Col. C. A. Cilley, of North Carolina, to report adversely thereon and recommend its indefinite postponement.

Mr. RANSOM. I hope the bill will not be indefinitely postponed for the present. I ask that it be placed upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3008) for the relief of certain settlers on the Duck Valley Indian reservation in Nevada, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1381) for the relief of certain settlers on the Duck Valley Indian reservation in Nedava, moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

FLAGS FOR INAUGURATION CEREMONIES.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 109) authorizing the loan of certain flags and bunting to the committee on inauguration ceremonies, has instructed me to report it back to the Senate favorably, recommending its passage with a simple amendment, striking out in the ninth line the word "use" and inserting the word "loan."

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the joint resolution be now considered, as it is important that it should go to the other House at once if it is to be adopted at all.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have it read in full.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy be, and they are hereby, authorized to loan to the committee on inauguration ceremonies the flags and bunting in the Government depots, for use in decorating the city of Washington on the 4th day of March next: Provided, That the said committee shall indemnify the Departments against any loss or damage resulting from the use of said flags and bunting, except such damage as is necessarily incident to such use.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is a copy of the joint resolution which was passed in 1881.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The amendment reported from the Committee on Military Affairs was, in line 9, to strike out the word "use" and insert "loan;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the said committee shall indemnify the Departments against any loss or damage resulting from the loan of said flags and bunting, except such damage as is necessarily incident to such use.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. MANDERSON. The joint resolution (S. R. 114) to provide for printing the annual reports of the Smithsonian Institution was referred to the Committee on Printing. I am directed by the committee to report it back favorably and to ask that it be now considered by the Senate.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It directs that the annual reports of the Smithsonian Institution shall be hereafter printed at the Government Printing Office, in the same manner as the annual reports of the heads of Departments are now printed, for submission in print to the two Houses of Congress.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REMOVAL OF POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

Mr. GARLAND. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7871) to remove the political disabilities of W. H. Ward, of Virginia, have instructed me to report it favorably and without amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed (two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative).

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 8039) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 8121) to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order during the ceremonies of the inauguration of the President, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 1112) granting a pension to John Sweeney; and

A bill (S. 1144) granting a pension to John W. Wright.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MILLER, of California, introduced a bill (S. 2588) for the relief of Mary A. Bickerdyke, of San Francisco, Cal.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CHACE introduced a bill (S. 2589) for relief of the Woonsocket National Bank, of Woonsocket, R. I.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 2590) granting a pension to Elizabeth G. Illsley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PENDLETON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2591) to authorize the purchase of certain portraits to replace those presented by the French Government and destroyed in the burning of the Capitol in 1814; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

AMENDMENTS TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DOLPH, and Mr. MILLER of California submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them to the Indian appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

Mr. BUTLER. On the 22d instant I reported favorably the bill (S. 318) for the relief of cadet-engineers who were in the naval service at Annapolis on the 5th day of August, 1882. At the request of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who was necessarily detained from the meeting of the committee by illness, I ask that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CONGER. I should like to have the bill read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to granting the request of the Senator from South Carolina, that the bill be taken from the Calendar and recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PROTECTION OF CHILDREN.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate yesterday concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 729) for the protection of children in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes. I simply desire to state in this connection that the conference committee acted upon the printed bill rather than the engrossed bill. It being a criminal statute and liable at all times to be construed strictly, it has been considered best to reconsider the vote and to have a new conference upon the bill, so that it may be reported back in accordance with the engrossed bill.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now recurs on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was non-concurred in.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I move that the Senate insist further on its disagreement to the amendment of the House of Representatives and ask for a further conference with the House thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. RIDDLEBERGER, Mr. PIKE, and Mr. BROWN were appointed.

MEMORIAL BUST OF HENRY WILSON.

Mr. DAWES. I offer the following resolution and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Joint Committee on the Library be requested to cause a bust of the late Vice-President Wilson to be placed over the tablet lately ordered to be placed in the room where he died.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a moment.

A few days ago, it will be recollected that on the motion of my colleague [Mr. HOAR] the Senate directed a tablet to indicate in the Vice-President's room the place where the late Vice-President Wilson died. My colleague and myself have felt since then that the distinguished public services and the remarkable death of Mr. Wilson, at the time President of this body, called for some more marked commemoration.

Our history furnishes but one other instance of a distinguished public servant falling at his post and dying in this Capitol. The younger Adams, after a long life of great usefulness and renown at home and abroad, fell at his post with his harness on, and died in the Speaker's room of the House of Representatives. By direction of the House, of which he was then a member, a tablet surmounted by a bust of Mr. Adams was placed in the old Speaker's room where he died.

The public services and the life of Mr. Wilson were entirely American, and furnish a remarkable illustration of the working of our institutions. As such they will ever be cherished and acknowledged. That fame he largely achieved in this body, of which he was the President when he died.

There is another special reason for doing what is asked in the resolution. Mr. Wilson was the child of poverty, and she claimed him for her own till the end. It has been said of him here that he had no other home but this Capitol. Certain it is that all those who make home dear, whom other men love, and for whom they serve, had gone before him, and the nation alone was left for him to love and serve. It is fitting, therefore, it has seemed to us, that a memorial of him should be left here in this Capitol where he died.

I am aware, sir, that the Committee on the Library are already authorized to do what is asked in the resolution, but I am confident that the Senate would wish to add the significance and value of its request to this act. In concurrence with my colleague in the resolution which he offered, and in further carrying out that purpose, I have offered this resolution, which I hope the Senate will adopt.

The resolution was agreed to.

BOUNDARIES OF LIBERIA.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to the Senate the correspondence between the Government of the United States and the Governments of Great Britain and Liberia in reference to an arbitration between Liberia and Great Britain upon the northwest boundary between Liberia and Sierra Leone, the instructions given to Admiral Shufeldt as umpire, his official report to his now Government, and the correspondence between him and the arbitrators on the parts of Great Britain and Liberia; also any further correspondence touching any discussion or difference as to any other portion of the boundaries of Liberia.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8039) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (H. R. 8121) to enable the commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order during the ceremonies of the inauguration of the President, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

LAND DAMAGES FOR INCREASED DISTRICT WATER-SUPPLY.

Mr. HARRIS. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will suspend for a moment. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions that order is closed.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed at this time to the consideration of Senate bill No. 2551, reported by me yesterday, and I gave notice at that time that I should ask the Senate to take it up this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1072, being the bill (S. 2551) for the relief of George E. Moore, of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the bill read first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information if there is no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the Secretary read the substitute reported by the committee for the information of the Senate, and then if the Senate will allow me to make an explanation of three minutes I am sure no Senator will object to the proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not now in order. The substitute recommended by the committee, if there be no objection, will be read for information, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment proposed by the committee, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee that this bill be now considered.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask consent to waive the reading of the original bill. It is to cover a private claim. There is a substitute reported by the committee to cover the class to which the claimant belongs. Therefore I ask that the Senate act upon the substitute without reading the original bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the reading of the text of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the Committee on the District of Columbia, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the time fixed by the act entitled "An act to increase the water-supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes," approved July 15, 1882, within which owners of or parties interested in lands condemned or taken under the provisions of said act may accept the appraised value made or to be hereafter made under said act, or owners or persons interested in such lands who have declined or may hereafter decline to accept the appraised value of such lands, and have elected or may elect to file a petition in the Court of Claims under the provisions of said act, be, and the same is hereby, extended for one year from the passage of this act, notwithstanding the limitation provided by said act.

Mr. McMILLAN. What is the reason for the extension?

Mr. HARRIS. The act of 1882 makes it the duty of the Secretary of War to have made a survey and a map of such lands as are necessary for the extension of the aqueduct, the extension of the dam at Great Falls, and the construction of a reservoir in the northern part of the city. That map being prepared and delivered to the Attorney-General, it is made the duty of the Attorney-General to advertise for owners and abstracts of title to the lands so taken, and to have the lands appraised by the machinery provided by that act. It further provides that when the lands are appraised the Attorney-General shall tender to the owner who has presented satisfactory evidence of title the appraised value. It provides, however, that if the owner elects not to accept the appraised value, he may file his petition in the Court of Claims and there have the value ascertained; but it further fixes a limitation, that he may file that petition or accept the appraised value within one year from the first advertisement of the Attorney-General.

The owners are so numerous and the difficulties in reporting upon titles are so great that the Attorney-General within the year was not able to report on titles and have the lands appraised within the year, and under the act of 1882, as they have not accepted the payment or filed their petition in the Court of Claims, they are barred; and the act provides that the title to the land shall be vested in the United States. This simply extends the time, so that the Attorney-General may complete the investigation and report upon titles and pay the appraised value, or allow the owner to file his petition in the Court of Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act to increase the water-supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes.'"

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three hours and five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HALE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7874) making additional appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3 and 4.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 12, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 11 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment, amended as follows: Insert after the word "seventy-five," in line 10, page 15 of the bill, the words "as fixed by the act approved June 30, 1876;" and the Senate agree to the same.

EUGENE HALE,
W. B. ALLISON,
JAS. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
WM. S. HOLMAN,
JOHN D. LONG,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, this subject, which has given rise to a good deal of controversy, has at last been settled by what I may call a Simon Pure appropriation bill for the remainder of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885. The bill at last as sent from the House is an itemized bill based upon the estimates for the current fiscal year. In conference it has been stripped of all new legislation, and is reported now from the conference committee as an appropriation bill.

The only question that arose with reference to new legislation, where any protracted conference was needed, was with regard to the Marine Corps. The House of Representatives put upon the bill a provision limiting the number of officers in that corps to seventy-five. Examination discloses that by the act of June 30, 1876, it was provided that—

From and after the passage of this act there shall be no appointments, except by promotion, to fill vacancies occurring in the list of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps until the number of such officers shall have been reduced, by casualties or otherwise, to seventy-five.

It was apparent to the conference that the scope and meaning and intention of that act is to fix the number of officers in the Marine Corps at seventy-five after they shall have been so reduced, and the amendment of the House has been agreed to with the additional clause calling attention to the act of 1876, which was the basis of the action of the House. In other respects, as I have said, it is a Simon Pure appropriation bill, and the present conduct of the Navy Department, its course of action and the legislation under which it exists, has not been changed. I ask that the report may be concurred in.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I only desire to say that as one of the conferees on the part of the Senate I was willing to surrender anything that the House desired or demanded, whichever is the proper word, because the appropriations for the Navy expired on the 31st day of December last and the month of January has now nearly run, and there seemed to be no difference between the conferees on the part of the House and on the part of the Senate that required a conference of more than ten minutes between them. Yet my information is that three or four thousand employés, carpenters, blacksmiths, laboring people, have been kept out of employment from the 1st to the 27th day of January, unable to accept other employment without abandoning the work to which they were accustomed and at which they expected every day to obtain employment again, supporting their families as best they could, with no hope, unless Congress sees fit to give it to them, of ever getging a dollar for the month that they have been in enforced idleness.

While the negotiations between the conferees on the part of the House and the Senate were pending, and were, I do not say improperly but unaccountably, delayed, I offered in the conference this amendment, which it was said was not in order under the rules of the House and the rules of the Senate:

Provided, That all persons who were in the employ of the Navy Department under the provisions of the act making temporary provisions for the naval service," approved July 7, 1884, on the 31st day of December of said year, and who were furloughed, or suspended, or discharged from such employment in consequence of the want of appropriations for the naval service after that date, and who shall be re-employed under the provisions of this act, shall be paid their respective compensations from said 31st day of December to the date of the approval of this act, the same as if they had continued in their respective employments.

The rules, I understand, prevented that from being considered by the conferees, and I read it now for the purpose of saying that if the Naval Committee or some other committee desire to do justice to the employés of the Government who, without any fault of their own, have been in enforced idleness for a month in very severe weather, they will either in the deficiency bill or in some other bill make a provision similar to the one I have suggested.

I agreed to the report of the conference committee. I signed it because I thought any bill that would put an end to the condition of things that exists now would be better than none, for while the regular employés, who can afford to wait, will be paid from the 1st day of January, those who are dependent upon the day's labor for daily bread have lost nearly a month without any fault of their own, and without any good cause for the delay that I am able to understand.

The report was concurred in.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that he had, on the 26th instant, approved and signed the following bills:

An act (S. 929) granting a pension to Caroline Treckell;

An act (S. 764) granting an increase of pension to Abby P. Arnold; and

An act (S. 12) for the relief of Elizabeth Carson.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate again proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and nineteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 27, 1885.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the previous question, which was prevailing on the District appropriation bill, may be proceeded with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands the regular order of business.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I rise to correct the Journal. I ask the reading by the Clerk of the joint resolution introduced by myself under this clause of our Manual, page 314:

The Speaker shall examine and approve the Journal before it is read. And every day after taking the chair, on the appearance of a quorum, shall cause the Journal of the proceedings of the last sitting to be read.

I call, therefore, for the reading of the joint resolution which I introduced on yesterday, which is not in the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution is not in the Journal.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. It ought to be in the Journal.

The SPEAKER. Under what rule?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. That it is a part of the proceedings of yesterday.

The SPEAKER. And so was every bill introduced on yesterday.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I have a right to call for the reading of every bill if I choose.

The SPEAKER. But it does not go into the Journal.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I ask to have it read.

The SPEAKER. That does not put it in the Journal.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. It puts it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. It does not except by consent. If the gentleman will point out any rule which requires a bill or joint resolution to be entered on the Journal the Chair will enforce it. At present the Chair is not advised of any such rule.

A MEMBER. Has it not been the practice?

The SPEAKER. Nor has such been the practice, so far as the Chair knows.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I ask the Clerk to read the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read that part of the Journal relating to this matter.

Mr. SPRINGER. He asks the Clerk to read the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will see whether the Journal is correct.

Mr. LONG. He does not ask to have the Journal read, but his joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. He desires to have the Journal corrected, and the Chair desires to see whether the Journal is correct.

The Clerk read as follows:

J. D. WHITE. Also, a joint resolution (319) to abolish the office of Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the entire system of internal taxes—to the Ways and Means.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Now I call for the reading of the joint resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to be heard on that objection.

The SPEAKER. What motion does the gentleman make?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I demand as a right, if I have the right, to give this as my authority: That under the rule "it is not usual to read in full the names of members voting or not voting, or resolutions, or messages, but it is the right of any member to demand their reading in full, and their reading can only be dispensed with by unanimous consent or by a suspension of the rules, which requires the Journal to be read."

The SPEAKER. That means that when a bill or joint resolution is introduced any member has the right to have it read, and the one introduced by the gentleman from Kentucky was read yesterday by the gentleman himself and afterward by the Clerk at the desk.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman makes no motion to amend the Journal.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman does not make any motion to amend the Journal it will be approved. [After a pause.] There being no objection, the Journal stands approved as read.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to correct the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is that a privileged question?

The SPEAKER. It is usual to allow corrections of the RECORD.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I have before me the RECORD of this morning. I find on page 1136 [cries of "Louder!"], in the second column, about the middle, that on yesterday I asked as follows:

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I ask leave to present the following preamble and resolution.

And I proceeded to read until interrupted by my colleague [Mr. BLACKBURN]. I find on the next page, 1137, about the middle, that the Speaker said, "The gentleman from Kentucky will proceed with his resolution;" and thereupon I proceeded and concluded.

The RECORD goes on to state that "Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, concluded the reading of the resolution." Again, sir, I find nothing here whatever in the RECORD of what I read. Not a word of it appears here. I have applied to the stenographic reporters for copies of the notes taken on yesterday, which notes have certainly been manipulated by some one after they left their hands. It is clear upon the face of the RECORD that they are not printed here as they left the hands of the Official Reporters themselves.

I desire, sir, to call the attention of the Speaker to the duties of these Official Reporters as laid down in the pages of the Digest, where the Official Reporters are made officers of this House. The question raised here is not only a question of what occurred on this floor on yesterday and of which I now complain, but a question of whether these reporters who receive $25,000 or more a year, after they have sworn that they will faithfully perform their duties, and report correctly what transpires here, whether some one, after they have done that work, can manipulate the RECORD to suit himself.

Mr. COX, of New York. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky will indicate to the Chair what motion he desires to make.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. The motion I make is that the official notes of the reporter shall be produced and read at the Clerk's desk as taken down on yesterday before being manipulated by some one.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that on being applied to yesterday by the Chief Official Reporter for advice as to whether or not the joint resolution which was read by the gentleman from Kentucky should be printed in the RECORD, the Chair advised him that the joint resolution did not properly belong there and ought not, therefore, to go into the RECORD as a part of the proceedings of the House.

The Chair does not know of any rule which would authorize or require the Official Reporter to insert everything that may be read, either on the floor of the House by a member himself, or from the desk by the Clerk, in the hearing of the House. Unanimous consent is frequently asked of the House to insert such matters in the RECORD, and the Chair knows of no other way in which they can get there under the rules of the House, except that it has been the practice of the House, the Chair thinks, to insert in full resolutions of inquiry addressed to the heads of the Executive Departments of the Government.

The gentleman from Kentucky moves to correct the RECORD, so as to insert in it what he read on yesterday from his seat on the floor of this House.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. That is not my motion at all, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's motion?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. My motion is that the official notes of the reporters, as taken down on yesterday by these sworn officers, and by the rules of the House the reporters are officers of the House just as much as the Speaker himself—I ask that the official notes of the reporter be read from the Clerk's desk, that the House, when it knows what actually occurred, may take such action in connection with this question as it may deem appropriate.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object, and demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that when objection is made they can not be read. It could only be done by unanimous consent. The Chair understands the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] and other gentlemen on the floor have made objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. COX, of New York. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that what the gentleman from Kentucky desires to have inserted forms any part of any proceeding now pending before the House. It does not present any question on which the House is required to vote; and no gentleman, as a matter of right, can demand that it shall be read. It could be done solely by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPRINGER. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of the roll on the passage of the District of Columbia appropriation bill. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I appeal from the decision of the Chair. I make this motion as a question of privilege, that I have a right to make.

Mr. COX, of New York. If there is anything appealable in the appeal, I move that it be laid upon the table.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I want to know whether the Official Reporters, who are sworn to report what I say here, are to be interfered with in the execution of that duty and their reports manipulated by the Speaker on his own responsibility.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that, under the practice of the House, the joint resolution offered by the gentleman from Kentucky on yesterday is not such part of the official record of the proceedings of the House as can be entered in full either upon the RECORD itself or upon the Journal of the House; and the Chair decides that the gentleman has now no right to demand, as a matter of right, the reading of the official notes of the reporters of what transpired on yesterday; from which decision the gentleman from Kentucky appeals.

Mr. COX, of New York. And I move that the appeal be laid on the table, if the decision is appealable.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I believe this is debatable. I desire to be heard.

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable. The motion to lie on the table is not debatable.

Mr. BEACH. Regular order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Then I call for the reading of what took place on yesterday in the House, so that the House may see whether or not the motion I present is in order. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to lay the appeal from the decision of the Chair upon the table.

The question being taken, the appeal was laid on the table.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the question on the passage of the bill (H. R. 8039) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, on which the previous question has been ordered. The rules of the House require that the yeas and nays should be taken on the passage of this bill.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 249, nays 4, not voting 70; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

Mr. WAIT. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names of members voting be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The following members were announced as paired on all political questions until further notice:

Mr. RANKIN with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. MORRISON with Mr. JOHNSON.

Mr. SHAW with Mr. LAIRD.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, with Mr. KELLOGG.

Mr. ARNOT with Mr. BELFORD.

Mr. FYAN with Mr. HOOPER.

Mr. DUNN with Mr. CHALMERS.

Mr. CARLETON with Mr. HART.

Mr. FIEDLER with Mr. ELLWOOD.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama, with Mr. BURLEIGH.

Mr. MULLER with Mr. HOWEY.

Mr. GREEN with Mr. BRUMM.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York, with Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota.

Mr. DAVIS, of Missouri, with Mr. KEAN.

Mr. ELLIOTT with Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. JORDAN with Mr. HITT.

Mr. BROADHEAD with Mr. BARR.

The following pairs were also announced:

Mr. SPRIGGS with Mr. ROWELL, for this day.

Mr. LE FEVRE with Mr. JOHN S. WISE, for this day.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, with Mr. CRAIG, for this day.

Mr. DIBBLE with Mr. HOLMES, on this vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. FOLLETT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FORNEY. I move to dispense with the morning hour, my object being to call up the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to call the attention of the House to the fact that six bills considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and reported from the Committee of the Whole on the 9th day of April last, are still unacted upon. I think those bills could be taken up and disposed of in a few minutes. I believe I am justified in saying so, because three bills of a similar character have already been acted upon by the House without a division, as I remember.

Mr. FORNEY. I think the Army appropriation bill will occupy but little time.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no diversity of opinion in the Committee on Appropriations on the subject of this bill; and I plead with the House to go on with its consideration. It is essential that this bill should go to the Senate at the earliest hour possible.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] moves to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman for that purpose as soon as the pending motion is disposed of. The question is on dispensing with the morning hour.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were ayes 101.

Before the negative vote was taken,

Mr. STOCKSLAGER said: I do not call for further count.

So (further count not being called for, and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the morning hour was dispensed with.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I offer a resolution, which I send to the desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it is unjust to the Official Reporters of the House for the Speaker to be allowed to revise their notes in accordance with his views of the rules or propriety.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this is not a question of privilege, because it states a mere abstraction and does not relate to any business now or heretofore before the House.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to call the attention of the Speaker to the clause at the top of page 369 of the Manual: "A resolution relating to the convenience of members and the comfort of employés of the House is a privileged question;" and certainly this relates very much to the convenience of members. [Laughter.]

I have sent to the Public Printing Office for the official manuscript copy of yesterday's proceedings. The Official Reporters of this House are paid more than $25,000 a year to perform their official duties. They are to report correctly what takes place on this floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I insist upon the point of order. This is not a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] insists upon his point of order. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire to submit any remarks upon the question of order?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to be heard.

The SPEAKER. Upon the question of order?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Upon the question of order.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman from Kentucky will proceed upon the question of order. The question is: Is this a matter of privilege?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. The rule clearly says, Mr. Speaker, that it is the duty of these officers of the House to report what takes place in the House as the proceedings of the House. They take an oath to perform that duty faithfully and well. I find, too, that Mr. McElhone, by a special rule, has been made the chief of the Official Reporters, and in this matter which I am about to bring to the attention of the House the reporter was Mr. McElhone himself—a man who reported a speech of Henry Clay one of the first times he was ever reported verbatim in this Capitol. The Official Reporter takes down and writes out what occurs here as the proceedings of this House. Then the reporter lays it before the Speaker, and the Speaker runs his pen through what displeases him. [Laughter.]

I say, sir, that this has a good deal to do with the convenience and comfort of members. If our constituents want to know what we are doing here they look at the RECORD.

Many a man has been condemned by making a bad record. But, sir, it is for each member to reckon with his constituents as his judges, and not with the Speaker as the judge of whether he has made a good record or a bad record. I am not afraid to stand before my constituents or my God, but I should be afraid to stand before the scrutiny of the Speaker. [Renewed laughter.] I thank my God that I am not responsible to this Democratic House for any convictions that I have of right or wrong, and still more that I am not responsible to their creature who has been made the Speaker of this House. [Hisses and other manifestations of disapproval.] I mean it in no disrespect to the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky will please confine himself to the question of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I insist that the rules of the House shall be enforced.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] insists that the rules of the House shall be enforced.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I do not yield the floor, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Then, if the gentleman from Kentucky holds the floor, he will confine himself to the question before the House—the question of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I think I am confining myself to that question.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I insist upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] makes the point of order that the gentleman from Kentucky has no right to proceed otherwise than in order, except with the consent of the House.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, if I understand this question of order, as it applies in this case, it is whether members on this floor representing free constituencies shall have a right under the rules of this House to have their remarks taken down correctly, verbatim et literatim, and reported in the broad light of the sun to their constituents and before the country, under the sworn obligation of these officers of the House, the Official Reporters.

Now, sir, here is what occurred on yesterday; and I bring it to the attention of the House and of the country—holding myself responsible to the country and to my constituents as much as to this House in its organization. On yesterday I offered a resolution——

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I insist upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] insists upon the point of order that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] must confine himself to the question of order before the House; and the Chair must insist that the gentleman from Kentucky shall either proceed in order or take his seat.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I am stating the facts upon which I propose to base what I desire to say in regard to the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The question is not a question of fact. It is a question as to whether or not the resolution offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] is a matter of privilege.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, if I am interrupted in this manner I shall appeal to the rules to show that I am clearly in order.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman will discuss the question of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. That is precisely what I am doing. But, as to a gentleman like the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], I can not hope to present the question in such a manner as to be acceptable to his extraordinary intellect. I am a finite being. [Laughter.] I am governed by ordinary usages, by the common-sense interpretation of what is a correct report of what has occurred upon this floor. But the gentleman from Illinois can weave fine theories about this business that are incomprehensible to me. I do not desire to make myself agreeable to him. I desire to speak on this question alone—to call attention to what occurred here yesterday, and to show that I have a right as a member on this floor to have what I say here correctly reported without anything being omitted or anything added to it. Now, sir, looking at the RECORD to-day it represents me as reading something on the floor yesterday; and yet not a word is given of what I read—not one word; and at the close of it it is said:

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be returned to the gentleman from Kentucky.

That is what the RECORD as it appears says; but if you take the sworn report of the officers of this House it shows what I did say.

Mr. SPRINGER. I insist on the question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky will understand that the only question before the House is the question of order made by the gentleman from Illinois whether this is or is not a matter of privilege—that is to say, whether the gentleman from Kentucky had a right to have printed in the RECORD the joint resolution which he read from his seat on yesterday. If the gentleman from Kentucky will confine himself to that question the Chair, of course, will be glad to hear him; but if not, the Chair will submit to the House the question whether it is a matter of privilege. Under the circumstances the Chair, while entertaining a very decided opinion on the question, would prefer not to decide it himself.

Mr. DORSHEIMER and others. Question!

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Kentucky has been called to order several times.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Kentucky must confine himself to the question of order, or must take his seat, or must proceed out of order with the consent of the House. The Chair has no discretion about the matter when the point of order is insisted upon.

Mr. COX, of New York. Has the gentleman from Kentucky subsided?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. No; I do not yield to the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky will proceed in order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I have read from the rules the theory on which I introduced the resolution. Members certainly have forgotten that there is a resolution before the House as a privileged resolution. Now, sir, if I am to be stopped by every member on this floor the minute I assert something that does not please his delicate ear, then I had as well stop.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Better.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I beg pardon; I did not hear the remark.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I suggested "better."

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. It is not for my colleague to say what I had "better" do.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No; I trust I am not responsible for anything that emanates from such a quarter.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. It does not rest with that side of the House represented by my colleague to tell me what I had "better" do.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I should waste my time in trying to play tutor in such a case.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Of course you would. [Laughter.] I agree with you.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. The gentleman from Kentucky will please confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the resolution which I have offered goes to the very bottom of the question whether anything that occurs on this floor shall be reported at all or not. We have the Journal. The Journal gives a synopsis of what occurs. That is sufficient unless we are going to have, in our record of debates, a correct report of what occurs here.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Question! Mr. Speaker, we ask that the question be put to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is still supposing that the gentleman from Kentucky proposes to show that there is some rule of the House which requires the matter read by him yesterday to be printed in the RECORD——

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. That is not the question.

The SPEAKER. That it has been improperly excluded from the RECORD; and that, therefore, this must be a matter of privilege.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair permit me a suggestion?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. REED. How is it possible for this House to decide whether certain things which were taken down by the Official Reporters have been improperly excluded when the House is not permitted to know what those things are which have been excluded? How is it possible for us to pass on the question if, upon the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, the gentleman from Kentucky is prevented from stating the facts which are the foundation of his complaint? He rises here under his privilege as a member and he asseverates that certain things which occurred on this floor, he being the actor, have been excluded from the RECORD; and the question now comes up before the House whether that was properly excluded from the RECORD, which is a statement of our transactions as they occur, in order and out of order. How is it possible for us to pass judgment on that question if the gentleman from Kentucky is not allowed to state the facts?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I do not yield the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky has stated the fact that on yesterday when the State of Kentucky was called for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions he introduced and read from his seat a joint resolution; and his complaint is that the joint resolution thus introduced and read was not entered at large in the records of the House.

Mr. REED rose.

The SPEAKER. Now it makes no difference what the gentleman's joint resolution was, whether it related to our foreign affairs or to our domestic affairs, the simple question is whether the reading of a bill or joint resolution by a member from his seat entitles it as a matter of right to be printed in the RECORD. The Chair decided that it did not.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That was ruled yesterday.

Mr. REED. As a part of his remarks.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman could not make the remarks when his bill was being introduced for reference. Under the rules of the House nothing is in order but to introduce a bill or joint resolution and have it referred to its proper committee.

Mr. REED. But he did make remarks, and they therefore became a part of the proceedings.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the gentleman from Kentucky complains that any remarks made by him were excluded from the RECORD, but merely that his joint resolution which he read does not appear.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. The Speaker decided that it was not a joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. It was determined afterward to be a joint resolution because the gentleman converted it into that form, and it was then read from the Clerk's desk as a joint resolution.

Mr. COX, of New York, rose.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the question be decided.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I do not yield the floor.

Mr. COX, of New York. I desire to be heard on the point of order. It is at the discretion of the Chair, as I understand it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is willing to hear the gentleman on the point of order if there be no objection.

Mr. COX, of New York. The Speaker has heard already two distinguished gentlemen on the other side of the House.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I do not yield the floor.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman then confine himself to the point of order?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I will if the gentlemen on the other side will only keep their seats. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the Chair to submit the point of order to the House.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair desires to do.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is a mere abstraction and does not state any case. It has not been considered heretofore as part of the business of the House during the morning hour on Monday. Is this to be prolonged for an hour?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will allow reasonable time for the discussion of the point of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, a resolution relating to the convenience of members and the comfort of the employés of the House is a privileged question. Now, sir, I can not imagine anything more uncomfortable to a member than to be misquoted or to have a part of what he says omitted—to leave the gist of what he says out. If the Speaker means nothing that is read under the call of the States shall be put in the RECORD, why, then, has he put the colloquy between myself and my colleague [Mr. BLACKBURN] into the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to understand the gentleman from Kentucky. He does not understand the gentleman has heretofore complained that anything he said was not properly, fully, and correctly reported in the RECORD, but that the joint resolution he offered was not printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I have not finished my remarks, and I hope I shall not be judged until I have said what I want to say. Now, if I get up on the floor here and begin to read something, the fact I rise and begin to read is put down in the RECORD. The fact that I speak is put down in the RECORD; the fact that a colloquy ensued between my distinguished colleague now soon to be a Senator and myself and the distinguished Speaker is put down in the RECORD as part of the proceedings of the House; and I say here I meant no disrespect to the Speaker when I said he was a creature of that side of the House. I simply meant to throw the responsibility on the Democratic party. [Laughter.]

I call the attention of the House to the RECORD as it is printed—to what the Speaker says in conclusion of this colloquy. These words were inadvertently omitted, referring to the heading or the style of the resolution, "Be it enacted," or "Be it resolved," &c. The Speaker finding they had been omitted says: "The resolution will be returned to the gentleman from Kentucky." Now, clearly nothing that I had said, nothing that had been read, was a joint resolution. The Speaker so decided. The reporters, feeling under their oath of office they must put down every thing that occurred, put down not only what I said but what Mr. BLACKBURN said, what Mr. Speaker CARLISLE said; not only that, but they recorded what I had read as part of my remarks because it could not have been anything but part of my remarks when the Speaker decided it was not a bill. Does to-day's RECORD report the proceedings? Clearly what I read was a part of the proceedings. If you say it was not in order, then all I said in reply to Mr. BLACKBURN or Mr. BLACKBURN said to me, or the Speaker to us both, was not in order and ought not to appear in the RECORD.

But the Speaker leaves all that he said in the RECORD, and with one sweep of his keen eye cuts out one-half of what I said. [Laughter.] Is that fair when we are both Kentuckians—native-born Kentuckians—my father a Whig, his father a Whig [great laughter]; my father a Union man and a slaveholder, his father a Union man and perhaps a slaveholder? Why this discrimination? [Laughter.]

Now, sir, in the course of my remarks on yesterday I said:

Whereas it has transpired that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the present Secretary of the Treasury have by unwarranted regulation assumed to extend the bonded period for distilled spirits for two hundred and eight days in direct violation of the action of the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses; and

Whereas the tobacco tax is an unnecessary burden upon the people, and is a fraud, useful only upon the statute-books for the purpose of the tobacco monopolists; and

Whereas the present system——

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman has no right to read what he is reading, when discussing a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman has a right to read as a part of his remarks.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I thank the Speaker.

And whereas the present system of internal-revenue taxation is far less beneficial to the people than useful to continue a highly protected and infernal industry, manipulated by unscrupulous capitalists who strive to corrupt Congresses and to control the Government in the interest of their monopoly of the whisky and tobacco trade—

Now, right there the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] said: "I rise to a parliamentary inquiry," and which had the effect of shutting me off until that question was disposed of. The RECORD shows what Mr. BLACKBURN said, and states my reply as well as what the Speaker said. All of this is faithfully recorded; but the RECORD, under the pen of the Speaker of this House, supervising what the sworn officers of the House had taken down, is entirely changed in other respects. His pen has been run through what he did not like to appear in the RECORD.

Again, sir, after some little colloquy had taken place on this subject, the Speaker says:

The gentleman from Kentucky will proceed to read his resolution.

Whereupon I read as follows:

And whereas there is no longer any guarantee that the laws in relation to internal revenue will be honestly executed, although $5,000,000 are annually appropriated for that purpose: Therefore,

Resolved, That all acts or parts of acts concerning the superintendence of the assessment or collection of any duty or tax imposed by any law providing internal revenue be, and the same are hereby, abolished from and after July 1, 1885.

The Speaker runs his pen through that, and in the very next line the RECORD shows the Speaker says:

The gentleman from Kentucky will send the resolution to the Clerk's desk.

Then the Speaker decided that the resolution was not in order under the call and returned it to me. I submit now to the House that, whether it was a bill or not, whether it was a resolution or not, under this call of the House it was a part of the proceedings of this House.

Suppose you say that what occurs in the House which is not strictly in order shall not appear in the RECORD. If you adopt such a rule, if you hold that principle and follow it out, then the RECORD will not contain one-twentieth part of what is published in it. Are you going to put in the RECORD only so much as is in order, and leave out all that is out of order?

If that be so, who is to judge? Is the Speaker to be the judge? Then you have a centralized government. [Laughter.] Does this country want a centralized government, with the Senate as composed, a majority of its Democratic Senators ex-confederates; with the House in control of the Democratic party, a majority of the Democrats ex-confederates, and are they to sit in judgment upon the House, and shall their Speaker sitting in that chair decide what is in order and what is out of order? If so, then save the $25,000 paid to these reporters. Save their manhood and their official integrity. Avoid what appears to the country to be falsehood and perjury. The Official Reporters swear to report the proceedings of this House accurately. They report what they think are the proceedings of this House, and your Speaker runs his pen through what he thinks is contrary to rule or propriety. Where shall we stop? It does not make so much difference to me. It does make a great deal of difference to the people. Let it go out that your RECORD is only what pleases the Speaker, not what actually occurred in debate, and where will you find anybody in this country that will believe any action that occurs in this Congress to be correctly stated by what is published in the RECORD?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. They do not believe much anyway about it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. That is all I desired to say, and I withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that it has not assumed any control over the RECORD whatever, either by the insertion of anything or by taking out anything that occurred in the House. But upon being applied to by the chief Official Reporter to know what might be properly printed in the RECORD, under the rules of the House, he advised that officer of the House yesterday, as he would do again under the same circumstances, that bills and joint resolutions introduced for reference, whether read by a member from his seat or read from the Clerk's desk, did not properly go at length into the RECORD; and that is the extent to which the Speaker went.

Mr. COX, of New York. I rise to a question of privilege. I move to strike out what has appeared in the RECORD, or will appear in the RECORD, of the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. It has not appeared in the RECORD.

Mr. COX, of New York. I make the motion for a purpose. I will be a little more candid than my friend from Kentucky. Evidently he never intended—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order, if it be a matter of privilege.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And it is a matter of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. If anything hereafter should be printed in the RECORD which ought not to be there, or anything should be omitted which ought to be there, the Chair would consider that that presented a question of privilege.

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentleman from Kentucky has kept the attention of the House for nearly an hour on that side and on this side with the public contempt apparently [laughter], and has made all sorts of allusions to the Speaker that were in bad taste and against the rules.

Mr. REED. If this debate is to go on I have no objection to the gentleman from New York proceeding; but I insist after he shall get through the debate shall not close. If that be the understanding I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. There is nothing before the House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let the understanding be as suggested by the gentleman from Maine, and let us declare this a holiday.

Mr. COX, of New York. My suggestion was that the remarks of the gentleman should be omitted from the RECORD. I wish to make one remark. The Speaker is too kind to the Kentucky people. A member of Congress may be like a crumb lodged in the throat, which gives no nourishment and makes a deal of trouble if it goes the wrong way.

The SPEAKER. The point is made that the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] is not a privileged one.

Mr. COX, of New York. Then I will debate the point of order.

Mr. BEACH. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether it is not a privileged question to control the Journals of this House. That is the motion of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The motion does not refer to the Journal of the House. It refers to the RECORD. The gentleman desires to make it as a privileged motion; but there has nothing appeared as yet in the RECORD which it is alleged is out of order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The motion of the gentleman from New York is to prevent that from appearing in the RECORD which is out of order.

The SPEAKER. Is that a privileged motion?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The point that the remarks were out of order is.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is made against the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] that it is not privileged; and the Chair thinks it is not a privileged motion.

Mr. COX, of New York. The Chair seeks to dispose of the motion and to go to business. All I have to say is this—— [Cries of "Regular order!"] If the regular order consists in debating the point of order I am regular.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] is on the floor and states he desires to discuss the point of order. The Chair is obliged to recognize any gentleman who states he desires to discuss a point of order. The Chair has intimated his opinion that a question of privilege is not presented. The gentleman from New York intimated that he appealed from the decision of the Chair and desired to discuss it.

Mr. REED. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from New York is discussing it.

Mr. VALENTINE. I want to know what is before the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York made a motion which he claimed was privileged. The Chair decided it was not privileged. Thereupon the gentleman from New York appealed from the decision of the Chair and took the floor to discuss it.

Mr. VALENTINE. We did not hear that. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has the floor, and while he is on the floor the gentleman from Nebraska can not get it to make that motion.

Mr. REED. Does the Chair say that the motion to lay the appeal on the table is not in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order while the gentleman from New York is on the floor.

Mr. REED. The motion was made at the proper time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York was on the floor and was interrupted by the disorder on the floor; and during that interruption the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] moved to lay the appeal on the table, the effect of which motion would be to take the gentleman off the floor. The gentleman from New York will proceed.

Mr. COX, of New York. I have reduced my motion to writing, so as to offer it in the proper form, and I will read it from my desk:

Resolved, That the remarks of Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, on the resolution which he submitted this morning, were delivered out of order, and that the Official Reporters be directed to omit them from the RECORD.

Mr. KEIFER. I make the point of order on that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The point of order has been made and sustained by the Chair, and the gentleman from New York appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER], who is an ex-Speaker of the House, will remember that we have control over our own proceedings, our own records, our own Journal, and that it is the duty of the Speaker, under the second rule, to preserve order and decorum. And I hold that the gentleman from Kentucky, who day after day rises here in his seat to make indecorum, can be more or less suppressed by the Chair by virtue of the power vested in the Chair.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I demand that the words of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] be taken down. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX, of New York. I withdraw the words. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] has nothing to do but to take his seat. I have demanded that his words be taken down. [Renewed laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] has the right to withdraw the words if he thinks proper, and he has done that.

Mr. COX, of New York. But, Mr. Speaker, I do not withdraw what I said a while ago, but what I do not think the House heard—which was this: that a member of Congress may be like a crumb in the throat, of which some French writer has said that when it goes the right way it gives no nutriment, and when it goes the wrong way it is very troublesome. [Laughter.] That is my friend from Kentucky. He is all the time making points upon the Speaker, whose ultimate good nature, whose Kentuckyism—whatever that may mean—allows the gentleman to run on without check, to the disadvantage of the public business and of the decorum of the House.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. What are we having now? The same thing over again.

Mr. COX, of New York. What is that? I thought at first it was the Doorkeeper. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a resolution can be adopted to suppress these remarks that come in indirectly, and that are, in a certain sense, lacking in candor, because after the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] had made his speech he withdrew his resolution, showing that he did not believe in his own proposition. I move the previous question on the adoption of my resolution. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] has appealed from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. COX, of New York. I withdraw the appeal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York withdraws his appeal; and the resolution is not before the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I demand the regular order.

Mr. FORNEY. I move that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

RESIGNATION OF A MEMBER.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Army appropriation bill. Before that question is put, the Chair will lay before the House a communication, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 26, 1885.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker House of Representatives:

I have this day notified the Governor of the State of Rhode Island that from and after this date I resign the office of Representative in the Forty-eighth Congress.

Very respectfully, &c.,

JONATHAN CHACE.

The SPEAKER. The communication will lie on the table.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. MILLS in the chair), and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8120) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the general Army appropriation bill.

Mr. FORNEY. I move that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to make any extended remarks, but I wish to state to the committee that this bill which is now under consideration appropriates for the next fiscal year $24,429,052.50; which is less by $25,000 than the amount appropriated in the bill of last year. Of this amount $12,215,000 is for paying the traveling and general expenses of the Army. There is an increase in that appropriation, because under this bill the paymaster is required to pay some employés of the Quartermaster's Department who have not heretofore been paid by him. The amount appropriated for the subsistence of the Army is the same as in the last Army bill, $1,900,000. For the regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department there is appropriated $2,771,000, which is less than the sum appropriated for that purpose in the bill for the current fiscal year. For incidental expenses of the Quartermaster's Department the amount appropriated in this bill is $690,000, which is some $15,000 more than the amount in the present bill.

We found that there would be a deficiency there, and we increased the amount. For transportation of the Army and its supplies there is appropriated here $3,125,000, the same as in the last bill. There are no material changes in the appropriations made in this bill from those made in the existing law. The only new legislation in the bill is found in the second section, which is to this effect:

SEC. 2. That when any cadet of the United States Military Academy has gone through all its classes and received a regular degree from the academic staff, he shall be considered a candidate for a commission in any corps for the duties of which he may be deemed competent. If there be no vacancy in such corps he may be attached to it by the President as an additional second lieutenant until a vacancy shall happen: Provided, That not more than one such officer shall be attached to any company at the same time.

This is recommended to us by the Military Committee of this House, and also by the Lieutenant-General. The class which is to graduate at West Point in 1886 will probably number between eighty and eighty-five, and the vacancies which occur annually in the Army are about seventy. The object of this is to provide for the remaining fifteen.

Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to say anything further. If my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER], desires to say anything, I will yield to him.

Mr. KEIFER. I shall occupy but a moment. This bill undertakes to appropriate the sums of money usually appropriated for carrying on the different departments of the Army. I think there is no omission, and the bill is generally framed in accordance with the recommendations of the heads of the several departments. In a few, and only a few, instances the appropriations have been cut down; but I know of no instances where the appropriations as reported in this bill are below what the chiefs of the respective departments think will be sufficient to carry on their departments through the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886.

There is very little new legislation in the bill. As the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] has stated, about the only new legislation is embraced in the second section on pages 15 and 16 of the bill. That provision is inserted in the language proposed by the Military Committee of this House. The Committee on Appropriations have adopted this provision exactly as the chairman and other members of the Committee on Military Affairs asked that it be adopted. I will say further that the provision has the approval in principle of the Secretary of War; and the very language found in the bill is approved by the General of the Army. The object of this section is simply to provide for cadets at West Point who might otherwise have to be dismissed after having gone through the Academy at very considerable expense to the Government.

This is not new legislation in the sense of being inserted in the law for the first time. It was the law for many years after the Military Academy was organized. Many general officers now in the Army, and many who have been in the Army, were originally attached to the Army as supernumeraries or second lieutenants, and were obliged to wait for the substantive rank, which came when a vacancy in fact occurred. General Grant, General Lee, and others thus went into the Army as supernumeraries.

This bill provides only for appointing cadets as supernumeraries where there are no vacancies to be filled; and it very rarely happens that there are not places for these military cadets. This year there will be no difficulty of that kind; and up to this time there has not been, so far as I am aware, any instance where cadets have had to be discharged. But it is anticipated—and this is the report we have from the Superintendent of the Military Academy and from the Secretary of War—that an unusually large number of cadets will graduate from West Point in 1886—a class exceeding in numbers any that has ever come out of that academy in a single year. In this bill we revive former legislation on this subject by complying with the recommendation which has been made to us.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman will allow me to inquire whether in the interest of the public service there is any necessity for the creation of these new positions; or is the object simply to make places for these graduating cadets?

Mr. KEIFER. I will try to answer that question. The public service, as we understand, requires the maintenance of the Military Academy. Existing law authorizes the President of the United States to make certain appointments of cadets to the academy. It also authorizes each member of this House and each Senator of the United States to nominate a cadet for appointment to the Military Academy, and to keep one there all the time. Now, we propose to provide that when these cadets graduate the Government shall have the benefit of their education by putting them in the Army.

It is supposed that in 1886 more cadets will graduate than there will be vacancies for; and to prevent, in the first place, the Government from losing the services of these young men whom it has educated, and also to avoid the injustice of discharging these young men after they have been graduated at West Point with the expectation of going into the Army, we propose to attach them as supernumeraries to companies in the Army, to await the occurrence of vacancies. Heretofore the vacancies as they have occurred have been more than enough to provide places for these cadets. But it seems that a specially good class will graduate in 1886. This class, by reason of the meritorious conduct and superior scholarship of its members, has kept fuller than any other class that has ever been at the academy. These young men we propose to take care of for the time being. It will only be necessary to maintain them as supernumeraries for a few weeks or months.

As I have said, we are simply reviving what was formerly the law, the change having been made shortly after the close of the war. When the law was changed it was supposed there would always occur in the Army a sufficient number of vacancies to provide for all the graduates of the Military Academy. I will only repeat, in conclusion, that this provision has been inserted in the bill upon the unanimous recommendation, as I understand, of the Military Committee of the House.

Mr. FORNEY. If no other gentleman desires to discuss this subject——

Mr. MCMILLIN rose.

Mr. FORNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with great interest to the very clear and terse statement of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] who is in charge of this Army appropriation bill, and to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER], to see if there was any sufficient excuse given for a change of law which increases the number of Army officers when there is no increase in the number of enlisted men, and have heard none.

Mr. KEIFER. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him——

Mr. MCMILLIN. With pleasure.

Mr. KEIFER. We do not propose to change the number of officers, but merely to provide temporarily that some of these cadets may be attached as supernumeraries when vacancies occur to which they can be appointed. It is not likely to occur except in the year 1886.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us see how that is. I read the language of the bill itself:

SEC. 2. That when any cadet of the United States Military Academy has gone through all its classes, and received a regular degree from the academic staff, he shall be considered a candidate for a commission in any corps for the duties of which he may be deemed competent. If there be no vacancy in such corps he may be attached to it by the President as an additional second lieutenant until a vacancy shall happen: Provided, That not more than one such officer shall be attached to any company at the same time.

If that does not increase the number of officers in charge of companies I am wholly unable to comprehend what it does mean.

Now, sir, I do not like to antagonize the opinion of those who have given special attention to this matter, but it does seem to me at this time of the top-heaviness of the Army, of superabundance of officers in proportion to the number of enlisted men, when we are reducing the age at which officers may be retired in order to make places for officers who are coming on, we can not well afford merely for the sake of giving appointments to create new offices. Is there any sudden exigency or permanent necessity demanding it? It will not, can not, be so claimed.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Certainly.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Then what are we to do with these cadets at West Point?

Mr. MCMILLIN. What are we to do with them?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I would do exactly what any sensible man would do in his own private business matters—what he would do in any of the private transactions of life—I would have all the officers necessary for the command of our troops, but I would never consent to create new offices merely for the purpose of giving easy places to those who, under the law, have not places now; no, never, sir. There is not a private business man on this continent who would do it. If any one did his creditors would press him immediately under the just belief he was not capable of taking care of his own affairs.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Let me ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have not yet answered the gentleman's first question; when I do he can ask me further, and I will answer him with much pleasure. When there are more officers graduating from West Point than the exigencies of the public service demand, I would do for the Military Academy exactly what this House and this Congress sensibly did for the Naval Academy—I would take those bearing the highest rank, those who were most fit, and appoint them, and allow the others who are unnecessary to go back into civil life.

Mr. BALLENTINE. You would never make a greater mistake in your life.

Mr. MCMILLIN. That may be. I am not speaking now as to the classes which were admitted to the academy or who were in the academy when the law was passed. But in the general conduct of the Army and Navy it seems to me correct that the Government needs only a certain number of officers, and that it is not wise to employ more than it does need. If you graduate more than the service demands—they have been educated, well educated, without cost to themselves—it is useless to say American citizens 23, 24, or 25 years old, with a good education given gratuitously, can not adapt themselves to the duties and responsibilities of American life.

Now, what is the condition of our Army to-day? There is something wrong; there is mismanagement somewhere. I have not been on the Military Committee, and I do not pretend to say what is the remedy; but within the last two years it has been reported by the Secretary of War that nearly one-third of our Army deserted in twelve short months. What is the matter? Who is to blame? Is it because we have superabundance of officers? There is trouble somewhere, and there is a good field for experiment and for change of present methods.

Now, this is a change of the law. It authorizes the appointment of officers not now authorized by law. Who is foolish enough to believe it will remedy any existing evil? No one!

Mr. STEELE. I understand the gentleman to say that the cadets who were in the Naval Academy ought not to have been legislated out?

Mr. MCMILLIN. That I do not adjudicate. I am not discussing that question. What I said was I did not pretend to express an opinion upon it. When that case comes up I will, however, have an opinion that will guide my action at that time. I will do what may seem to me just and proper.

Mr. STEELE. This only proposes to make places temporarily for those who went into the Military Academy with the understanding when they graduated they would go into the military service.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The law read by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER], which was repealed in 1878, and which it is now proposed to re-enact, was operative till 1882. In other words, the repealing act did not take effect till 1882. So every cadet in the academy in 1878 took his rank under the old law, and was not injured by the change. Of course, those entering the academy subsequently did so with knowledge of the new law, or are presumed to have known it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I quite agree with the gentleman from Indiana as to the propriety of reducing the number of cadets. But in the mean time, until that is done, I would not create any offices not needed merely to give the salary and the place to somebody.

Mr. STEELE. Let me disabuse the mind of the gentleman from Tennessee on one point. We have now about three times as many officers as are actually needed for the size of our Army.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. STEELE. And it is always understood that these officers are being instructed in military science and are keeping up with the advance of the military art in order to form a nucleus from which to make an army in case of necessity.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Would the gentleman, as a remedy for that evil, if it be an evil, where there are three times as many officers as are necessary, undertake to remedy it by increasing the number?

Mr. STEELE. I have tried time and time again to provide for many officers now on the roll of the Army by placing them on the retired-list, because they are broken down in the service, age has come upon them, and they are unable to perform the duties. Many of these men, worn out in the service, ought to be put on the retired-list, and, as I say, time and time again I have tried but without effect.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The trouble is the gentleman's remedy is a remedy which is worse than the evil complained of. But why did he not do this when he had an opportunity?

Mr. STEELE. Because I could not put it into execution. If I had the majority here I would have it done.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Well, the gentleman will not have a majority sufficient, I hope, to increase the retired-list for many days. He has not had it for some time, and is not likely to have it again.

Mr. STEELE. Does not the gentleman from Tennessee think that it would be a question of economy to place these officers on the retired-list at three-fourths of their salary, instead of paying them the whole amount?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Now the gentleman from Indiana announces a proposition which is as fallacious, with all due deference to him, as any other proposition that could well be made. He asks if it would not be better to give three-fourths salary to these officers than their full salary.

I would quite agree with him as to the truth of his proposition were it not for the fact that you place men in the positions that you have vacated by sending these officers to the retired-list, and consequently you not only pay the three-fourths salary of the retired-list, but you pay the full salary to the officers who take their places in addition.

Mr. STEELE. That could be readily provided against by the same bill which authorized the increase of the retired-list.

Mr. MCMILLIN. In my judgment, sir, the remedy is by diminishing the number of graduates at West Point. By diminishing the number admitted there or by making the academic term longer, as in the case of the Naval Academy, we might remedy the evil to some extent.

Mr. OATES. Why not repeal the law allowing appointments to be made from civil life?

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman from Alabama says why not repeal the law authorizing the employment from civil life.

Mr. OATES. I said appointments from civil life.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Well, the appointments. It might be done to some extent in that way. Certainly many remedies that might be suggested for diminishing the number of those appointed in the Army are better than that system of appointment which gives a redundancy of officers.

Mr. FORNEY rose.

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to have a few moments, since this discussion has arisen.

Mr. FORNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEIFER. I think the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee are made from the proper standpoint. But while he claims that our Army organization is too cumbrous at the present time, and that this tends to increase it, there is this to be said, that there is no proposition in this bill to permanently increase the Army.

Next year the graduating class at West Point, I am informed, will number about forty and the number of vacancies will probably exceed fifty. That year, as this, there will be a number of appointments made from non-commissioned officers, who are recommended under existing law for commissions, as well as appointments made from civil life. Now, the effect of this clause in the bill will be to keep certain graduating cadets, if that case arises, until vacancies occur, to which they can be appointed, instead of allowing the vacancies which occur from the commencement of one academic year to the other to be filled from civil life. As a matter of fact, taking the entire Army more than one-half of the commissioned officers of the Army are appointed and hold commissions from civil life.

The question is whether we shall in future allow the Army to be filled up by such appointments, and then have a case arise where we will discharge our graduating classes from the Military Academy. The provision incorporated in this bill has been prepared by the Military Committee of this House, and is simply to meet a case which is not likely to occur very frequently; and in that year there may be fewer appointments from civil life. That will be all the effect of it. The graduating cadets will hold along until vacancies occur, being attached temporarily by the provisions of this bill as additional second lieutenants. When vacancies occur by promotion, resignation, death, retirement, or from any other cause, then these cadets will be promoted to fill the places.

I am not in favor of changing the law as it stands with reference to the appointments of cadets, but if I were I would not undertake to do an injustice to these cadets at the academy. There is no injustice going to be done them this year. There will be plenty of vacancies this year and plenty for 1887, according to appearances. But it is likely there will be more cadets in 1886 than there will be places for at the time of their graduation in June.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will suggest, with the permission of the gentleman from Ohio, that that trouble will continue from the fact that with the increase of the number of members of this House there was under the law necessarily an increase permanently of the number of admissions to West Point; and hence in future there will be a greater number of graduations from West Point than in the past; and the thing the gentleman speaks of here as a temporary expedient will become a permanency.

Mr. KEIFER. It is likely that the classes at West Point and the number of graduates at West Point in future years will be increased a little in consequence of the increased number of cadets under existing law growing out of the fact of the increase of the number of members of this House; and the increase of the population makes it perhaps necessary that we should increase the military establishment.

But the gentleman seems to treat this as though it is some innovation. Now, section 1213 of the Revised Statutes, which was in force, I believe, from 1812 to 1878, was in substance the provision that is proposed to be put in this bill. I will read it:

SEC. 1213. When any cadet of the United States Military Academy has gone through all its classes and received a regular degree from the academical staff, he shall be considered a candidate for a commission in any corps for whose duties he may be deemed competent. If there be no vacancy in such corps, he may, subject to the provisions of section 1215, be attached to it by the President, as a supernumerary officer, by brevet of second lieutenant until a vacancy shall happen.

This act was, as I have said, in force from 1812 until 1878, when it was changed, and I think inadvertently. I will furnish to the reporters a list of distinguished officers who were commissioned under that section of the statute, section 1213. This list has been furnished me of men who were distinguished either in the Union Army or in the confederate army, and it includes some of the most prominent officers on both sides. The following is the memorandum:

Memorandum of names of some of the graduates of the Military Academy who have been temporarily attached to the Army as brevet or additional second lieutenants, and the time which elapsed before vacancies occurred:

General Burnside, three months.
General Gibbon, three months.
General Gillmore, four years.
General Grant, two years.
General Hancock, two years.
General J. B. Hood, one year eight months.
General Howard, seven months.
General Ingalls, two years.
General McFeely, two years.
General McClellan, nine months.
General A. A. Humphreys, one day.
General Keyes, one year two months.
General Meade, five months.
General Mansfield, one day.
General McPherson, one year five months.
General J. F. Reynolds, four months.
General Rosecrans, nine months.
General Sacket, one year.
General C. P. Stone, one year eight months.
General J. E. B. Stuart, four months.
General G. K. Warren, four years two months.
General A. S. Webb, three months.
General Weitzel, one year.
General Comstock, two months.
General A. S. Johnston, one day.
General R. E. Lee, one day.
General J. E. Johnston, one day.

I do not wish the House to fall into any wrong impression about it. This is not intended as a restriction on the power of the President to make appointments. It is for the purpose merely of taking care of an exceptional class at West Point. And I should be very glad at some time, either now or hereafter, to hear upon it some of the gentlemen who are familiar with the subject, who have probably given more attention to it than the members of the Appropriations Committee. I mean the gentlemen who are on the Military Committee.

Mr. FORNEY. I ask unanimous consent that general debate be considered as closed, and that the bill be now read by paragraphs under the five-minute rule for amendment.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, and read the following paragraph:

PAY DEPARTMENT.—For pay of the Army: For one Lieutenant-General; three major-generals; fifteen brigadier-generals; twenty-three aids-de-camp, in addition to pay in the line; one military secretary, in addition to pay in the line; sixty-seven colonels; eighty-nine lieutenant-colonels; two hundred and thirty-four majors; three hundred and sixteen captains (mounted); three hundred and one captains (not mounted); thirty-four chaplains; thirteen storekeepers; forty adjutants; forty regimental quartermasters; adjutant and quartermaster of Engineer Battalion, in addition to pay in the line; two hundred and thirteen first lieutenants (mounted); three hundred and fifty first lieutenants (not mounted); one hundred and forty-five second lieutenants (mounted); three hundred second lieutenants (not mounted); one hundred and sixty acting commissaries of subsistence, in addition to pay in the line; and to one hundred lieutenants acting as assistant quartermasters, who are to receive at the rate of $100 per annum in addition to their pay in the line; additional pay to officer in charge of public buildings and grounds in Washington; additional pay to officer in command of the military prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, $1,000; additional pay to officers of foot regiments while on duty which requires them to be mounted; additional pay to officers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay; retired officers; for the payment of any such officers as may be in service, either upon the active or retired list, during the year ending June 30, 1886, in excess of the numbers for each class provided for in this act; enlisted men of all grades, not exceeding twenty-five thousand men; pay to enlisted men for length of service, payable with their current monthly pay; the allowances for travel, retained pay, clothing not drawn, and for interest on deposits payable to enlisted men on discharge; two retired ordnance-sergeants; for mileage of officers of the Army for travel, over shortest usually traveled routes, not to exceed $160,000; for miscellaneous expenses, to wit: Hire of not exceeding seventy-five contract surgeons and one hundred and sixty hospital-matrons; extra-duty pay to enlisted men for service in hospitals, and for general-service clerks and messengers at Army, division, department, and district headquarters, and at the headquarters of the general recruiting service, also at recruiting depots and at West Point, N. Y.; pay of forty-nine paymasters' clerks, at the rate of $1,400 each per annum, and fourteen veterinary surgeons; hire of paymasters' messengers, not to exceed $15,000; eighty post quartermaster-sergeants; cost of telegrams on official business received and sent by officers of the Army; compensation of citizen clerks and witnesses attending upon courts-martial, military commissions, and courts of inquiry; for reimbursement of traveling expenses of paymasters' clerks actually paid by them; and for commutation of quarters to commissioned officers on duty without troops at places where there are no public quarters; in all, $12,215,000.

Mr. McCOMAS. I desire to offer an amendment to come in after the word "Army" in the first line of the paragraph.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to make a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana desires to make a point of order. That point of order will be entertained before the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS] is recognized to offer his amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. In lines 56 and 57 in this paragraph are the words "and to one hundred lieutenants acting as assistant quartermasters." Those words are an interpolation in the present law, and therefore I presume are subject to the point of order that this is new legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. There are three lines there to which the point of order applies.

Mr. HOLMAN. The following words: "who are to receive at the rate of $100 per annum in addition to their pay in the line," are connected, as I understand, with the preceding portion of the paragraph.

Mr. FORNEY. Oh, no! they are not.

Mr. HOLMAN. The whole clause reads thus:

Three hundred second lieutenants (not mounted); one hundred and sixty acting commissaries of subsistence, in addition to pay in the line.

Now, omitting the words I have called attention to, it goes on:

Who are to receive at the rate of $100 per annum in addition to their pay in the line.

The words to be omitted to which I make the point of order are:

And to one hundred lieutenants acting as assistant quartermasters.

That is a new provision of law, and is subject to the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order on lines 56, 57, and 58.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does my friend from Pennsylvania say that the other words, "three hundred second lieutenants (not mounted); one hundred and sixty acting commissaries of subsistence in addition to pay in the line," are not in the present law?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not say that; nor do I make the point of order against them. I merely make it against the one hundred lieutenants acting as assistant quartermasters; the point being that there is no law providing they shall get extra pay. I think it wrong in principle that officers of the Army should for any kind of duty they are called to perform receive extra pay. There is no law, so far as quartermasters are concerned, that gives them additional pay.

Mr. McMILLIN. And it increases the expenditure $10,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; it increases the expenditure $10,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is correct as to the subsequent words, "who are to receive at the rate of $100 per annum in addition to their pay in the line." I thought, on a hasty reading, that those words belonged to the preceding portion of the paragraph; but now it is manifest the words covered by the point of order are the following:

And to one hundred lieutenants acting as assistant quartermasters who are to receive at the rate of $100 per annum in addition to their pay in the line.

Those are the words on which the point of order is made as constituting new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that the point made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] embraces the same matter as the point made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]?

Mr. HOLMAN. It embraces the same matter.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to understand the full extent and application of this point. I wish to know whether it includes any more than lines 56, 57, and 58.

Mr. FORNEY. I understand that it includes those three lines.

Mr. KEIFER. Only those?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; it covers only lines 56, 57, and 58.

Mr. KEIFER. I regret, Mr. Chairman, that gentlemen make the point of order against those three lines. There may be some doubt about the propriety of it. This is a bill to provide for the Army. There is no statute, I believe, that gives these officers pay at the rate named in this bill, but the provision is in harmony with what immediately precedes it, where one hundred and sixty acting commissaries of subsistence are given pay at the same rate. They certainly have less duties to perform and less responsibility than the officers provided for in these lines against which the point of order is made.

Mr. HOLMAN. But their pay is provided for by law.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand that the extra pay for acting commissaries of subsistence, in addition to the pay of the line, is provided for by law; but this is a provision to pay officers for duty that they are required to perform outside of the ordinary duties belonging to their office. Any officer of the line at a post may be detailed to perform the duties of a quartermaster.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] to say that there is no existing law which authorizes this extra pay to these officers?

Mr. KEIFER. I believe there is no existing law that authorizes pay at this rate; but I say that this provision is to pay these officers for a duty that they are required to perform outside of their regular duties, and I am sorry that gentlemen have made this point of order, because these officers certainly perform duties as great, if not greater, than those performed by the acting commissaries of subsistence, and they have more responsibility. For these reasons I think there is great injustice in allowing pay to one class of officers for these extra duties and denying it to another class.

Mr. HOLMAN. It may be true, Mr. Chairman, that some classes of officers are paid too much, but that certainly furnishes no argument in favor of an improper allowance of pay to others.

The CHAIRMAN. As it is admitted that this provision changes existing law, and as it does not affirmatively appear that it retrenches expenditures, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a further point of order on the provision beginning in line 59 and ending with the word "Washington" in line 60—"additional pay to officer in charge of public buildings and grounds in Washington." I should like to know whether there is any law that authorizes extra pay to officers in charge of the public buildings and grounds here.

Mr. FORNEY. There is. If there is no law, then this officer will not get any pay.

Mr. KEIFER. I call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] to the fact that this provision does not undertake to fix the pay of this officer, but only appropriates the pay that is provided by law.

Mr. FORNEY. I think the provision for the extra pay of this officer will be found in the Statutes at Large, volume 17, page 535. I wish to make a formal amendment in line 95, at the end of the paragraph. The amount appropriated having been reduced $10,000, I wish to have the total changed so as to read "$12,205,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, so the amendment will be made.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Army," in line 41, insert the following:
"For one General, and the President of the United States is hereby authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint on the retired-list of the Army of the United States, from among those who have been Generals commanding the armies of the United States or generals-in-chief of said Army, one person with the rank and full pay of such General or general-in-chief, as the case may be; and the total number now allowed by law to compose said retired-list shall be, on such appointment, increased accordingly."

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that amendment

Mr. McCOMAS. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will not insist upon the point of order, when he considers the character of this amendment and the little opportunity there is to do an act of justice.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] desire to hear the gentleman from Maryland on the point of order?

Mr. FORNEY. I desire to reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order that the gentleman from Alabama makes?

Mr. FORNEY. The point is that the amendment changes the existing law and increases expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. McCOMAS. If the gentleman from Alabama insists upon the point of order, I do not desire to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SUMNER, of California. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 89, after the word "Army," insert the following:
"Provided, That the cost of such telegrams shall not exceed the amount fixed and paid by the Government under contract for telegrams composed of a similar number of words, exclusive of address and signature, officially sent to and from the Signal Service stations of the United States."

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I shall make a point of order on that amendment, but I am willing to hear the gentleman state the necessity for it.

Mr. SUMNER, of California. Mr. Chairman, I am obliged to the gentleman from Ohio for his gracious indulgence. But I really did not suppose that there would be any objection whatever to this proposed amendment. Certainly if it have any effect at all, if it has not been anticipated by an existing agreement, it is in the line of economy, and I do not see how it can be considered obnoxious to the rule against new legislation.

Mr. KEIFER. I want to find out what the amendment of the gentleman from California is designed to meet.

Mr. SUMNER, of California. It was stated in the public press last fall—and I supposed that it was a well-understood fact—that a contract had been entered into by the Department embracing the Signal Service whereby the rates for telegraphic dispatches in that service, inclusive of all official correspondence by telegraph, were established in conformity with the tariff prescribed in the general, contract-job postal-telegraph bills of the Senate and House Post-Office Committees, reported at the last session of Congress, which contract, it was claimed, effected a reduction of about 30 per cent. from the former aggregate cost. If that be so, certainly the Government should not pay any more for telegraphic dispatches between these military officers, whose incidental or contingent expenses are provided for in this bill, than is required as payment for the transmission of official dispatches of similar length between officers and soldiers and any persons to whom they report in the Signal Service. Indeed, if that is not the case already, the same limitation should be put upon the payments for any and all communications by telegraph where the authorities or servants of the Government are in official correspondence. The announcement was, that advised by the action of the committees of the two Houses of Congress the contract referred to was framed; and there was no hesitation on the part of the telegraph monopolists—which for the time being are ostensibly divided under two or more company organizations—about agreeing to it. Why should there have been, when the rates so allowed and paid by the Government, although the reduction was said to be considerable, are still far in excess of what they reasonably should be?

It may be mentioned incidentally, Mr. Chairman, that in the Territories and in some of the States bordering upon Territories fully 15 per cent. of the telegraphic dispatches are transmitted over existing military lines and lines on routes where the original construction was by the Government direct, or with the aid of national and State subsidies, and on which watch is kept and repairs have been and are being made by men enlisted or otherwise employed in the Army. This fact furnishes one among many additional reasons why it is proper to insert the proposed amendment restricting this expenditure.

It may be imagined that this item of expense has not been very large. It is generally covered—I might say concealed—in the Book of Estimates by an enumeration of many other items in the same paragraph, against which a grand total is set down. But it is by no means insignificant. A company that pays its skilled employés less than one-half the amount that Government employés doing the same work are receiving, and confessedly ought to receive—whose labor, by the way, is in good part and inevitably performed to the profit of the telegraph monopoly in the transmission or in the receipt of telegrams on Government and other business—ought not to be paid by the Government any more than the very liberal rates, far too large according to my judgment, named in the sections reported by the Senate and House committees, to which I have alluded.

This amendatory provision is also calculated to have a moral effect, so to speak, as a declaration from this Congress bearing on the extortionate charges of the Western Union Telegraph monopoly for commercial or private dispatches.

Mr. KEIFER. I think this amendment is subject to a point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the gentleman from Ohio proceeds, I ask that the amendment be again read.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order raised by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER]?

Mr. KEIFER. My point of order is that this is new legislation and it does not appear that it will retrench expenditures. A reduction of expense does not necessarily follow. I understand that the Government has a contract by which the Western Union Telegraph Company sends messages at a given rate for all these public officers and Departments. That contract exists now. Whether the rates under that contract are above or below those embraced in the contract with reference to telegrams for the Signal Service I am not able to state. I do not know whether the gentleman who offers this amendment is able to state how the fact is in that respect. It seems to me the amendment is subject to the point of order. Besides, I do not think it is a wise amendment at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not see how this provision changes existing law. But even if it does it simply places a limitation upon the amount to be paid under this appropriation, which by the terms of the amendment is not to exceed the amount now paid by the Government for like service. The Chair therefore rules that the amendment is in order.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, it was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally, and Mr. TOWNSHEND took the chair as Speaker pro tempore:

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 7871) to remove the political disabilities of W. H. Ward, of Virginia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1291) to quiet and confirm the title to certain lands in the Saginaw Bay in the State of Michigan;

A bill (S. 2551) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes;"

A bill (S. 2577) to authorize the printing of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Henry B. Anthony;

Joint resolution (S. R. 109) authorizing the loan of certain flags and bunting to the committee on inauguration ceremonies; and Joint resolution (S. R. 114) to provide for printing the annual reports of the Smithsonian Institution.

The message further announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the annual report of the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum for the year 1884 be printed, and that there be printed 16,060 extra copies; of which 3,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, and 6,060 for the House of Representatives, and 7,000 for the Smithsonian Institution.

The message also announced that the Senate insisted on its disagreement to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 729) for the protection of children in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. RIDDLEBERGER, Mr. PIKE, and Mr. BROWN.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union resumed its session.

Mr. THOMAS. I move to amend by striking out, in lines 59 and 60, the words "additional pay to officers in charge of public buildings and grounds in Washington."

Mr. Chairman, I will briefly state my reasons for offering this amendment. Attention has recently been called to the fact that an officer of the United States Army has been engaged in superintending the construction of one of the public buildings within this city; that he filed a claim for additional compensation on account of such service; that he appealed to the Court of Claims, and was allowed $10 a day extra pay. Now, I submit that the work of superintending public buildings and grounds in the city of Washington is not more hazardous or onerous than the duty of fighting battles or carrying on campaigns against the Indians on the frontier. I see no just grounds upon which this additional compensation is allowed. I am not a member of the Committee on Appropriations, but the instance I have mentioned illustrated so pointedly the injustice being done in this way to other officers engaged in equally meritorious duty that I felt the question ought to be presented to the House.

Mr. FORNEY. The law for the payment of this extra compensation has been in existence since 1873. Under it the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds in this city has been paid $1,000 a year in addition to his pay as an officer of the Army—on the theory, I presume, that his expenses are greater here than they would be if he were with the Army. We have reported this appropriation in pursuance of law.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. THOMAS, there were—ayes 37, noes 26.

Mr. FORNEY. I call for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having voted, tellers are ordered; and the Chair appoints the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 39, noes 64.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I move to amend by striking out, in line 95, the word "twelve" and inserting "ten," so as to make the aggregate appropriation for the pay of the Army $10,215,000.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not understand the gentleman's motion.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I move to strike out "twelve" and insert "ten" in line 95.

Mr. Chairman, by the terms of the bill before us the enlisted men of the Army are kept down to 25,000, and it is well known that the military force is not kept up to 25,000 men. The regiments are almost never full. This section of the bill calls for $12,215,000 for the pay of the Army alone. Now I will ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] having the bill in charge to state to the committee, if he can do so, the proportion of this $12,215,000 which goes to pay the officers of the Army, and how much or what proportion to pay the enlisted men?

Mr. FORNEY. If the gentleman from Ohio would put himself to the trouble of referring to page 90 of the Book of Estimates for 1885 and 1886, he will find everything stated in detail: "one lieutenant-general, three major-generals, fifteen brigadier-generals," and so on.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I understand that, but I thought perhaps you had the total.

Mr. FORNEY. The amount we appropriate here is merely what the law authorizes to be paid to them. It is supposed to be $12,500,000. Last year, 1884, $11,700,000 was actually paid out. If you strike out "twelve" and put in "ten" there will of course be a deficiency.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I presume the appropriation is only what the law calls for. If I am right, much the larger part of this $12,215,000 is required to pay the officers of the Army, and I call attention to this here because of its bearing on the final paragraph of the bill.

Now, let us see. This bill appropriates pay for sixty-seven colonels.

Mr. FORNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Now, there are only twenty-five regiments.

Mr. FORNEY. Twenty-five regiments of infantry, ten regiments of cavalry, and so many regiments of artillery.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. But in all, only 25,000 men.

Mr. FORNEY. That is all.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Enlisted men; and we pay them $2,738,140. Eighty-nine lieutenant-colonels, two hundred and thirty-four majors—more officers of this rank than any other army in the world four times the size of ours has.

Mr. FORNEY. The gentleman must not appeal to the Appropriations Committee in that regard, but for his remedy he must turn to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I understand that, and I am only calling attention to this now with a view, I say, to its bearing upon the final paragraph of the bill. I doubt not the Committee on Appropriations have included in the bill only appropriations to pay those entitled according to the law as here given.

Mr. ROSECRANS. If the gentleman will allow me a moment——

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I am merely calling attention to the character of the organization of our Army as it now exists, and to its top-heaviness as to officers in proportion to enlisted men.

Mr. STEELE. Somebody has done it every session, and everybody knows it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And it will do no harm to do it again.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it appears from this bill that the average cost per man, or rather the average pay per man, in the military service of the United States is between $500 and $600. Now the entire cost per man for maintaining——

Mr. WOLFORD. Allow me.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I have only a moment. The average cost of maintaining the army of England is but a little over $200 per man; of the army of Germany considerably less than $200, and of the army of France less than $200.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. DUNHAM. Are you in favor of European-paid labor?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I hope some gentleman will yield me his time.

Mr. HENLEY. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The gentleman from Illinois asks me if I am in favor of well-paid labor.

Mr. DUNHAM. No; of European-paid labor.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Ah! I am in favor of well-paid labor; and let me call the attention of the committee to this fact; that by increasing the pay——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from California yields his time to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. HENLEY. I do.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That by increasing the pay of the official staff of the Army——

Mr. WOLFORD rose.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let me answer the question first. Every increase of the cost of the Army takes so much from the earnings of another class of people—the laboring classes of the country, who on the average get less than $350 per annum.

Mr. DUNHAM. I understand you to compare——

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I only want to show that the average pay per man of our Army is three times the entire cost per man of other armies, and that a large part of this is for officers; that is all.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is not that general all over this country as compared to Europe?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. No; it is entirely out of proportion to the pay or earnings of other classes of people in the country. I do not refer to enlisted men.

Mr. STEELE. Does not the gentleman from Ohio take pride in our having the best paid Army in the world?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. But you must remember somebody has the Army to pay, and those in the end must pay it who earn on an average less than $350 per annum. You can not increase the cost of the military service without taking so much from another class. If one class gets more another class must take less, and in the end it must come out of the pockets of those who are the producers of all wealth. I will now yield for a question to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. STEELE. We had better begin cutting down salaries at home. Let us begin with our own.

Mr. WOLFORD. Now, will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Yes, sir.

Mr. WOLFORD. I want to understand first whether the gentleman from Ohio wants to receive the services of these officers without pay?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. By no means. I am not even arguing now for a reduction of salaries.

Mr. WOLFORD. Wait until I get through.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I can not yield if that is the question the gentleman wants to ask. I am not arguing on that point at all, but I am trying to show that as our Army is organized we have now more officers than there is any need of, supernumeraries drawing large pay, and for that reason, in my judgment, section 2 of the bill which has been spoken of ought not to be adopted. It is against more supernumeraries, and the large list of civil employés, and the expense of maintaining so large an official corps that I am arguing, and not against the military force of the country. It is here that the great cost of our Army comes in—in the staff organization, the supernumeraries, the enormous civil-list, and the show and paraphernalia of the Army, and not in the pay or cost of the rank and file, the fighting men of the Army.

Mr. DUNHAM. How would you avoid paying these officers who are in the regular Army?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I am not proposing to avoid paying them, but am simply trying to show that we have no need of increasing the number of our officers so rapidly as some gentlemen seem to think necessary. One gentleman, for instance, has announced himself in favor of retiring officers at an earlier age, the age of 40, I believe, and then increasing the number of cadets at the Military Academy. Retire officers earlier and let them in faster. First increase the number admitted, and then retire them earlier. That would no doubt be an effective way to multiply officers, but I am opposed to it.

Mr. ROSECRANS. Mr. Chairman, I take it for granted that the honorable gentleman from Ohio desires to waste unnecessarily no time of this committee. But it seems to me that he is producing an impression on the minds of the House that there is something definitely and clearly wrong in what he calls the top-heaviness of our Army. He talks about two hundred and thirty-five majors and only twenty-five regiments. Why, sir, the gentleman has not taken into consideration at all the organization of the Army. He has not paid any attention whatever to its organization. There are twenty-five regiments of infantry alone. In addition to that the gentleman seems to forget that we have an organized staff composed of paymasters, a medical corps, an engineer and ordnance corps, besides quartermasters and commissaries. Now, all of these officers have rank and some have office.

The gentleman forgets to inform the House, or call the attention of the members of this committee who are not acquainted with the military organization of our Army so fully perhaps as he is, that there has been a provision made whereby for military service (certain years of time in certain service) promotion follows as a matter of right to rank and pay where the office itself does not attach. To this he evidently alluded when he spoke of the multiplied number of field officers in proportion to regiments, for we have this additional number of field officers having rank but not attached to office; rank which disappears when the individual holding it dies, and rank to which pay is attached, for the purpose of rewarding services, &c.

It is owing to the fact of the existence of this class of officers that we have apparently a top-heaviness in our Army organization. We have field-officers who have rank conferred upon them in the order of office, and in addition rank conferred upon them for lapse of time, for service. This, as I have said, creates this apparently disproportionately large number of field-officers to the regiments and to the number of men composing our Army organization. It is a necessary incident in the existence of an army. We retain a full complement of officers, staff and line, with a minimum number of men. Of course, when you come to speak of the average cost of the maintenance of our Army and compare it to the total expenditures of other armies in the world, dividing the total cost of our Army by the total number of persons maintained on the rolls, the average will go down per capita in proportion to the number of private soldiers enlisted. But it is no reproach to our system, and certainly none to the committee here, that they have reported a bill paying the Army as it stands under existing law; nor is there any such exaggeration, as the gentleman would have inferred from what he said, in the proportion of field-officers.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. But, Mr. Chairman, I ask the distinguished gentleman from California if it is not a fact that we have sixty-seven colonels, eighty-seven lieutenant-colonels, and two hundred and thirty-four majors to less than 25,000 men?

I agree that our staff organization is magnificent. It is the largest perhaps, or as large as the staff organization of any army in the world. But while that is true we have an organization of 25,000 men with the same expenditure for officers that some of the armies of Europe expend for an organization of 100,000 or 500,000 men.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to detain the committee at this point of this debate, but I am not willing that the impression made by the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio in regard to the expense of the maintenance of the American military establishment should go out without calling attention to the fact which makes the American establishment necessarily more expensive in proportion to numbers than that of other countries. It has been the policy of the American Government from time immemorial to maintain a skeleton army, an army of officers, I may say—that is, a large establishment of officers with the minimum number of enlisted men; and the only reason which makes the American establishment more expensive per capita than the European armies to which the gentleman from Ohio has referred is the fact that they maintain large standing armies, an enormous military establishment with a vast number of enlisted men, sometimes reaching into the hundreds of thousands.

Now, if the gentleman wants to reduce the per capita expense of the American military establishment he can do it by enlisting our Army up to the maximum of European armies in respect to enlisted men.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is it not the fact that with a standing army of 450,000 men the German organization is such as to admit right into it, without increasing the officers, enlisted men up to over a million?

Mr. CUTCHEON. And it is the policy of our Government to maintain an establishment of officers sufficient to enable us in case of a sudden emergency to increase our Army up almost to a half million of men without increasing the staff. We have a staff organization adequate to a large army; and we gain in economy by not enlisting our Army up to a number equivalent to the organization of its staff. Therefore, this system and policy adopted by our Government is one in the interests of economy and not against it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. But in time of war we find we increase the officers about as fast as the enlisted men.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For barracks and quarters for troops, store-houses for the safe-keeping of military stores, for offices, and for grounds for camp and summer cantonments, and for temporary buildings at frontier stations; for the construction of temporary buildings and stables and for repairing public buildings at established posts, $700,000: Provided, That hereafter no expenditure exceeding $500 shall be made upon any building or military post without the approval of the Secretary of War for the same, upon detailed estimates of the Quartermaster's Department; and the erection, construction, and repairs of all buildings and other public structures in the Quartermaster's Department shall, so far as may be practicable, be made by contract, after due legal advertisement: And provided further, That not more than $1,500,000 of the sums appropriated by this act shall be paid out for the services of civilian employés in the Quartermaster's Department, including those heretofore paid out of the funds appropriated for regular supplies, incidental expenses, barracks and quarters, Army transportation, clothing, and camp and garrison equipage; and that no employé paid therefrom shall receive as salary more than $150 per month, unless the same shall be specially fixed by law.

Mr. BEACH. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of line 269 the following:

"Provided further, That $14,000 of said sum shall be immediately available for construction at the Military Academy at West Point of sixteen sets of quarters for enlisted men and their families, to be built of brick in groups of four each, each set to contain four rooms and to be one-story high."

Mr. FORNEY. I make the point of order that the proposed amendment is a change of existing law, and is not in the interest of economy.

Mr. BEACH. I do not think the amendment is subject to the point of order. This bill appropriates $700,000 for barracks and quarters for troops. Now my amendment simply proposes to direct the manner in which a portion of this $700,000 shall be expended. I do not think it is subject to the point of order at all.

Mr. KEIFER. It does not retrench expenses.

Mr. BEACH. Here is a general appropriation of $700,000 for certain purposes. I suppose that this House has the right to direct the manner in which that money shall be expended, and that is all that the amendment does. It directs that a portion of the money shall be expended in the erection of this necessary building at the Military Academy at West Point. I will state I am not very familiar with the rules of the House. I have never made it my duty to study them. I have been more inclined to curse them than to study them, looking upon them as I do as an abomination and a nuisance.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the proposed amendment is a change of existing law. He knows of no existing law authorizing the construction of these barracks as provided for in the amendment. And as it changes existing law, to be in order it must on its face be a retrenchment of expenditure. That does not appear on the face of the amendment. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask leave to recur to line 170. I was absent from my seat when that portion of the bill was read.

Mr. FORNEY objected; but subsequently withdrew the objection to going back.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to going back to the point indicated? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The amendment I propose is to insert, after the word "interment," in line 170, the words "or transportation to place of residence;" making it read:

Expenses of the interment or transportation to place of residence of officers killed in action, or who die when on duty in the field, &c.

So that it will provide if an officer die in the field or in the line of duty, his remains may be transported by the Quartermaster's Department to the place of residence. If an officer be mustered out while on duty in the field, he is entitled to have his expenses of travel paid to his home. It seems to me a matter of similar justice that if an officer should die or be killed while in the line of duty in the field, his remains should have the same transportation.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Suppose a private soldier dies in the field, what becomes of his remains?

Mr. FORNEY. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is too late in making the point of order. The Chair asked if there was objection to going back, and it was waived. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON].

The amendment was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Several messages, in writing, from the President of the United States, were communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.—For purchase of medical and hospital supplies, expenses of purveying depots, pay of employés, medical care and treatment of officers and enlisted men of the Army on duty at posts and stations for which no other provision is made, advertising, and other miscellaneous expenses of the Medical Department, $225,000. And not over $36,000 of the money appropriated by this paragraph shall be applied to the payment of civilian employés in the Medical Department.

Mr. STEELE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Department," in line 297, add the following:
Provided, That section 4787 of the Revised Statutes, line 15, page 930, shall be so amended as to read "every three years," instead of "every five years."

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] that it changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures. I will reserve the point, however, and hear what the gentleman from Indiana has to say.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, there is very little to be said on this subject. The section of the Revised Statutes the amendment refers to gives to every soldier of the war who lost a limb a new limb every five years. There is evidence within the knowledge of almost every member of this House, and it has been demonstrated, that new limbs are required by a great many of these soldiers every year, and that every soldier who has lost a limb requires a new one oftener than once in five years. My amendment simply proposes to give these men new limbs every three years, instead of every five years. I hope there will be no objection to the amendment, and that no point of order will be made against a measure so equitable as this. I understand that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] has reserved his point of order, and I hope he will not make it against this amendment.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I prefer that the object should be attained in a different way. We can not have the matter investigated as it should be here in the Committee of the Whole. Let some proper committee of the House inquire into it and make a recommendation on the subject.

Mr. STEELE. It is simply a proposition to strike out "five" and substitute "three."

Mr. MCMILLIN. I understand that there is no suggestion or recommendation of this change from the War Department, or from any committee of the House.

Mr. STEELE. Will not the gentleman withdraw his point of order and let the House vote upon the amendment?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that before we consider the proposition it shall come before the House from the Committee on Military Affairs or from some proper quarter.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made, the Chair will rule upon it. On the face of this proposition it changes existing law, and, according to the rulings that have been made heretofore by the occupants of the chair, such a proposition is out of order unless it appears affirmatively on its face to reduce expenditures. This amendment does not do that, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That when any cadet of the United States Military Academy has gone through all its classes, and received a regular degree from the academic staff, he shall be considered a candidate for a commission in any corps for the duties of which he may be deemed competent. If there be no vacancy in such corps, he may be attached to it by the President as an additional second lieutenant until a vacancy shall happen: Provided, That not more than one such officer shall be attached to any company at the same time.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the second section of the bill. It is new legislation, and it does not retrench expenditures. And, for the purpose of showing that it is in violation of existing law, I will read from the Statutes at Large the third section of the act approved June 11, 1878, which provides—

That from and after July 1, 1882, only such number of the graduates of the United States Military Academy in any one year shall be entitled to appointment as second lieutenants in the Army as are required to fill vacancies of that grade existing on the 1st day of July in each year; those entitled to appointment to said vacancies to be determined by the academic board on the basis of their standing in the graduating class; and hereafter no supernumerary officers shall be attached to any company or corps of the Army, and all graduates of the Military Academy who are not appointed to the Army under the provision of this act shall be discharged upon the graduation of their class.

Now, it will be seen, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment is in direct violation of the existing law which I have just read. It will not be claimed by any member of this committee that the amendment retrenches expenditures, and it is therefore obnoxious to the rule and must go out.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] give the Chair the date of the approval of the act from which he read?

Mr. MCMILLIN. June 11, 1878.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the statute from which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] has just read is the Military Academy appropriation bill passed June 11, 1878. One week after that time the Army bill passed, which contained provisions which seem to me to be a modification of this prior statute. Those provisions are as follows:

That hereafter all vacancies in the grade of second lieutenant shall be filled by appointments from the graduates of the Military Academy, so long as any such remain in the service unassigned; and any vacancies thereafter remaining shall be filled by promotion of meritorious non-commissioned officers of the Army, &c.: Provided, That all vacancies remaining after exhausting the two classes named may be filled by appointment of persons in civil life.

I am not familiar, sir, with the laws touching the organization of the Army, but I have been struck with the discrepancy between these two statutes, and I desire to bring it to the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee. If I may be permitted I would say that this last statute (which was approved June 18, 1878) does modify the law providing for appointments from civil life; and, as I am strongly opposed to such appointments, I believe that this provision of the bill before the committee is an important one, and that, therefore, even if a point of order may be made against it it should not be made.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, in response to what the gentleman from Illinois has just said I will trespass upon the time of the House only long enough to suggest that the only change that that makes in the preceding law (as I gather from the hasty reading of the act here) is, that where there are vacancies the President shall appoint from those who have been graduated, but the body of the act I have just read is not interfered with by the other, nor will any one who has compared the two acts insist that it is.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this second section of the bill is certainly subject to the point of order. It contains this provision:

If there be no vacancy in such corps he may be attached to it by the President as an additional second lieutenant until a vacancy shall happen.

That certainly is not the law now. It is new legislation. It does not retrench expenditures, and it is, therefore, subject to the point of order.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, under the law providing for the Military Academy these cadets after graduation are to be assigned to the Army. The pending paragraph of this bill simply provides a method by which this may be done. In the class of 1884 there were thirty-seven graduates. In the class of 1885 there will be thirty-nine graduates, not enough to fill the vacancies. In the class of 1886 there will probably be eighty graduating cadets. This increase results from the enlarged number of Representatives in this House. It may not be necessary that a single one of these graduates shall go upon the assigned list provided for in this bill; but if it should be so, we are only carrying out the law which provides that these graduates shall be assigned.

Besides, sir, it will be a matter of economy to the Government to retain in its service these men who have acquired a military education in the academy. It may save thousands of dollars in case of war. Every man knows that at the commencement of the late war the Government suffered more for want of experienced officers than from any other cause. Therefore I make the point that this provision would in all probability decrease expenses.

Mr. ROSECRANS. Mr. Chairman, I confess that, judging merely by the face of this provision, the point of order appears to be sound. But I wish to call attention to the fact that the law of 1878, which was read by the gentleman on the other side [Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois], was a modification of the old law concerning the appointment of graduates from West Point to positions in the Army. That old law, which was the rule for a great many years, will be found in section 1213 of the Revised Statutes. From the time of its enactment down to 1878 the carrying out of that provision never involved any material expense to the Government in maintaining surplus officers; generally speaking, there was a deficiency. It is true that about my time and previously there was a short period when, after the graduation of each class, there were more graduates entitled to be promoted than there were vacant positions. But it is curious to notice how rapidly these surplus officers were absorbed. I have in my hand a memorandum showing the facts in a number of these cases; and from the promptitude with which graduates of West Point were assigned to vacant positions in the Army, it would appear that the total expense to the Government from a temporary deficiency of positions for them must have been very slight indeed. It is obvious that no very large expenditure was involved in the change made by the act of 1878; and a return to that law will probably result in no serious increase of expense. There is nothing on the face of the provision to show that it will increase the expenses of the Government to any considerable degree.

I presume it may interest gentlemen here to observe how rapidly these men, who for a certain time were extras, were absorbed. According to the memorandum which I have before me, General Burnside served three months as a brevet second lieutenant under section 1213 of the Revised Statutes; General Gillmore four years; General Grant two years; General Hancock two years; General J. B. Hood one year and eight months; General Howard seven months; General Ingalls two years; General McClellan nine months; General A. A. Humphreys one day; General R. E. Lee one day; General J. E. Johnston one day. So they vary; some of them being assigned to vacancies almost immediately, and some waiting a little longer.

Now I wish to mention to the committee that of the class which will graduate in 1886 one member who was found deficient has been nominated for second lieutenant, to go into the Army ahead of his class. Under the operation of the present law, which the provision of this bill is designed to repeal, we are asked to take deficient officers. It is very doubtful whether there will be any economy in rejecting this provision. If we have poor "sticks" for officers we are bound to lose money. I do not think the extra expenditure is at all obvious.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But the point I make is that the retrenchment must be obvious. It is not a question whether the extra expenditure is obvious.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire to occupy just a moment on the point of order. I believe, Mr. Chairman, I am not mistaken in supposing (if I am, some gentleman can correct me) that under the present law, if these cadets elect to resign or are discharged under the provisions read by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN], they are entitled to a year's pay. I may be mistaken, but I think that is the fact. If so, then I apprehend the provision now pending would retrench expenses, because before a year could elapse most of these graduates must be absorbed into the service.

But further than that, I take the position that the provision is in the interest of economy—in the line of retrenchment of expenses. These young men are, at the expense of the Government, educated for a specific branch of the public service. If when their education is completed they are discharged from the service, there is a squandering of the entire amount of money expended upon their education. To retain them in the public service will be in the line of retrenchment of expenses—will be a matter of public economy.

Mr. Chairman, you have listened to the long list of the most eminent men this Military Academy has ever given to the public service, including the generals-in-chief upon both sides in the late controversy between the States. These men, but for this provision which was in our statutes from 1812 to 1878, would have been lost to the public military service. They would have retired to private life and become involved perhaps in civil pursuits. The same is true of the brilliant class we are now about to graduate. The United States has educated them at large expense; they are now ready for the public service; to send these men to civil life will be to lose the education the Government has conferred upon them; to retain them in the public service will be in the line of retrenchment and reform.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Unless the Chair is ready to rule I would like to be heard for a moment. By the reasoning of the gentleman from Michigan, having expended a given sum to educate a cadet at West Point, then if we do not continue him on the pay-roll the Government is losing money. On that point I wish to say that I do not believe the education received at West Point injures a young man or unfits him for the pursuits of civil life. If I did, I would be in favor of abolishing the academy altogether. But it can not be economy to retain a class of officers if they are not needed. After they have been educated, having spent a certain sum of money, it can not be economy to spend a further sum unnecessarily; and yet that is the point here. When their services are needed they can be commissioned.

This bill shows that there are now something like six hundred second lieutenants in the service for an army of 25,000 men. I submit that the cadet has no right even to ask because he has been educated at West Point Military Academy he should be retained in the public service during the rest of his life. I do not admit that for a moment. The Government gives him an education at its own expense. He is, to be sure, under obligation to serve the Government if the Government shall require it, but when the Government does not require it he can not claim it as a right that he shall be retained in service.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the question.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the statute does provide that graduates may receive $750 and be ineligible to reappointment after two years. These temporary appointments as supernumeraries of these cadets would all be exhausted by vacancies in one or two months. I have found the index of the statute but have not yet obtained the statute itself.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Even if the gentleman found the statute he would be stared in the face by the fact that they receive more.

Mr. STEELE. In a month perhaps these supernumeraries will all be taken up by vacancies.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] makes the point of order that the amendment changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures. It can hardly be regarded as an open question whether the amendment changes existing law or not, for the committee in reporting the bill so reported that fact. It is as follows:

Section 2 of the bill is new legislation, recommended by the Lieutenant-General of the Army and the Committee on Military Affairs of this House, and is as follows, &c.

Mr. STEELE. I make the point that it will reduce expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is now rendering his decision.

Mr. STEELE. They get mileage in addition to the $750.

The CHAIRMAN. It being admitted the amendment changes existing law, it must affirmatively appear on its face that it retrenches expenditures. Is there anything in the amendment that affirmatively shows the expenses of the Government will be less after the adoption of the amendment than it is under existing law? On the contrary, it provides for placing on the pay-roll certain officers whom the existing law discharges. If it be admitted they are to be discharged with a certain amount of pay—a thousand dollars or one year's pay—yet the change in the law the amendment provides places them permanently in the Army, and the expenditure is continued during the life of these officers. Under this view, as taken by the Chair, it has no doubt the amendment is liable to the point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee, and therefore it sustains the point of order and rules the paragraph out.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to offer another amendment.

Mr. FORNEY. I wish first to make some amendments. On page 14, line 313, I move to strike out the comma after "repairing" and after "surveying" and to insert it after "instruments;" so that it will read, "for repairing surveying and other instruments, accumulated in depot for want of means to repair, $2,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORNEY. On page 3, line 37, I move to strike out "non;" so that it will read "other than the pay of such commissioned officers."

Mr. STEELE. I move to insert the following:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That when any cadet of the United States Military Academy has gone through all its classes, and received a regular degree from the academic staff, he shall be considered a candidate for a commission in any corps for the duties of which he may be deemed competent. If there be no vacancy in such corps, he may be attached to it by the President as an additional second lieutenant until a vacancy shall happen sixty days after the date of assignments are made to fill vacancies each year.

Mr. KING. I make the point of order against that; it changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures.

Mr. STEELE. These assignments will all be made, in all probability, from what we can see from the Army Register, within sixty days. I am satisfied that within that time all or nearly all will be absorbed. It will save $750 to the Government which we have to pay and the transportation of these supernumerary cadets. If they are not all absorbed within the sixty days, then the few remaining—and I do not believe a single one would be left—but the few remaining, if any, would have to be paid the $750. I think on its face it does not decrease expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that this is substantially the same amendment that was ruled out on the point of order a moment ago, and sustains the point of order made against this.

Mr. KEIFER. I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as section 2 of the bill:

"That article 94 of section 1342 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and amended so as to read as follows:

"ARTICLE 94. Proceedings of trials shall be carried on during such hours as the court-martial shall determine."

Mr. MCMILLIN. I reserve the point of order on that. I have not the statutes before me.

Mr. KEIFER. I think the gentleman will not insist upon the point of order if he will hear an explanation.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will hear the gentleman, but reserve the point of order until I see the import of this proposed amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to give the courts-martial the right to sit at such times as the court may itself determine. Under existing law the military courts must meet between the hours of 8 and 3 o'clock. Ordinarily the courts can not assemble before 10 or 11, so that the time in which the business of the court can be transacted is limited between the time of meeting and the hour of 3 o'clock.

There is no reason or philosophy in this limitation. The theory upon which this sort of legislation grew up started two hundred years or more ago in Great Britain. First they limited the time at which courts-martial should close to 1 o'clock, that being the hour when English gentlemen went to their dinners; after which the presumption was that they were entirely unfitted to administer justice. [Laughter.] And the reason was given at the time the law was enacted that no gentleman of England was fit to sit after dinner to determine any judicial question.

A little later, I believe in 1689, in the reign of William and Mary, the ordinary time English gentlemen dined was changed from 1 o'clock to 3 o'clock, and so, in accordance with that change, they changed the law to extend the time when these courts-martial could sit from 1 to 3 o'clock, to conform to the time when gentlemen in England dined.

This was the law of England at the time of the Revolutionary war, when we adopted our Articles of War, and we adopted that limitation, and literally, from the law of England. We have continued that for more than one hundred years in this country, although the English people concluded that there was no longer any necessity to limit the time to 3 o'clock, and left the courts authority to sit entirely on their own motion.

Now, how does it operate? Here we have had a court-martial in the city of Washington meeting at 11 o'clock each day for a number of weeks. By the terms of the law they are compelled to adjourn at 3 o'clock, no matter what progress has been made in the case, no matter what reason may exist for continuing the sitting. Witnesses may be here from long distances that ought to be examined. They must go over. Now that this case is closed, so far as the introduction of evidence and hearing of argument is concerned, the court is still limited in the consideration of this important case to 3 o'clock, after which time they are unable to transact any business and must adjourn without authority to meet until after 8 o'clock on the next morning. And so the case goes on. It is very expensive to the Government to keep such a condition on the statute-book.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Ohio will yield to me for a moment I will state, that while this amendment is clearly subject to the point, I will not insist upon it.

Mr. KEIFER. The ninety-fourth article of war is as follows:

Proceedings of trials shall be carried on only between the hours of 8 in the morning and 3 in the afternoon, excepting in cases which in the opinion of the officer appointing the court require immediate example.

That discretion applies of course to a time of war, when there is a special necessity for an immediate hearing of a case. In time of peace the provision is not applicable. The provision I suggest will give the court discretion to sit at its own motion and convenience. My attention has been called to this matter by officers sitting upon the court-martial at this time in this city. They regard it as a great hardship and delay in the administration of justice because of this act.

I have a letter here from the judge-advocate of the court that is in session in this city, and if there is no objection I will have it printed in the RECORD, as it goes into the entire matter also which relates to the pay of these officers; and although it is not pertinent to this proposed amendment, I would only say in this connection that under the law as it stands these officers get no extra pay, although they are subjected to very great additional expense. This letter refers to both.

The letter referred to by Mr. KEIFER is as follows:

GENERAL COURT-MARTIAL ROOMS,
Ebbitt House, Washington, D. C., January 27, 1885.

MY DEAR SIR: In response to your inquiry of this date, I have the honor to state that the ninety-fourth article of war (section 1342, Revised Statutes) prescribes as follows:

"Proceedings of trials shall be carried on only between the hours of 8 in the morning and 3 in the afternoon, excepting in cases which, in the opinion of the officer appointing the court, require immediate example."

This limitation has come into our statutes from the British articles of war, in force in 1775, which our Continental Congress adopted for our Army.

It took its rise in the first mutiny act (first William and Mary, cap. 5) enacted by Parliament in 1689, in which, by section 10, such proceedings of trials could only be held "betweene the houres of 8 in the morning and 1 in the afternoon."

The reason of this was because 1 o'clock p. m. was the fashionable dining hour, and no English officer or private gentleman was expected to be sober after that hour.

Later, the fashionable dining hour became 3 o'clock during the reign of the earlier Georges, and the time for sessions of the court was extended to that hour.

The American Revolution came on when that was the hour, and our Congresses, down to and including the Revised Statutes of 1874, have continued to re-enact this curious obsolete law, wholly unaware of the implication it contains, while in the British service it has been abrogated.

The effect of this is apparent in the present trial of Judge Advocate-General D. G. Swaim.

Yesterday the court had to suspend its deliberations at 3 p. m. because a continuance a moment later would have rendered the proceedings illegal and void.

You can well understand the hindrance to business this occasions, and I could give you many remarkable illustrations.

The ninety-fourth article of war should therefore be repealed—

First. Because of its inutility and positive hindrance to the prompt administration of criminal justice in the Army.

Second. Because of its implication, from its origin, on the honor of officers of the Army.

In this connection permit me to ask that there be substituted a much-needed clause.

The high general court-martial of which I am judge-advocate was assembled here by the President of the United States on November 15, 1884.

Eight of us, coming from a distance, have in consequence each been taxed for the administration of justice from three and a half to five dollars per diem for our board. You can figure for yourself what this amounts to, because as gentlemen on temporary duty we could make no permanent arrangement, and therefore have to go to respectable hotels and pay the usual rates.

We all have our establishments at our permanent stations, and therefore can not claim the meager commutation of quarters now provided when quarters are not furnished at permanent stations.

When an officer now gets a detail on court-martial duty away from his post he looks with dread upon it, because he feels he is thereby taxed by the Government.

This, I submit, is all wrong, and I have known officers who became seriously embarrassed in their slender finances by such tax.

In all foreign services officers are granted an allowance per diem on this important duty, not as an emolument, but as a commuted reimbursement of actual expenses incurred.

General Washington always did so, and it was wholly a matter of army regulation under Generals Washington and Alexander Hamilton until 1799, when Congress provided a fixed compensation, so that a judge-advocate received $2.50 per diem.

Annually Congress made specific appropriation for this until 1872, when it was taken away by a Secretary of War.

The Second Comptroller over and over again held that it was only a commutation for actual extra expenses necessarily incurred, and not an emolument.

I have, therefore, the honor to suggest, in lieu of article 94, the following, viz:

"Officers of the Army assigned to general court-martial duty at stations other than their proper posts, and who shall not receive commutation of quarters at the place of such duty, shall be entitled to an allowance of $3 per diem while employed on said duty."

I trust this suggestion will be favorably considered, and have the honor to be,

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ASA BIRD GARDINER,
Judge-Advocate.

Hon. J. WARREN KEIFER,
House of Representatives.

The amendment of Mr. KEIFER was agreed to.

Mr. KEIFER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following as a new section:

"SEC. 3. That when officers of the Army are detached from their proper stations, by competent authority, for service as members of military courts, boards, or commissions, they shall receive the sum of $2.50 per day for and during the period of such service."

Mr. MCMILLIN. That is subject to the point of order.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I make the point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. Does the gentleman insist on the point of order?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Oh, yes.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] has heretofore objected to putting general legislation upon appropriation bills.

Mr. KEIFER. But it is the only place where we can get it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. KEIFER. If the point is insisted on I agree the amendment is subject to the point of order.

Mr. FORNEY. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MILLS reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8120) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. FORNEY. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments. If no separate vote be demanded the Chair will put the question on the amendments in gross.

No separate vote was demanded.

The amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass? Upon this question the rules require the yeas and nays to be taken.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas, 232, nays 1, not voting 89; as follows:

YEAS—232.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names of members voting be dispensed with.

Mr. ELLIS. I object.

The Clerk read the names of members voting.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. BLACKBURN with Mr. PHELPS, for this day.

Mr. WILKINS with Mr. HOLTON, for this day.

Mr. YOUNG with Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, for this day.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky, with Mr. LACEY, on this vote.

Mr. DAVIDSON with Mr. STRAIT, for this day.

Mr. KLEINER with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, for this day.

Mr. MURRAY with Mr. HOLMES, for this day.

Mr. COOK with Mr. GOFF, until further notice.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. FORNEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I rise to a privileged motion. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider revenue bills.

Mr. MONEY. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to make a report from a committee.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to ask a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIS. If the motion of the gentleman from New York should be voted down would it be then in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider other bills—the educational bill?

The SPEAKER. Certainly; a motion would be in order to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union generally.

Mr. HENLEY. I give notice that I propose to antagonize the proposition of the gentleman from New York by bringing on, if I can, the consideration of the bill for the forfeiture of Northern Pacific land grants.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT].

The question being taken, there were—ayes 60, noes 96.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I call for tellers.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MONEY. I desire to make a report from a committee.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I desire to present a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] asks for tellers on his motion, and pending that the gentleman from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER] moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question is on the motion to adjourn.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 99, noes 80.

Mr. ANDERSON and Mr. WILLIS called for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 32—not one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. ANDERSON. Count the other side.

The negative vote was counted, and there were noes 141—the affirmative not being one-fifth of the whole vote.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered, only 10 members voting therefor.

So tellers on the yeas and nays were refused, the yeas and nays were not ordered, and the motion to adjourn was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BAYNE: Resolution of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, urging the passage of the foreign contract labor bill—to the Committee on Labor.

Also, resolution of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, urging the repeal of the act of July 22, 1876, by which the legal-tender quality of the trade-dollar was abrogated—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. BRENTS: Petition of Stevens Post, No. 1, Department of Washington Territory, for publication in Official Records of the War of the Rebellion of photographic illustrations—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. W. W. BROWN: Protest of the Philadelphia Board of Trade against the proposed commercial treaty with Spain—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CALDWELL: Of ex-Federal soldiers of Nashville, Tenn.

By Mr. W. W. CULBERTSON: Of 206 voters of Fleming County, Kentucky.

By Mr. KLEINER: Of ex-soldiers of Stendal, Ind.

By Mr. LOVERING: Of General Lander Post, No. 5, G. A. R., of Lynn, Mass.

By Mr. SENEY: Of A. J. Snider and 47 others, of Wyandot, Ohio.

By Mr. STEPHENSON: Of Mrs. Drusilla Gouldsbury and others, of Waupaca County, Wisconsin.

By Mr. J. W. STEWART: Of citizens of Franklin County, of Chittenden County, and of Rutland County, Vermont.

By Mr. STORM: Of citizens of Pike County, of Carbon County, of Montour County, and of Carbon County, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. WOODWARD: Of 383 citizens of Richland County, of 85 citizens of Crawford County, and of 54 citizens of La Crosse County, Wisconsin.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 28, 1885.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LANDING OF TELEGRAPH OCEAN CABLES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State and accompanying papers, furnished in response to a resolution of the Senate of May 2, 1884, calling for information relative to the landing of foreign telegraphic cables upon the shores of the United States.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, January 27, 1885.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message will be printed, together with the letter of the Secretary of State; and the message and letter, with the accompanying papers, will be referred to the Committee on Printing for the time being, with a view of inquiring whether the great mass of documents transmitted shall be printed.

VENEZUELA CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers and documents, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of State concerning the awards made against Venezuela by the mixed commission under the convention of April 25, 1866.

I earnestly invite the attention of Congress to this communication and the accompanying documents.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 27, 1885.

LANDS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate of the United States:

In response to the resolution of the Senate of the 22d instant, setting forth that—

"Whereas the United States, in 1866, acquired from the Creek and Seminole Indians by treaty certain lands situate in the Indian Territory, a portion of which have remained unoccupied until the present time; and

"Whereas a widely extended belief exists that such unoccupied lands are public lands of the United States, and as such subject to homestead and pre-emption settlement, and pursuant to such belief a large number of citizens of the United States have gone upon them claiming the right to settle and acquire title thereto under the general land laws of the United States; and

"Whereas it is understood that the President of the United States does not regard said lands as open to settlement, and believes it to be his duty to remove all persons who go upon the same claiming the right to settle thereon, and for that purpose has directed the expulsion of the persons now on said lands by the use of military force, and there seems to be a probability of a conflict growing out of the attempt to expel said persons so claiming right and attempting to settle: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the President be requested to advise the Senate as to the status of the lands in question as viewed by the Executive, the action taken, if any, to expel persons seeking to settle thereon, and the reasons for the same, together with any other information in his possession bearing upon the existing controversy"—

I have the honor to state that the matter was referred to the Secretaries of War and the Interior, and to transmit herewith their respective reports thereon dated the 26th instant.

The report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs accompanying that of the Secretary of the Interior recites fully the provisions of the treaties made with the Indian tribes ceding the lands in question to the United States; showing the condition and purposes expressed in said treaties regarding said lands, as well as the action taken with reference thereto, from which it will be seen that they are not open to settlement under any laws of the United States.

The report of the Secretary of War shows the action of the military authorities at the request of the Interior Department under section 2147 of the Revised Statutes.

The status of these lands was considered by my predecessor, President Hayes, who, on the 26th day of April, 1879, issued a proclamation warning all persons intending to go upon said lands without proper permission of the Interior Department that they would be speedily and immediately removed therefrom according to the laws made and provided, and that if necessary the aid and assistance of the military forces of the United States would be invoked to carry into proper execution the laws of the United States referring thereto. A similar proclamation was issued by President Hayes on the 12th day of February, 1880. On the 1st day of July, 1884, I considered it to be my duty to issue a proclamation of like import.

These several proclamations were at the request of the Secretary of the Interior.

As will be seen by the report of the Secretary of War, the military forces of the United States have been repeatedly employed to remove intruders from the lands in question, and that notwithstanding such removals and in disregard of law and the executive proclamations, a large body of intruders is now within the territory in question and that an adequate force of troops has been ordered to remove the intruders and is now being concentrated for that purpose.

None of the land or general laws of the United States have been extended over these lands except as to the punishment for crimes and other provisions contained in the intercourse act, which relate to trade and the introduction of spirituous liquors and arms among Indians, and do not sanction settlement. It is clear that no authorized settlement can be made by any person in the territory in question.

Until the existing status of these lands shall have been changed by agreement with the Indians interested, or in some other manner as may be determined by Congress, the treaties heretofore made with the Indians should be maintained and the power of the Government to the extent necessary should be exercised to keep off intruders and all unauthorized persons.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 27, 1885.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the message of the President, with the accompanying papers, will be printed, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to suggest that we have those documents printed as early as possible, because they contain information of great value.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will give direction to hasten the printing.

Mr. COCKRELL. That will probably be sufficient.

RUSSIAN RELIEF TO JEANNETTE SURVIVORS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I have the honor to transmit communications from the Secretary of the Navy, recommending certain action by the Government in recognition of the services, official and personal, extended in Russia to the survivors of the Arctic exploring steamer Jeannette and to the search parties subsequently sent to Siberia.

The authority of Congress is requested for extending the specific rewards mentioned in the paper accompanying one of the communications of the Secretary. The suggestion concerning the thanks of Congress is also submitted for consideration.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 27, 1885.

URIEL CROCKER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate of the United States:

I have carefully considered the provisions of Senate bill No. 862, entitled "An act for the relief of Uriel Crocker."

The general statute provides for relief in case of the destruction of coupon bonds.

In my opinion this provision of law is sufficiently liberal to meet all cases of missing coupon bonds worthy of favorable action, and I do not deem it advisable to encourage this class of legislation.

The bill is not, however, so flagrantly inexpedient as to call for my formal disapproval, and I have allowed it to become a law under the constitutional provision, contenting myself with communicating to the Senate, in which the bill originated, my disapproval of special legislation of this character.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 27, 1885.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the message will be printed, and laid on the table.

Mr. HOAR. What is the last matter which was laid before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A message from the President of the United States announcing that the bill for the relief of Uriel Crocker, a bondholder whose bonds were lost, had not been signed by the President but had been suffered to become a law by lapse of time, and stating the President's views in respect of that species of legislation.

Mr. HOAR. I do not know that there is anything in the Constitution which authorizes the President of the United States to express his disapprobation of a measure that has become a law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that is not a parliamentary question, although the Constitution provides that the President of the United States may communicate to either House of Congress his opinion in respect of matters of public welfare at any time.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MILLER, of California, presented a resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed treaty of commerce with Spain; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., urging the appropriation of a sufficient sum for the support of mail facilities between the United States and Australasia; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., urging the establishment of a signal station at Mount Tamalpais, near San Francisco, Cal.; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PENDLETON presented a resolution adopted at the annual meeting of the Toledo Association of ex-Union Prisoners of War of Ohio, urging the passage of a bill similar to the so-called Logan or Robinson bills for pensioning ex-Union prisoners of war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR. I ask leave to refer a letter addressed to me personally by Francis A. Perry, counselor at law in Boston, to the Judiciary Committee. It sets forth what he conceives to be a grievance under the operation of the existing law for the distribution of the Alabama award, so called. It is not in the form of a petition, but it is intended as a request for legislation, although addressed to one member of the Senate. I ask unanimous consent that the paper may be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the paper will be received and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MORRILL presented the petition of C. W. Downing, L. Gardner, Francis Miller, and other citizens of Washington, D. C., praying for the purchase by the Government of square 406, between Eighth and Ninth and E and F streets northwest, for a site whereon to erect the proposed city post-office building; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORGAN. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report an amendment to the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill for the benefit of Mrs. Louise R. S. Wing, the widow of the former minister to the State of Ecuador. I move that the amendment, with the accompanying paper, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2117) for the relief of Mathilda Victer, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

JAMES COFFEY.

Mr. SLATER. Yesterday I reported from the Committee on Pensions the bill (S. 513) granting a pension to James Coffey, of Oregon, which was indefinitely postponed. I now move that the order indefinitely postponing the bill be reconsidered, and that it be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions if there be no objection.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 2592) to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation of the Winnebago tribe of Indians, in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, it was Ordered, That the petition of Bridget Adams and the accompanying papers, now on the files of the Senate, be withdrawn and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution requesting the President of the United States to return to the House of Representatives House bill No. 1017 for correction; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7874) making additional appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 8120) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 7871) to remove the political disabilities of W. H. Ward, of Virginia; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

ARMY INSPECTOR-GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the United States be requested to return to the House of Representatives House bill No. 1017, the House being advised that there is an error in the enrolled bill by the insertion therein of the word "hereafter" instead of "thereafter," which was the word used when said bill passed both Houses of Congress.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. MILLER, of California, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, submitted an amendment to be proposed to the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MAXEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8120) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6771) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report thereon.

On motion of Mr. FRYE, it was Ordered, That 1,000 additional copies of the said bill and the reported amendment, together with the report of the committee, be printed in pamphlet form for the use of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

After six hours and fifty-seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at 7 o'clock and 29 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 28, 1885.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] that quite a number of gentlemen have bills and resolutions which they desire to introduce merely for reference.

Mr. HUNT. If gentlemen merely desire to present measures for reference I will reserve my demand for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] has demanded the regular order, but he agrees to give way for the introduction of bills and resolutions for reference merely.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives at 12 o'clock noon on the 11th day of February, 1885, pursuant to the requirements of the Constitution and laws relating to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States, and the President of the Senate shall be the presiding officer.

That one person be appointed teller on the part of the Senate, and two persons appointed tellers on the part of the House of Representatives, to make a list of the votes as they shall be declared.

That the result shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall announce the state of the vote and the persons elected to the two Houses assembled as aforesaid; which shall be deemed a declaration of the persons elected President and Vice-President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CLAY] presents this as a report from the Select Committee on the state of the Law Respecting the Election of President and Vice-President.

Mr. REED. On what reference is that report made?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not aware of any reference upon which the report is based.

Mr. REED. Would it be in order for the committee to make such a report unless upon a reference and by the direction of the House?

The SPEAKER. Since the point of order is made, the Chair thinks that the report is not in order.

Mr. REED. All I desire is an opportunity to read the resolution and see what it contains.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the resolution will be referred.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, this is a report from the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not so regard it, because the subject has not been referred to the committee. This is the first appearance in the House. Does the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] make the point of order?

Mr. REED. I do for the present. I want an opportunity to look at the resolution. It struck me from the reading of it that it contained something objectionable.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to have it referred to a committee?

Mr. CLAY. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. It will be so referred to the committee unless objection is made.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I submit that it can not be presented for reference except by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Consent has just been given for the introduction of bills and resolutions generally for reference.

Mr. REED. General consent?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. REED. To continue how long?

The SPEAKER. For bills and resolutions which gentlemen desire to introduce for reference.

Mr. REED. Then there can be no objection made to the introduction of bills for reference?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] demanded the regular order. The Chair stated to him that there were several gentlemen who had bills and resolutions which they desired to offer for reference merely. Therefore the gentleman from Louisiana withdrew his demand for the regular order and consented to the recognition of gentlemen desiring to introduce measures for reference; but the Chair supposes that when any gentleman objects to any particular bill he is entitled to have the objection recognized.

Mr. REED. Well, Mr. Speaker, I should like to examine that resolution.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary to refer that to the committee.

The SPEAKER. It is not referred. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] objects to its introduction at this time for reference.

Mr. WASHBURN. Let it be printed in the RECORD.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now recognize gentlemen for the presentation of bills and resolutions for reference, after which gentlemen who have privileged matters to present will be recognized.

AMENDMENT OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. FIEDLER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8122) to amend section 3336 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. WELLBORN, the Committee on Indian Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6801) for the relief of James R. Duncon; and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

RELIEF OF EUGENE SCHUYLER.

Mr. CURTIN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8123) for the relief of Eugene Schuyler; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

AMERICAN STEEL ARMOR.

Mr. CURTIN also introduced a bill (H. R. 8124) appropriating $25,000 for experiments with American-made steel armor for naval vessels; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL M. THOMPSON.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 2570) be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The SPEAKER. There is a standing order of the House under which the Speaker refers matters of this kind. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

RETIREMENT OF ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. PATTON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8125) to promote the efficiency of the Army by the voluntary retirement of officers who entered the service during the late war; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEELE. I ask that the bill just introduced be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That on and after the passage of this act any civilian appointed in the artillery, cavalry, or infantry arms of the United States service, who entered the Army during the late rebellion, either the volunteer or regular, and who has served in either or both for the period of twenty years, shall upon his own application to the President be placed upon the retired-list of the Army: Provided, The whole number retired under this act shall not exceed 150 at any one time: And provided further, That this act shall not apply to any officer below the grade of captain.

FORT BRADY, MICHIGAN.

On motion of Mr. BREITUNG, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. 1374) to provide for the sale of the old site of Fort Brady, Michigan, and for a new site and the construction of suitable buildings thereon, was taken from the Speaker's table, read twice, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

LAND TITLES.

Mr. CUTCHEON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8126) to confirm titles to lands in certain cases; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLOTTE BROAD.

Mr. MILLIKEN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8127) granting a pension to Charlotte Broad; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DEWITT C. FOREMAN.

Mr. LACEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8128) granting a pension to Dewitt C. Foreman; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL CATTLE-TRAIL ACROSS KANSAS.

Mr. PETERS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Kansas; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 12.

Be it resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring therein), That—

Whereas an effort is being made to secure legislation by Congress creating a so-called cattle-trail across the State of Kansas; and

Whereas such a measure would be prejudicial to the interests of the people of this, and beneficial only to parties who neither reside in nor pay taxes to this State: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That our Senators in Congress be instructed, and our Representatives requested, to resist any and all such attempted legislation by the use of every legitimate and proper means, to the end that justice may be done and the best interests of the people of Kansas subserved.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and is hereby, directed to forward copies of these resolutions, properly attested, to the President of the Senate, Speaker of the House of Representatives, and our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

I, E. B. Allen, secretary of state of the State of Kansas, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the original resolution now on file in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my official seal.

Done at Topeka, this 21st day of January, A. D. 1885.

[SEAL.] E. B. ALLEN, Secretary of State.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 705 be taken from the Speaker's table for passage at this time.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order now.

PENSIONS.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the report of the Committee on Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay upon the bill (H. R. 2802) to allow arrears of pension to certain invalid pensioners whose names were dropped from the pension-roll and by act of Congress subsequently were restored, and to substitute another report.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman will be allowed to withdraw the report already made, and present a corrected one in its place.

There was no objection.

ADMISSION OF DAKOTA.

On motion of Mr. PRYOR, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. 1682) to enable the people of that part of the Territory of Dakota south of the forty-sixth parallel of north latitude to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of the State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and for other purposes, was taken from the Speaker's table, read twice, and referred to the Committee on the Territories.

JOHN W. BLAKE.

On motion of Mr. ENGLISH, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. 1631) for the relief of John W. Blake, was taken from the Speaker's table, read twice, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

INDEX OF FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

Mr. McCOID, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to employ Frank Galt to examine the files of the House and prepare therefrom an index and history of all petitions, memorials, and other papers relating to the French spoliation claims; the said Frank Galt to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the compensation now paid committee clerks.

FIRE ON ROOF OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I present a privileged report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, instructed to inquire into the origin of the fire at the roof of the House, which occurred on the morning of the 26th instant, have, in accordance with the resolution referred to them, taken that subject into consideration, and submit the following report:

Upon an examination and inquiry, the cause of the fire was beyond doubt accidental; probably owing to the throwing of waste paper or other light material into a fire-place, some of which might have been carried up the flue, and while ignited have been blown over to the wooden flagstaff or to the wooden box on the roof—in which the flag is kept—at the foot of the flagstaff. Although no flue is within forty feet of the flagstaff, yet with the vigorous wind prevailing at that time it is possible that a spark might have been fanned into a flame. To prevent the recurrence of such an accident your committee recommend that the flagstaff be covered with suitable sheet metal, and that the box for the flag be made of sheet metal; and that the Architect of the Capitol be directed to provide suitable outlets in the loft for water from the tanks; and that the Clerk of the House be directed to procure and place in all rooms, in which documents, papers, or records are stored, suitable small portable fire-extinguishers or hand-grenades for the extinguishment of fire.

Your committee will state that, the roof and its supports being constructed of metal, the damage by the fire was consequently slight.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I move that this report be adopted, and that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

The SPEAKER. The presentation of this report discharges the committee. The question is on the adoption of the report.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to inquire whether the adoption of this report commits the House to the purchase of these fire-extinguishers?

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I inquired as to the cost of these hand-grenades, and the Architect of the Capitol states that they can be bought for $10 a dozen, or not exceeding $1 apiece.

Mr. CONVERSE. We have now a water system which is better for the extinguishing of fires than any such system as this.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. The water system does not supply these rooms where valuable documents are kept.

Mr. CONVERSE. Well, we can carry pipes there.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. The cost of doing that would be much greater than the expense of procuring these simple hand-grenades, which are ready in case of fire at a moment's notice. I think the cost will be very slight—perhaps $20 altogether—perhaps $10.

Mr. CONVERSE. The cost may be more than $10,000.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Then the gentleman knows more about this matter than does the Architect of the Capitol.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the report.

Mr. CONVERSE. I move that the report be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. CONVERSE, there were—ayes 49, noes 80.

Mr. CONVERSE. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum having been made, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. STOCKSLAGER, and the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. CONVERSE, as tellers.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to make another inquiry. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, against the resolution that while it is true the reception of the report is privileged, is a resolution reported for action on the part of the House privileged?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the committee has reported no resolution except to send along with this report the resolution which was passed by the House heretofore directing it to make this inquiry. The committee on that resolution simply makes a report in writing, and recommends no resolution whatever.

Mr. CONVERSE. If no resolution is recommended by the committee to the House I will make no further objection.

The SPEAKER. The report simply contains an opinion of what ought to be done.

Mr. CONVERSE. I do not object then.

The report was adopted.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, announced the adoption by the Senate of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7874) making additional appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes.

HON. JAMES S. ROBINSON.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. PAIGE. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAIGE. I submit the following resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas on October 14, 1884, Hon. JAMES S. ROBINSON, a Representative in the Forty-eighth Congress from the ninth district of the State of Ohio, was elected to the office of secretary of state of the State of Ohio, and has entered upon the discharge of its duties: and

Whereas said Hon. JAMES S. ROBINSON is still to all intents, and so far as any official notification of resignation to this House is concerned, a member of this body and that his name is still borne upon the roll as a Representative in Congress: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections of this House be ordered to investigate and report to this House at the earliest moment the status of the rights of said Hon. JAMES S. ROBINSON as a member of this body.

Mr. KEIFER. Is that a question of privilege?

The SPEAKER. It relates to the right to a member's seat, whether one whose name is borne on the roll is in fact a member of this House.

Mr. KEIFER. It is proposed to refer the subject to the Committee on Elections?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. KEIFER. I think it should go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make any motion?

Mr. KEIFER. The Committee on Elections in my opinion does not have jurisdiction of such inquiry into the right of a member to his seat.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman move an amendment to the resolution?

Mr. KEIFER. I do not.

The SPEAKER. Then the question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The preamble and resolution were adopted.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

Mr. SLOCUM. I rise for the purpose of submitting a privileged report from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs make the following report:

Your committee, having had under consideration resolution of the House, introduced January 19, 1885, requesting the President to transmit a copy of the recent appeal of Fitz-John Porter, together with accompanying papers, respectfully report the same back with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. REED (interrupting). Is that a privileged report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is a report of a committee of inquiry, which is privileged under the rules.

Mr. REED. The Chair decides it is privileged under the rules?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does, and the Clerk will proceed with the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 19, 1885.

Resolved, That the President be respectfully requested——

Mr. REED. I desire to call the Speaker's special attention to this. It seems to me that is not——

A MEMBER. Let us have the rule.

Mr. REED. If the rule could be read.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair remembers a resolution was offered——

Mr. REED. If under the rule it is privileged, I should not object to it.

The SPEAKER. On Monday during the call of the States a resolution was introduced, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. But the Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

1. Each Monday morning during a session of Congress, immediately after the Journal of the proceedings of the last day's sitting has been read and approved, the Speaker shall call all the States and Territories in alphabetical order for bills and joint resolutions for printing and reference, on which call joint and concurrent resolutions and memorials of State and Territorial Legislatures may be presented and appropriately referred, and on this call only resolutions of inquiry directed to the heads of the Executive Departments shall be in order for reference to appropriate committees, which resolutions shall be reported to the House within one week thereafter.

Mr. REED. Does it not go to the Calendar on the point of order being raised?

The SPEAKER. The practice of the House has been always heretofore to treat these reports not only as privileged for the purpose of being made, but for consideration. That has been the invariable practice of the House.

Mr. REED. This is not a resolution of inquiry to make it privileged.

Mr. KEIFER. The rule requires this to be made within seven days.

The SPEAKER. It communicates certain papers for the benefit of the House.

Mr. REED. Does the Chair regard that as a resolution of inquiry within the rule?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so. It is in the form of a resolution.

Mr. REED. Does the Chair decide its consideration is privileged?

The SPEAKER. If this were an original question, if there had been no practice in the House settled before, the Chair is not prepared to say what it would decide; but it has been the invariable practice of the House to receive and consider these reports.

Mr. REED. Does the Chair sustain that practice?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the practice has continued so long and been so uniform under the rule it will be obliged to hold that it is privileged.

Mr. REED. The Chair so holds?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does so decide.

Mr. STEELE. I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will conclude the reading of the resolution, after which the Chair will entertain the gentleman's motion.

The Clerk continued the reading of the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be respectfully requested to transmit to this House a copy of the recent appeal of Fitz-John Porter, together with the accompanying papers.

Mr. STEELE. I now move to lay that on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, which is not debatable.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 59, noes 116.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. SLOCUM. I now move the previous question upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to hear that read again.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I object to any more reading of the resolution.

Mr. HISCOCK. It ought to be read and amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to having the resolution again reported?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I object. It is taking up the time of the House unnecessarily.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Then I ask the yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution to save time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] demands the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. On that I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 47 members voting therefor (being more than one-fifth of the last vote).

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 179, nays 77, not voting 66; as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

On motion of Mr. HUNT, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

Mr. HORR. I withdraw my vote, being paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]; which fact I had forgotten when I voted.

The following gentlemen were announced as being paired on all political questions until further notice:

Mr. RANKIN with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. MORRISON with Mr. JOHNSON.

Mr. SHAW with Mr. LAIRD.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, with Mr. KELLOGG.

Mr. ARNOT with Mr. BELFORD.

Mr. FYAN with Mr. HOOPER.

Mr. DUNN with Mr. CHALMERS.

Mr. CURTIN with Mr. BRUMM.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama, with Mr. BURLEIGH.

Mr. MULLER with Mr. HOWEY.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York, with Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota.

Mr. ELLIOTT with Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. JORDAN with Mr. HITT.

Mr. BROADHEAD with Mr. BARR.

Mr. COOK with Mr. GOFF.

Mr. DAVIS, of Missouri, with Mr. SKINNER, of New York.

The following gentlemen were announced as being paired on this vote:

Mr. SENEY with Mr. JOHN S. WISE.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, with Mr. HOLTON.

Mr. LE FEVRE with Mr. ATKINSON.

Mr. SPRIGGS with Mr. BREWER, of New Jersey.

Mr. BUDD with Mr. CRAIG.

Mr. BELMONT with Mr. HART.

Mr. MURPHY with Mr. RYAN.

Mr. RANDALL with Mr. HORR, until January 30.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BREWER, of New York. I ask that the resolution be again read.

There being no objection, the resolution was again reported.

The resolution was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to submit a privileged report. I desire to call up the bill making appropriations for the naval service.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to submit a conference report?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do.

The SPEAKER. The Chair requests the gentleman to withhold the report a moment in order to lay before the House certain executive communications which have been accumulating on the table.

RUSSIAN RELIEF TO SURVIVORS OF JEANNETTE EXPEDITION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I have the honor to transmit communications from the Secretary of the Navy recommending certain action by the Government in recognition of the services, official and personal, extended in Russia to the survivors of the Arctic exploring steamer Jeannette, and to the search parties subsequently sent to Siberia. The authority of Congress is requested for extending specific rewards mentioned in the paper accompanying one of the communications of the Secretary. The suggestion concerning the thanks of Congress is also submitted for consideration.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 27, 1885.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection this communication, with the accepting papers, will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COX, of New York. I think that goes properly to the Committee on Appropriations or to the Naval Committee. The Committee on Naval Affairs has a bill kindred to this measure now before it.

The SPEAKER. Then, without objection, the communication and accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

IMPRISONMENT OF THOMAS R. MONAHAN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, as desired by the House resolution of the 9th instant, a report, with accompanying papers, from the Secretary of State in relation to the arrest and imprisonment of Thomas R. Monahan by the authorities of Mexico.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 27, 1885.

VENEZUELAN MIXED COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of State concerning the awards made against Venezuela by the mixed commission under the convention of April 25, 1866. I earnestly invite the attention of Congress to this communication and accompanying documents.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 27, 1885.

FRENCH AND AMERICAN MIXED CLAIMS COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message and accompanying papers from the President of the United States; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a preliminary report of the Secretary of State of the 26th instant, in response to a resolution of the House of Representatives passed on the 9th day of January, 1885, calling for copies of accounts and vouchers of the disbursing officers of the French and American Claims Commission, and certain other information in relation to the transactions of said commission.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 27, 1885.

BAYOU BARTHOLOMEW, ARKANSAS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from the Chief of Engineers of a preliminary examination of Bayou Bartholomew, Arkansas; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

FRENCH SPOLIATIONS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of State of an appropriation for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spoliations by the French prior to July 31, 1801; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES LEGATION IN COREA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of State of an appropriation for the purchase of premises for the United States legation at Sêaul, Corea, and for repairing premises of the United States legation at Bangkok; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WATERVLIET ARSENAL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of War of an appropriation to improve the sanitary condition of Watervliet arsenal, West Troy, N. Y.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

TRANSPORTATION AND STORAGE OF SILVER DOLLARS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, asking that additional provision be made for transportation and storage of silver dollars now being coined; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, inclosing a communication from the Supervising Architect, and recommending an increase of the limit of the cost of construction to $200,000 of the public building at Council Bluffs, Iowa; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SYRACUSE, N. Y.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, inclosing a letter from the Supervising Architect relative to an increase of the limit of the cost of construction of the public building at Syracuse, N. Y.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MONEY-ORDER DIVISION, POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting additional estimates from the Postmaster-General of appropriations for the money-order division of the Post-Office Department; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ABSECOM AND CAPE MAY STATIONS, NEW JERSEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting estimates by the Light-House Board of appropriations for Absecom Station and Cape May Station, New Jersey; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CUSTOMS DUTIES, ETC., REFUNDED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with law, a statement of customs duties, tonnage, &c., refunded during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

J. M. WILBUR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting report of the committee appointed to investigate the claim of J. M. Wilbur for extra tiling in the New York post-office and court-house, and recommending the payment of the amount due the claimant; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. BURNES, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was discharged from the consideration of the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury relative to the public building at Saint Joseph, Mo.; and the same was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

On motion of Mr. HENLEY, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Pacific Railroads was discharged from the further consideration of the resolution of inquiry introduced January 26, 1885, concerning the appointment by the President of commissioners to examine the California and Oregon Railroad; and the same was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BUDD, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. PAYSON, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

ORDERS TO PRINT.

On motion of Mr. OATES, by unanimous consent, the report of the Committee on Public Lands on the bill (H. R. 5266) to prohibit aliens and foreigners from acquiring title to or owning land within the United States of America was ordered to be reprinted for the use of the House.

On motion of Mr. ROSECRANS, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, unanimous consent was given to print petition and accompanying papers of J. R. Haskell, in relation to multicharge guns.

REPORT OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, in accordance with the statute, lays before the House for reference to the Committee on Printing the following Senate concurrent resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, January 26, 1885.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the annual report of the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum for the year 1884 be printed, and that there be printed 16,060 extra copies; of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,060 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 7,000 for the use of the Smithsonian Institution.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from a committee of conference.

Mr. LEWIS. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to yield a moment while I introduce a bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield to the gentleman for a moment.

LUCIEN GOYAUX.

Mr. LEWIS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8129) for the relief of Lucien Goyaux; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ERROR IN ENGROSSMENT.

Mr. ROSECRANS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a resolution in reference to what I take to be a privileged matter—the correction of an error in the engrossment of a bill. An error has been discovered in the engrossment of the House bill No. 1017, and it is desirable to have the bill recalled for correction. I therefore offer a resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is a privileged matter. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the United States be requested to return to the House of Representatives House bill No. 1017; the House being advised that there is an error in the enrolled bill by the insertion therein of the word "hereafter" instead of the word "thereafter," which was the word used when the said bill passed both Houses of Congress.

The resolution was agreed to.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. HOLMAN presented the following conference report; which was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7874) making additional appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3 and 4.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 12, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment, amended as follows: Insert after the word "seventy-five," in line 10, page 15 of the bill, the words "as fixed by the act approved June 30, 1876," and the Senate agree to the same.

SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
WM. S. HOLMAN,
JOHN D. LONG,
Managers on the part of the House.

EUGENE HALE,
W. B. ALLISON,
JAS. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN also presented the statement of the managers on the part of the House; which was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 7874, making additional appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year 1885, submit the following written statement in explanation of the action recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendments 1, 2, 3, and 4, makes verbal corrections in the bill to conform to the existing law; restores provision for traveling expenses of apothecaries' yeomen and civilian employés, and the provision touching commutation for rations, which it was proposed by the Senate to strike from the bill.

On amendments 5, 6, and 7, restricts the repairs to the hulls and machinery of wooden ships to 20 per cent. of the cost of a new ship or machinery of like character, except that the cost of new boilers in a wooden ship so repaired shall not be so restricted.

On amendments 8, 9, and 10, corrects typographical and clerical errors in the text of the bill.

On amendment 11, restores provision that vacancies in the Marine Corps shall not be filled until the commissioned officers thereof are reduced to seventy-five, and that thereafter such number shall not be increased.

On amendment 12, strikes out the section which prohibits retired officers of the Army Navy, and Marine Corps from holding positions in the civil service and drawing salary therefor, together with their regular pay.

SAM. J. RANDALL,
WM. S. HOLMAN,
JOHN D. LONG,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now call the previous question on the adoption of the report.

Mr. ELLIS. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. HOLMAN. How much time does the gentleman from Louisiana desire?

Mr. ELLIS. Only about three minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire simply to put on record one or two observations in regard to a single point that has been one of difference, but upon which there is now agreement, namely, as to the restriction of the amount allowed for repairs to wooden ships. I call the attention of Congress to the fact that in the last sixteen years $150,000,000 have been expended upon the repairs of these old wooden ships. It is a fact, sir, that one ship, the original cost of which was $400,000, has been repaired to the amonnt of $1,200,000, or three times her original cost.

Mr. HENLEY. What ship is that?

Mr. ELLIS. I do not remember her name, but it is a fact. Another one I remember whose original cost was about $500,000, and which has been repaired to the amount of $900,000.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do hope that this will cease. I do hope that this is the last time that the American Congress will ever sanction repairs to such an enormous and wasteful extent. The wooden ship is passing away. The failure of the live-oak upon the Government reservations, the place of which can only be supplied by the African teak, to-day renders the wooden ship more expensive than the iron or the steel ship. The wooden ship is passing away. Let it go; and hereafter I hope that Congress will never agree to the repair of any of these old wooden worthless hulks, unless the cost of the repairs be restricted to about 5 per cent. of the cost of the vessel. These old ships are useless; they are daily becoming a thing of the past. They are not fit for cruisers, not fit for battle-ships, not in any way commensurate with the requirements of the American Navy; and I trust that we shall never again sanction such a waste of money. I shall vote for this concurrence, but I desire to place these remarks upon record.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, on account of what has fallen from the lips of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] I desire to say a few words. I would say to the gentleman that this is hardly a proper time to enter upon the discussion, and further, I think he falls into an error as to the sums expended by way of repairs upon our ships. I do not question that the sum he has named has been expended, but the gentleman will remember that in more than one instance the expenditures within the limits he has mentioned have involved the actual building of new ships, though the old names were retained; and it was for the purpose of preventing that from being done that the limit of 30 per cent. was established, that is, that vessels should not be repaired if the cost would exceed 30 per cent. of the cost of building the ship. The difference between the two Houses on this bill was upon the question of making repairs where they would not exceed 30 per cent. of the original cost, as proposed by the House, or 20 per cent., as proposed by the Senate. The House conferees yielded that point on the ground that the bill only applies to the residue of this fiscal year; but judging from the action of the House heretofore, I indulge the hope that when the bill appropriating money for the naval service for the next fiscal year shall come up this question will be properly considered and the former conservative action of the House adhered to; and I trust that in the mean time no judgment will be formed upon a hasty discussion on a subject of so much importance to the country until it shall have been fully considered by the House. I express that hope because I am confident that if Congress shall adopt the policy of refusing to repair to a proper degree existing naval vessels, or shall adopt the policy of only repairing vessels where the cost will be materially less than the 30 per cent. basis of repairs, it will be found at an early day that vessels which at present answer every purpose which this Government has now, and is likely to have for years to come, for the employment of naval vessels, and which by proper repairs will be of great value to the Government, will become a total loss even before other vessels have been or can be constructed to take their places. Yes, sir; long before a new navy can be constructed the vessels now of actual value will be unseaworthy and out of commission.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think that is very true.

Mr. HOLMAN. On the other hand, by keeping up these vessels—many of which are of great value, such as we have employed in peace and war for half a century—by keeping them in reasonable repair and from time to time gradually substituting steel vessels, we shall in time, and within a reasonable time, have an entirely new navy of the material now approved, and yet secure the full value of the old. It is to be hoped that no rash or inconsiderate step will be taken on this subject of repairs, which may result in serious loss and embarrassments to the Government. I now call the previous question on the adoption of the report.

Mr. ELLIS. In view of the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], I must ask him to yield to me again for a moment. He says that I am mistaken.

Mr. HOLMAN. Do not misapprehend me. I do not question the amount expended, but I believe that there is a mistake in assuming that these large items have been wholly for repairs, when in fact they have involved the rebuilding of ships—the old names being preserved but the vessels being entirely reconstructed.

Mr. ELLIS. I ask indulgence of the gentleman and of the House while I prove what I said. I now state under the sanction of my oath as a Representative upon this floor that in the last sixteen years $154,000,000 have been expended for construction and repair, most of which has gone to the repairing of these old wooden vessels—enough money to have builded thirty Lepantos, enough to have builded seventy-five Impérieuses, one of the newest and best naval vessels, enough to have builded eighty Esmeraldas; and those are ships combining the qualifications of the battle-ship and the cruiser. Here is what the Secretary says:

The Shenandoah, built in 1862, at a cost of $463,866.75, has been charged with repairs since her completion amounting to $906,481.54.

Again, the Ossipee, built in 1861, cost $407,061.20, and her repairs since that time have amounted to $1,197,391.39.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have conceded the expenditure; I do not dispute that; but I again call the gentleman's attention to the fact that some of these vessels have been actually rebuilt—new vessels.

Mr. ELLIS. Here is more of it:

The Kearsarge, built in the same year——

Mr. CURTIN. How often was that ship repaired?

Mr. ELLIS. Heaven only knows.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I wish to inquire whether this whole subject of ship-building is open to general discussion at this time, because if it is some of us upon this side may desire to be heard.

The SPEAKER. It is open to discussion, unless the previous question shall be ordered by the House.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then if the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] is to be allowed to discuss one side of the question, I trust that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will allow somebody else to be heard upon the other side.

Mr. ELLIS. I merely want to add that the Kearsarge, which was built in 1861 at a cost of $286,918, has been repaired at a cost of $1,123,415; and the Pinta, which cost in 1865 $135,915, has been repaired at a cost of $224,826.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman is reading from the report of the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. DINGLEY. If the gentleman from Louisiana will allow me——

Mr. HOLMAN. It was not the purpose to open up this discussion, and I must insist on the previous question.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire only to ask a question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. DINGLEY. As the gentleman from Louisiana has called attention to the enormous amounts paid for what have been denominated repairs, I wish to ask him whether it is not true that in every one of the instances mentioned by him the vessels have been substantially rebuilt, in some cases two or three times, making the cost equivalent to the construction of two or three new vessels?

Mr. ELLIS. I should hope so.

Mr. DINGLEY. And is it not also true that a part of this extraordinary expense for repairs is due to the fact of the hasty construction of these vessels from unseasoned timber during the war?

Mr. ELLIS. Unquestionably.

Mr. DINGLEY. I agree in general with what the gentleman has said.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon ordering the previous question on agreeing to the report.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. As a question of the highest privilege, I present the credentials of the member-elect from the fifth district of North Carolina and ask that he be sworn in.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter of privilege. The Clerk will read the certificate.

The Clerk read as follows:

State of North Carolina to James W. Reid, greeting:

Whereas a vacancy has occurred in the representation from the State of North Carolina in the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States by the resignation of Hon. Alfred M. Scales, Representative from the fifth Congressional district, taking effect on the 30th day of December, A. D. 1884; and

Whereas writs of election have been issued to the sheriffs of the several counties composing the said Congressional district, to wit, the counties of Caswell, Forsyth, Granville, Guilford, Person, Rockingham, Stokes, and Surry, commanding them to hold elections in the various townships of their respective counties, at the places established by law, on Thursday, the 15th day of January, A. D. 1885, at which the qualified voters might vote for some person to fill the vacancy aforesaid; and

Whereas it has been duly certified to us that James W. Reid was elected at said election held as aforesaid;

Now, therefore, we do, by these presents, commission the said James W. Reid a member of the Forty-eighth Congress of the United States of America, from the State of North Carolina, for the fifth Congressional district, and do hereby confer upon him all the rights, privileges, and powers useful and necessary to the just discharge of the duties of said office.

In witness whereof His Excellency Alfred M. Scales, our governor and commander-in-chief, hath signed with his hand these presents and caused our great seal to be affixed thereto.

Done at our city of Raleigh, on the 22d day of January, in the year of our Lord 1885, and in the one hundred and ninth year of our American Independence.

[SEAL.] A. M. SCALES,
Governor of North Carolina.

By the governor:

W. L. SAUNDERS,
Secretary of State.

Mr. JAMES W. REID appeared at the bar of the House and was duly qualified by taking the oath prescribed by law.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT]. The first business in order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. SINGLETON. I move to dispense with the morning hour, my purpose being that the House shall proceed with the consideration of the bill for the erection of a Congressional Library building.

PROTECTION OF CHILDREN IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I rise to a privileged question, and call up from the Speaker's table, in order that the House may agree to the request of the Senate for a further conference, the bill (S. 729) for the protection of children in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The bill was taken from the Speaker's table, and the accompanying message of the Senate read, announcing that the Senate further insisted on its disagreement to the amendments of the House, asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. RIDDLEBERGER, Mr. PIKE, and Mr. BROWN.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I move that the House further insist on its amendments, and agree to the further conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker announced the appointment of Mr. WILSON of West Virginia, Mr. SPRIGGS, and Mr. JEFFORDS as conferees on the part of the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] has demanded the regular order. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] moves to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. I rise to a privileged question, and call up from the Speaker's table a joint resolution of the House which has been returned from the Senate with amendments—the joint resolution (H. R. 288) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the annual report of the health officer of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. That is not a matter of privilege. Under the rules, reports of a certain character from the Committee on Printing are privileged. Does the gentleman desire to have the bill referred?

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. No, sir; I wish to have the House concur in the amendments of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. That is not a matter of privilege. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi to dispense with the morning hour.

The question being taken, the motion was agreed to, there being—ayes 103, noes 31 (more than two-thirds voting in the affirmative).

MEXICAN TREATY.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I rise to a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering revenue bills and with a view of taking up the Mexican treaty.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. There can be no question of consideration raised against a motion of that character.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, What is it?

The SPEAKER. That the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills raising revenue.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If this motion is voted down will it then be in order to move to take up from the Speaker's table the Mexican pension bill? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. It would be in order unless some other motion having precedence over it should be made. It would be in order for the gentleman then to move to proceed to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table with a view to taking up that pension bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I hope the House will vote down this motion in order to vote up the Mexican soldiers' pension bill.

Mr. HENLEY. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HENLEY. My parliamentary inquiry is this, whether or not, if the motion of the gentleman from New York be voted down, it will not then be in order for me to move to proceed to the consideration of a land-forfeiture bill?

The SPEAKER. Of course it would. There are various special orders.

Mr. SINGLETON. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SINGLETON. Whether or not the gentleman from New York proposes to take up appropriation bills generally or only one of them.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from New York is that the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills raising revenue—not any particular bill.

Mr. HUNT. If the motion of the gentleman from New York is voted down, would it not then be in order for the House to take up the special order for the encouragement of the American merchant marine?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already answered similar questions. As soon as this is voted down, there are various motions which will be in order according to priority under the rules of the House. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT], that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills raising revenue.

The House divided; and the Chair announced that the noes had it.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I think it will save time if we have the yeas and nays on this motion.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 45.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Count the other side.

The other side was counted, and there were noes 128.

So (more than one-fifth of those present having voted in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 80, nays 157, not voting 86; as follows:

So the motion was not agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HEWITT, of New York, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I was absent in the committee-room engaged in the work of the committee, and should be glad to have the right to record my name on this roll-call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that under the rules of the House he has no power to entertain a motion for unanimous consent except where a member was in the Hall of the House but failed for some cause to hear his name called.

Mr. CANNON. I was absent by the order, or at least by the consent, of the House, engaged in the business of the House in the committee-room.

The SPEAKER. That has always been considered as absence by the leave of the House.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, with Mr. HOWEY, on all political questions, until further notice.

Mr. MURPHY with Mr. RYAN, for the remainder of this day, on political questions.

Mr. BLACKBURN with Mr. RUSSELL, on political questions, for this day.

Mr. MULDROW with Mr. ROCKWELL, for the remainder of the day, on all political questions.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. SINGLETON addressed the Chair.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now move to go to business on the Speaker's table for the purpose of reaching the consideration of the Mexican pension bill.

Mr. SINGLETON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House proceed to the consideration of the special order of the House, being the bill for the construction of a library building.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I raise the question of consideration as between that bill and the Mexican pension bill.

Mr. HUNT. I call up the prior order of the House, being the bill for the encouragement of the American merchant marine.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi calls up the special order, being the bill to authorize the erection of a Congressional Library building; pending which the gentleman from Louisiana calls up the special order for the encouragement of the American merchant marine——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Is not my motion recognized?

The SPEAKER. Which latter motion, under the order of the House, has precedence over the other; and the question must be first taken on the motion submitted by the gentleman from Louisiana. Against this motion the gentleman from Illinois raises the question of consideration.

Mr. VALENTINE. Against everything.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is stating the motion as the gentleman himself made it. The gentleman from Illinois raises the question of consideration against the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi. The first question is on the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. SINGLETON. I wish to state that this House made a special order on the 17th day of March last, fixing the 3d day of April of last year for the consideration of this bill. I hope the House, if it intends to carry this library scheme through, will proceed now to the consideration of this very important and essential measure.

Mr. HUNT. The House made the special order on February 29 of last year, fixing the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4987) for the encouragement of the American merchant marine and to promote postal and commercial relations, for the 19th day of March last.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. And it made business from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds a special order on the 7th day of April. [Laughter, and cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HENLEY. I wish, Mr. Speaker, to submit a question in the nature of a parliamentary inquiry. My understanding is that bills reported for the forfeiture of railroad land grants are entitled to precedence as against any of the other special orders which have been mentioned in this connection. I desire to know if I am correct in that understanding?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not called up any bill.

Mr. HENLEY. I desired to know as a matter of parliamentary proceeding whether I had the right now, under the special order to which I have referred, to call up these bills as against the others. I desire to call up a bill now for the forfeiture of a public land grant.

The SPEAKER. To what bill does the gentleman refer?

Mr. HENLEY. To the forfeiture of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad.

Mr. HUNT. And I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from California, that order having priority over the others.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. ANDERSON. As a bill reported earlier on the Calendar than the Northern Pacific, I call up for consideration, under the special order, the bill to adjust the land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads within the State of Kansas.

Mr. OATES. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. Against the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. OATES. Against the motion of the gentleman from Kansas.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas is now occupying the floor. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. ANDERSON. I call up that bill, Mr. Speaker, and any question of order in regard to it will be disposed of by an examination of the special order under which it is called up. I refer to the bill H. R. 6416.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order against the motion of the gentleman from Kansas as well as the motion of the gentleman from California.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. OATES. My point of order is that it is not competent for the gentleman to move to take up either one of the bills upon the Calendar; but the proper motion is that the House go to the House Calendar to consider that class of business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair at the last session of Congress decided that question of order in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. OATES. There are other bills on the Calendar prior to the bills which have been suggested relating to the same class of business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that there are some special orders authorizing the committees to designate the bills which they will call up for consideration. But the special order upon which the gentleman from California relies does not authorize the committee to indicate the bills, but confines the business of the House under such circumstances to the consideration of that class of bills.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then the motion of the gentleman has no priority over my motion.

The SPEAKER. It has priority under the rules of the House.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I think the Public Buildings Committee have priority under the order of the House.

Mr. HENLEY. I believe I have the floor. I move now, Mr. Speaker, that the House proceed to the House Calendar for the consideration of land-grant-forfeiture bills.

Mr. HUNT. And I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. There can be no question of consideration raised against that motion. But if the motion prevails, as the bills are reached on the Calendar questions of consideration can be made against them.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. If these gentlemen can not agree what business they shall take up I wish to remind the House that a special order was made in April last for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and bills of the Senate on the Speaker's table relating to the erection of public buildings.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion made by the gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY] to proceed to the House Calendar for the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on Public Lands in relation to the forfeiture of land grants.

The question being taken by a viva voce vote, the Speaker stated that in the judgment of the Chair the "noes" had it.

Mr. HENLEY. I call for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 44—not one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. MATSON. Count the other side.

The negative vote being counted, there were noes 91.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the whole vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the Committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7871) to remove the political disabilities of W. H. Ward, of Virginia.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, until Monday next, on account of sickness in his family.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 140, nays 106, not voting 77; as follows:

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. LAMB. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names of members voting be dispensed with.

Mr. STRAIT. I object.

The Clerk read the names of members voting.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, with Mr. GEORGE, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. HOBLITZELL with Mr. HATCH, of Michigan, for this day.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia, with Mr. JEFFORDS, on this vote.

Mr. SENEY with Mr. HOLTON, for the remainder of the day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER. The House having agreed to proceed to the House Calendar for the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on Public Lands in relation to the forfeiture of land grants, the Clerk will report the title of the first of such bills on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 180) to declare forfeited certain lands in the State of Michigan granted to aid in the construction of railroads, and to enforce the same by judicial proceedings; reported by Mr. HENLEY from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HUNT. I raise the question of consideration on this bill; and I state that I do so in favor of the bill for the encouragement of the American merchant marine.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House now proceed to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the title of it?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the title of the bill.

The title of the bill H. R. 180 was again read.

Mr. HENLEY. Do I understand the issue now is between the motion made by the gentleman from Louisiana and the consideration of the bill H. R. 180?

The SPEAKER. There is no issue between this bill and any other bill. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] simply raises, as he has the right to do, the question of consideration.

Mr. HENLEY. At the proper time I desire to move to postpone the consideration of the bill H. R. 180 to a certain day; and I do not want to lose that right by any action that may now be taken.

The SPEAKER. The question now is, Will the House consider the bill? If the House agrees to consider it, then any proper parliamentary motion will be in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. My inquiry is this, whether the House has not already settled the question of consideration by the vote just taken, which was to proceed to the consideration of this bill? The other measures were called to the attention of the House, and we were notified that if this vote failed one gentleman would call up one bill, another another, and a third a third; but the House by an emphatic vote has decided to take up this bill. Now the parliamentary inquiry I raise is whether the House has not already decided to consider this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not this particular bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decided at the last session, and repeated the decision this morning, that under the special order in relation to reports from the Committee on Public Lands, it was not in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union or to proceed to the House Calendar for the purpose of considering any particular bill, but merely for the purpose of considering that class of bills. If that ruling be correct, it follows that when the House has reached the Calendar under this special order the rights and privileges of members are precisely the same as if it had proceeded upon a motion to consider bills on the House Calendar generally under the ordinary rules of the House, and each bill, as it is reached, is subject to the question of consideration under another rule of the House. That is to say, the House has not yet voted that it will consider any designated one of these bills, but simply that it will proceed to the consideration of this class of bills.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the House had gone to the Speaker's table to consider bills there, would it be proper to antagonize one of those bills by a bill on the Calendar?

The SPEAKER. There is no antagonism here. It is only a question of consideration.

Mr. SPRINGER. But the gentleman himself desires that it be not considered; he desires to postpone it.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter with which the Chair has nothing to do as a question of order. Formerly, under the rules of the House, it was the duty of the Chair whenever a bill was reached, without any motion or demand, to put the question: "Will the House now consider it?" Under the present rules, however, the Chair is not required to put that question unless some gentleman on the floor demands it, and every gentleman has a right to demand it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the Chair permit another inquiry: If the House decides not to consider this bill, will not the next bill on the Calendar forfeiting railroad grants be in order?

The SPEAKER. Of course.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then the gentleman does not accomplish what he desires.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House proceed to the consideration of the bill the title of which has just been read?

The question was taken; and the Speaker declared it decided in the negative, and directed the Clerk to read the next bill on the Calendar.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays. [Cries of "Too late!"]

The SPEAKER. There is a good deal of noise in the Hall, and the Chair thinks the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] ought not to be cut off from making the demand for the yeas and nays if he so desires.

Mr. HENLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. Of course if the Chair rules that the gentleman from Alabama was in time with his demand for the yeas and nays, that settles it. Otherwise, I shall insist upon the point that his demand is too late.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama arose while the Chair was announcing the result, but the Chair did not recognize him, not knowing what his purpose was, and supposing that it was to make some motion which would not be in order until after the announcement.

A MEMBER. The next bill was called before the gentleman from Alabama made his demand for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Still, if the gentleman from Alabama says that when he rose originally it was for the purpose of demanding the yeas and nays, the Chair thinks that he should be recognized for that purpose.

Mr. MAGINNIS. The word of a gentleman has never been called in question in a case of this kind.

The SPEAKER. So the Chair thinks.

Mr. OATES. I demanded the yeas and nays because I thought that the House did not understand what they were voting for. I apprehend that we should consider these bills on the Calendar in their order.

Mr. HENLEY. I differ with the gentleman on that point.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 82, nays 164, not voting 77; as follows:

So the House refused to consider the bill.

During the roll-call,

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that Mr. MURPHY, of Iowa, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Several members objected.

The Clerk read the names of the members voting.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, with Mr. OCHILTREE, on this vote.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, with Mr. PUSEY, for this day.

Mr. HILL with Mr. JOHN S. WISE, for the remainder of this day.

Mr. KLEINER with Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, for the remainder of this day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The House refuses to proceed to the consideration of this bill, and the Clerk will report the next bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6408) forfeiting lands granted to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Marquette to Ontonagon, in that State.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration against this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] raises the question of consideration, and the question is, Will the House now proceed to the consideration of the bill the title of which has just been read?

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to the House——

The SPEAKER. This is not debatable. The question is, Will the House proceed to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. DUNHAM. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 88.

Several MEMBERS. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. No quorum has voted, and, under the rules, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from California, Mr. HENLEY, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. DORSHEIMER.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, will it be in order now to call for the yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. ANDERSON. I consider all this as simply done for delay. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and 58 gentlemen voted in the affirmative (more than one-fifth of the last vote); so the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 79, nays 161, not voting 83; as follows:

YEAS—79.

So the House refused to consider the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON asked that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. STRAIT objected.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. HURD with Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire, on this vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS with Mr. WASHBURN, for this day.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIS, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, reported, as a substitute for House bill 7972, a bill (H. R. 8130) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. THOMAS. All points of order are reserved on this bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let all points of order be reserved.

The SPEAKER. Points of order will be reserved.

Mr. VAN EATON. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. McCOMAS. I ask the gentleman to yield to me that I may submit an important resolution.

Mr. VAN EATON. I yield for that purpose only.

IMPRISONMENT OF JULIO R. SANTOS.

Mr. McCOMAS. I ask unanimous consent to submit the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas Julio R. Santos, an American citizen, naturalized in July, A. D. 1874, who was long an instructor in the University of Virginia, but recently a merchant in Bahia, Ecuador, has been imprisoned at Guayaquil, Ecuador, since November, A. D. 1884, for alleged complicity in a rebellion, and his speedy execution is apprehended;

And whereas it is alleged that this American citizen is innocent;

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested to inform this House what measures he has taken, and what further he intends to take, to secure the release or speedy trial of Julio R. Santos.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, this resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. BAYNE and others. Let us pass it now.

Mr. McCOMAS. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

Mr. McCOMAS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, returned to the House, in accordance with its request, the bill (H. R. 1017) relative to the Inspector-General's Department of the Army.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VAN EATON. I renew the motion that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON] that the House adjourn.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 48, noes 76.

Mr. HORR. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 41 voting in favor thereof—more than one-fifth of the last vote.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will lay before the House several executive communications.

There was no objection.

HINGHAM HARBOR, MASSACHUSETTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from the Chief of Engineers of a survey and preliminary examination of Hingham Harbor, Massachusetts; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

WHITE HALL HARBOR, NEW YORK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from the Chief of Engineers of a survey and preliminary examination of White Hall Harbor, New York; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. GARRISON, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for ten days, on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON] that the House adjourn; on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 31, nays 201, not voting 91; as follows:

YEAS—31.

So the House refused to adjourn.

During the roll-call,

Mr. ANDERSON moved by unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. VAN EATON objected.

The following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk for this day only:

Mr. ELLIS with Mr. DINGLEY.

Mr. MURRAY with Mr. WAIT.

Mr. FINERTY with Mr. HARMER.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. VAN EATON. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move that motion be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order.

Mr VAN EATON. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 102.

Mr. VAN EATON. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. VAN EATON and Mr. HENLEY.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 5, noes 159.

Mr. VAN EATON demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 92.

Mr. DUNHAM demanded the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 32.

The SPEAKER. Exactly one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. HENLEY. Count the other side.

The other side was counted, and there were 132.

The SPEAKER. Not one-fifth.

Mr. VAN EATON. Tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered, and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. VAN EATON. I move the House take a recess until eleven and a half o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Will not the gentleman yield to take up the Mexican pension bill?

The House divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 99.

Mr. VAN EATON. No quorum is voting.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. VAN EATON and Mr. HENLEY as tellers.

Mr. HENLEY. As a measure of pacification to the gentleman from Mississippi and those on the other side, I will say that I have no objection to the House taking a recess until eleven and a half o'clock to-morrow. [Cries of "That is right!"]

Mr. HOLMAN. Say 11 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. That requires unanimous consent after the point of order has been made that no quorum voted.

Mr. HENLEY. I will renew the motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion is still pending.

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Before voting I desire to know whether, if the House votes to take a recess until to-morrow, we will not commence then where we are now and will have more of to-morrow to waste.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will take their places.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 95, noes 19.

The SPEAKER. No quorum has voted.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 100, noes 19.

Mr. STRAIT and Mr. DUNHAM. No quorum has voted.

Mr. VAN EATON. I move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MCMILLIN demanded the yeas and nays on the motion to take a recess.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn takes precedence.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 109, noes 75.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 82, nays 135, not voting 106; as follows:

YEAS—82.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. VAN EATON. I object.

The following additional pairs were announced for this day:

Mr. BAGLEY with Mr. KETCHAM.

Mr. BREWER, of New Jersey, with Mr. BUCKNER.

Mr. NICHOLLS with Mr. RICE.

Mr. BALLENTINE with Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. JEFFORDS with Mr. LAMB.

Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HENLEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. VAN EATON. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday next.

Mr. HENLEY. I believe I had the attention of the Chair before the gentleman from Mississippi rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from California.

Mr. HENLEY. I demand the yeas and nays on the pending motion, which is the motion to take a recess until to-morrow at half past 11 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon that motion, but pending that the gentleman from Mississippi makes a motion which under the rules has priority over it. The Chair will cause the rule to be read if the gentleman desires it.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no doubt of that rule.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi, pending the motion to take a recess, which is that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday next.

Mr. HENLEY. I desire to submit a parliamentary question to the Speaker. I see in subdivision 4 of Rule XVI the following language:

> No motion to postpone to a day certain, to refer, or to postpone indefinitely, being decided, shall be again allowed on the same day at the same stage of the question.

The SPEAKER. That is a motion to postpone the consideration of a proposition to a day certain or indefinitely. This rule provides that—

> When a question is under debate no motion shall be received but to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, to take a recess, to lay on the table, for the previous question (which motions shall be decided without debate), to postpone to a day certain, to refer or amend, or to postpone indefinitely, which several motions shall have precedence in the foregoing order.

That is to say, a motion to adjourn, or, first to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, next to adjourn, and next to take a recess, is the order in which these motions shall be submitted to the House. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BLAND. Would it be in order to have read the Democratic and Republican platforms touching the forfeiture of these land grants?

Mr. HENLEY. I wish we could have them read.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. The Democrats are in a majority; why don't you pass your bills?

Mr. BLAND. The RECORD will show why we do not pass them. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. VAN EATON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HENLEY. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion pending, which is to take a recess.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi moves that the House do now adjourn, which is a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. There is so much confusion in the Hall that the Chair can not hear the motions of the gentlemen. If gentlemen will resume their seats and cease conversation in the Hall the Chair will endeavor to put in their proper order the several motions which are made.

Mr. HENLEY. I have demanded the yeas and nays upon the pending motion.

Mr. VAN EATON. And I have submitted a motion that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That motion is always in order.

The House divided, but before the announcement of the result,

Mr. HOLMAN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 44 members voting therefor—more than one-fifth of the last vote.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 80, nays 111, not voting 132; as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. DUNHAM. I object. Let them be read.

The names of members voting were read.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. HENLEY. The pending motion, I understand, is that the House take a recess.

The SPEAKER. That is the motion now pending.

Mr. VAN EATON. And pending that motion I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Saturday next.

Mr. HENLEY. I have not surrendered the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California had not surrendered the floor.

Mr. HENLEY. I wish to say that this seems now to have become a question of physical endurance, and that the other side show a determination not to come to a consideration of the land-grant-forfeiture bills. The responsibility of defeating the land-grant forfeitures will rest upon the Republican side of the House. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable. Pending the motion for a recess the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON] moves that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Saturday next.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. If the House should vote to take a recess till to-morrow at half past 11 o'clock, when it reassembles would it not then be in the same position as it is now with reference to business——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has answered that question twice already.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. With that side of the House filibustering against the consideration of the educational and Mexican pension bills?

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON].

The motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the motion for a recess till to-morrow at half past 11 o'clock.

Mr. HENLEY. Pending that I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 29, 1885.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

Mr. PENDLETON called the Senate to order, and the Secretary read the following letter:

To the Senate:

Pursuant to the rules, I hereby name and designate Hon. GEORGE H. PENDLETON, a Senator from the State of Ohio, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence this day.

GEO. F. EDMUNDS,
President pro tempore.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 29, 1885.

Thereupon Mr. PENDLETON took the chair as presiding officer for to-day.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PENDLETON) laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with section 229 of the Revised Statutes, statements showing the contracts made by the bureaus of the War Department during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1884; which was read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter of the Secretary will be printed, and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, if there be no objection.

Mr. CONGER. Should not the accompanying report be printed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The accompanying papers are very voluminous. If it is desired to have them printed, they had probably better go to the Committee on Printing for examination before the order to print is made.

Mr. CONGER. If it is in response to a call for information by the Senate it should be printed. The letter shows nothing beyond the fact that the information called for is communicated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is a report made to the Senate in accordance with law, and not in response to a call by the Senate for special information.

Mr. SHERMAN. The papers had better be referred to the Committee on Printing, and let them determine whether it is necessary to print them; or they may be first referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and if that committee wishes to have them printed, they can be reported back from that committee with such a recommendation, and then referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. CONGER. Very well; let that course be taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter and accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. McMILLAN. I present a concurrent resolution of the senate and house of representatives of the State of Minnesota in relation to the purchase by the Government of the water ways at Point Keweenaw, on Lake Superior. It is a resolution instructing the Senators and requesting the members of the House of Representatives from Minnesota, and relates to a matter upon which legislation is sought from Congress. I ask that the resolution be treated as a memorial and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the resolution will be received as a memorial. Does the Senator desire that the resolution shall be read, as is usual in such cases?

Mr. McMILLAN. The resolution is addressed to the members of the Senate and House from Minnesota, and I do not ask for its reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LAPHAM. I have a copy of a petition of merchants and manufacturers of the city of New York, formerly presented to the Senate by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations [Mr. MILLER, of California], with a large number of additional signatures to those upon it at that time, which I am requested to present. The petition prays for the ratification of the proposed Spanish reciprocity treaty. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of California, presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of California; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

Assembly concurrent resolution No. 10, relative to the establishment of a branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

Whereas Congress, by an act approved July 5, 1884, directed the board of managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to inquire into the expediency of establishing a branch of the home in the State of California for the Pacific coast, and to that end to receive propositions from the directors of the "Veterans' Home," located in Napa County, California, for the transfer of the buildings, grounds, and property of said "Veterans' Home" to the United States for use as a branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and to report to Congress in respect to the propriety and expediency of accepting said "Veterans' Home" for such branch; and

Whereas the directors of the "Veterans' Home" of California have adopted and transmitted to the board of managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers resolutions proposing to transfer the buildings, grounds, and property of said "Veterans' Home" to the United States for use as a branch home for the Pacific coast; and

Whereas the board of managers of the National Home have communicated to the directors of the "Veterans' Home" of California their intention to recommend to Congress, at its present session, the establishment of a branch of the National Home in California for the Pacific coast; and

Whereas there are many disabled volunteer soldiers of the war with Mexico and of the civil war on the Pacific coast, who are now in urgent and immediate need of the care and maintenance of such home and have a just claim for such relief as the Government has given to their comrades in the United States: Therefore

Be it resolved by the assembly of the State of California (the senate concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress are requested to use every effort to procure the passage by Congress at its present session of an act authorizing and directing the board of managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, within three months after the passage of the act, or as soon thereafter as practicable, to locate a branch of said home at some suitable point in the State of California; and further, authorizing and directing said board of managers to accept and receive from the directors of the Veterans' Home Association of California a donation and transfer to the United States of all the property, real and personal, of said association in Napa County, in said State, if, in the judgment of said managers, the same be suitable for such home; and further, making at its present session an adequate appropriation of money for the support and maintenance of the disabled volunteer soldiers of said home in case the said transfer be accepted by said managers.

Resolved, That the governor be requested to transmit forthwith to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress a copy of these resolutions.

W. H. PARKES,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN DAGGETT,
President of the Senate.

Attest:

THOMAS L. THOMPSON,
Secretary of State.

Mr. HARRISON presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Indiana; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Pensions, as follows:

A concurrent resolution instructing our Senators and requesting our Representatives in Congress to use their influence to secure the passage of House bill 420, to pension prisoners confined in confederate prisons during the late war.

Be it resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That our Senators in Congress from this State be instructed, and our Representatives in Congress be requested, to use their influence to secure the passage of House bill No. 420, entitled "A bill for pensioning prisoners of war who were confined in confederate military prisons during the late war."

Resolved, That the governor be, and is hereby, requested to furnish each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress a copy of the resolutions.

Mr. CALL presented the petition of H. Myers, of Marietta, Ga., praying for the removal of his political disabilities; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BUTLER presented a memorial of cigar-makers of Charleston, S. C., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed Spanish reciprocity treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I present a resolution of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, in favor of the so-called foreign-contract-labor bill. Inasmuch as the bill on that subject has been reported, I move that the resolution lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I present a resolution of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, favoring the repeal of the act of Congress of 1876 abrogating the legal-tender quality of the trade-dollar. As a bill relating to the trade-dollar is now on the Calendar, I move that the resolution lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented a memorial of firms representing the iron-ore producing and transporting interests of the Northwest and of Pennsylvania; a memorial of business men and firms of Philadelphia, Pa., and a memorial of citizens of Franklin County, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed Spanish reciprocity treaty; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. VEST presented the petition of O. Chanute and others, citizens of Kansas City, Mo., praying for the repeal of the laws fixing the terms of United States collectors, district attorneys, and other Federal officers at four years; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARRISON. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2373) to facilitate promotions throughout the Army by retiring from active service, upon their own application, officers of the Army who served in the war of the rebellion, to report it adversely and to recommend its indefinite postponement. The bill was introduced by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. I do not know whether he desires to have it placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CULLOM. I inquire of the Senator what the report is?

Mr. HARRISON. The report is adverse. I think the Senator from Illinois could hardly himself have understood the entire scope of the bill and its effect upon the Army. The Secretary of War shows that it would result in giving a very large proportion of the officers of the Army the privilege of present retirement.

Mr. COCKRELL. With increased rank and pay.

Mr. HARRISON. The scope of the bill is so wide, that the committee thought, with the Secretary of War, that it ought to be reported adversely. We have done so, and ask its indefinite postponement.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator consent to its going on the Calendar?

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection at all. I called the attention of the Senator to the report so that he might make that request if he desired so to do.

Mr. CULLOM. Let the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred a communication of the Secretary of War, inclosing a letter from General W. B. Hazen, Chief Signal Officer United States Army, concerning First Lieut. George S. Grimes and other officers of the Signal Service, whose accounts have been suspended in the Treasury Department for the reason that tolls received for dispatches sent over the Bismarck and Fort Ellis section of the United States military telegraph lines were used contrary to law in paying the expenses of said lines, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 2593) for the relief of certain officers of the Signal Service; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PIKE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2722) for the relief of Martha Turner, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PIKE. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims to report adversely the bill (S. 1825) for the relief of Martha Turner. This is a bill for the same purpose as that which passed the other House and which I have just reported. I move the indefinite postponement of the Senate bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2268) for the relief of John F. Severance, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2388) for the protection and improvement of the harbor of New York, reported it with amendments.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7857) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

DETROIT SCHOOL LANDS.

Mr. MAHONE. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7619) to release the reversionary right of the Government of the United States to certain lands in the city of Detroit and State of Michigan, to report it favorably and without amendment.

Mr. PALMER. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate for the present consideration of the bill. It is merely to clear the title of the land on which the high-school building stands in the city of Detroit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that it be read in full for information.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator from Ohio would prefer, I can state very concisely the substance of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for the reading of the bill for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is not open to debate. The Senator from Ohio asks for the reading of the bill for information. That will be done.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That any right of reversion or otherwise which the United States may be supposed to have in the space on which the high-school building belonging to the board of education of the city of Detroit is situated, being a part of the old town of Detroit, laid out by the governor and judges of the Territory of Michigan under an act of Congress approved April 21, 1806, entitled "An act to provide for the adjustment of the titles of land in the town of Detroit and Territory of Michigan, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, granted and released to the said board of education.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT COMPLETION CEREMONIES.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the commission appointed under the joint resolution of Congress, approved May 13, 1884, in relation to ceremonies to be authorized on the completion of the Washington Monument, to report back for adoption a resolution, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the order of proceedings adopted by the commission appointed under the joint resolution of Congress approved May 13, 1884, for the dedication of the Washington Monument on the 21st day of February next, is approved; and that the officers of the Senate are charged with the duty of carrying out the same under the direction of the said commission.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is scarcely worth while to read at the desk the accompanying order of ceremonies, because Senators have been served with copies of it. This formal resolution is necessary; and a similar resolution will be offered and no doubt adopted in the House of Representatives in regard to the matter.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL SENATE EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to report a resolution, which I ask may be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to employ three messengers at $1,440 each; two skilled laborers at $1,000 each; two laborers at $720 each; two firemen at $1,080 each; two janitors at $900 each. And the Secretary of the Senate is hereby authorized and directed to pay the above employés out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to have the Senator from Nevada explain the necessity for the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order on the request for immediate consideration. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution at this time?

Mr. VEST. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the resolution goes over until to-morrow.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution on the subject of counting the electoral vote.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 7619) to release the reversionary right of the Government of the United States to certain lands in the city of Detroit and State of Michigan; and

A bill (H. R. 7874) making additional appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. LAPHAM introduced a bill (S. 2594) to change the name of the Manufacturers' National Bank of New York to the Manufacturers' National Bank of Brooklyn, N. Y.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (S. 2595) granting a pension to Philip C. Enders; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2596) for the relief of Henry A. Paus; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HARRISON introduced a bill (S. 2597) granting a pension to Dr. Delaney Wiley; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BECK introduced a bill (S. 2598) for the relief of Mrs. Lizzie D. Clarke, of New Orleans; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COKE and Mr. INGALLS submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the Indian appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

COUNTING OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PENDLETON) laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives at 12 o'clock noon on the 11th of February, 1885, pursuant to the requirement of the Constitution and laws relating to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States, and the President of the Senate shall be the presiding officer.

That one person be appointed teller on the part of the Senate and two persons appointed tellers on the part of the House of Representatives, to make a list of the votes as they shall be declared.

That the result shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall announce the state of the vote and the persons elected to the two Houses assembled as aforesaid; which shall be deemed a declaration of the persons elected President and Vice-President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, communicated to the Senate the request of the House of Representatives to return to that body the bill (H. R. 691) for the relief of William W. Thomas.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to correct an error in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 1017) relative to the Inspector-General's Department of the Army; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five hours and forty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 29, 1885.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

CORRECTIONS.

Mr. PRYOR. I desire to correct the Journal. On yesterday, by mistake, I called up the bill (S. 1565) for the admission of Dakota Territory as a State, when the one I intended to call up was the bill (S. 1682) to enable the people of that part of the Territory of Dakota south of the forty-sixth parallel of north latitude to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of the State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and for other purposes. The Journal states that the bill (S. 1565) was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made. The Chair will state that it is usual when a Senate bill is taken from the Speaker's table for reference to consider it as read a first and second time.

Mr. PRYOR. This is a matter of some importance. There are two Senate bills pending; one of which, the bill S. 1682, has reached the House, having been passed by the Senate; the other, the bill S. 1565, is still pending in the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made, and the bill indicated by the gentleman will be referred to the Committee on Territories.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

The Journal was then approved.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I rise to make a report from the commission appointed in relation to the ceremonies upon the 21st of February next. I am instructed by the commission to report the order of proceedings adopted by the commission for that occasion, and also a resolution which I ask be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the order of proceedings adopted by the commission appointed under the joint resolution of Congress, approved May 13, 1884, for the dedication of the Washington monument on the 21st day of February next, is approved, and that the officers of this House are charged with the duty of carrying out the same under the direction of the said commission.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I move the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is the reading of the proposed programme demanded?

Mr. COX, of New York. No, sir. Let it go through.

Mr. KEIFER. Let it be printed.

The SPEAKER. It will be printed in the RECORD.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DORSHEIMER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to, and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The programme ordered printed is as follows:

ORDER OF PROCEEDINGS

Adopted by the Congressional Commission for the DEDICATION of the

WASHINGTON MONUMENT,

February 21, 1885.

DEDICATION OF MONUMENT.

The ceremonies at the base of the Monument will commence precisely at 11 o'clock.

In the evening, from 8 to 9 o'clock, there will be a display of fireworks near the Monument.

ORDER OF ARRANGEMENTS AT THE CAPITOL.

The Capitol will be closed on the morning of the 21st to all except the members and officers of Congress.

At 11 o'clock the east door leading to the Rotunda will be opened to those to whom invitations have been extended under the joint resolution of Congress and to those holding tickets of admission to the floor of the House and its galleries.

The floor of the House of Representatives will be opened for the admission of Senators and Representatives, and to those having invitations thereto, who will be conducted to the seats assigned to them.

The President, the President-elect, the Vice-President-elect, and ex-Presidents of the United States and special guests will be seated in front of the Speaker.

The Chief-Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court will occupy seats next to the President and ex-Presidents and special guests, on the right of the Speaker.

The Cabinet officers, and the Admiral of the Navy, the Lieutenant-General of the Army, and the officers of the Army and Navy who by name have received the thanks of Congress will occupy seats on the left of the Speaker.

The chief-justice and judges of the Court of Claims and the chief-justice and associate justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia will occupy seats directly in rear of the Supreme Court.

The diplomatic corps will occupy the front row of seats.

Ex-Vice-Presidents, Senators, and ex-Senators will occupy seats on the second, third, fourth, and fifth rows, on east side of main aisle.

Representatives will occupy seats on west side of main aisle and in rear of Senators on east side.

Commissioners of the District, governors of States and Territories, general officers of the Society of the Cincinnati, the Washington National Monument Society, members and ex-members of the Joint Commission for the Completion of the Monument, engineers of Monument and detail of workmen, and guests invited to the floor will occupy seats in rear of Representatives.

The executive gallery will be reserved exclusively for the families of the Supreme Court and the families of the Cabinet and the invited guests of the President. Tickets thereto will be delivered to the private secretary of the President.

The diplomatic gallery will be reserved exclusively for the families of the diplomatic corps. Tickets thereto will be delivered to the Secretary of State.

The reporters' gallery will be reserved exclusively for the use of the reporters for the press. Tickets thereto will be delivered to the press committee.

The Official Reporters of the Senate and of the House will occupy the reporters' desk in front of the Clerk's table.

The Marine Band will be in attendance.

Upon the arrival of the procession at the Capitol, and immediately after passing the reviewing stand, the members of the Senate will proceed to the Senate Chamber; the members of the House to the Hall of the House; the judiciary to the Supreme Court room.

The diplomatic corps will proceed to the Senators' withdrawing-room; the President, ex-Presidents, the Cabinet, the President-elect, the Vice-President-elect to the President's room.

The House being in session, and notification to that effect having been given to the Senate, the Senate, in a body, preceded by the President, ex-Presidents, the Cabinet, the President-elect, the Vice-President-elect, the judiciary, and diplomatic corps, will be conducted to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The President of the Senate will occupy the Speaker's chair and will preside.

The Speaker of the House will occupy a seat at the left of the President of the Senate.

The other officers of the Senate and of the House will occupy seats on the floor at the right and the left of the Speaker.

The Architect of the Capitol, the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, the Sergeant-at-Arms and the Doorkeeper of the House are charged with the execution of these arrangements.

PROCEEDINGS IN THE HALL OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Prayer will be offered by Rev. S. A. WALLIS, of Pohick church, near Mount Vernon, Va.

Music.

Oration by Hon. ROBERT C. WINTHROP, of Massachusetts, read by Hon. JOHN D. LONG, a Representative from Massachusetts.

Music.

Oration by Hon. JOHN W. DANIEL, of Virginia.

The benediction will then be pronounced by Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, Chaplain of the House of Representatives.

Music (during which the assemblage will disperse).

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] demands the regular order. The regular order is the call of committees for reference.

Mr. THOMAS. I withdraw the demand for the regular order for the purpose of allowing a resolution to be offered.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a report from the Committee on the Law respecting the Election of President and Vice-President, which I ask to have read from the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives at 12 o'clock noon, on the 11th day of February, 1885, pursuant to the requirements of the Constitution and laws relating to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States, and the President of the Senate shall be the presiding officer.

That one person be appointed teller on the part of the Senate, and two persons appointed tellers on the part of the House of Representatives, to make a list of the votes as they shall be declared.

That the result shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall announce the state of the vote and the persons elected to the two Houses assembled as aforesaid; which shall be deemed a declaration of the persons elected President and Vice-President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CLAY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am directed by the Committee on Rules to submit to the House a report and resolution, which I ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That each morning during the remainder of this session, immediately after the approval of the Journal, there shall be set apart thirty minutes for motions to take up and consider such bills or resolutions on any of the Calendars of the House, or on the Speaker's table, as the member making the motion may designate. And the bills or resolutions so designated shall be immediately considered, unless objected to by at least five members. But no bill or resolution taken up for consideration under this order shall be debated for more than ten minutes; which time shall be equally divided between the supporters and the opponents of the measure. If the yeas and nays shall be ordered on any such bill or resolution, or on any proposed amendment thereto, and the call of the roll shall be commenced before the expiration of the said thirty minutes, the same shall be completed before the regular order of business is entered upon: Provided, That while this order remains in force the Speaker shall not entertain any requests for unanimous consent to consider any bill or resolution at any other time than herein provided; but he may entertain such requests to refer bills or resolutions to committees or to dispose of Senate amendments to bills which have passed the House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I shall move the previous question on that resolution.

Mr. COX, of New York. I suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky to amend the resolution so as to require ten members to object instead of five.

Mr. BLACKBURN. This is a report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I should like to know when the committee met.

Mr. BLACKBURN. On the day before yesterday.

Mr. KEIFER. I was not aware of it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the members of the committee were not all together in the room at once; but there was one time when three members were present, and the Chair was instructed to prepare a resolution for exhibition to the members of the committee. The Chair thinks this ought to be shown to the members of the committee who have not seen it before it is acted upon.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I would like to see the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] withdraw the report for the present, in order that the other members of the Committee on Rules may have an opportunity to examine it?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Of course I will, sir.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not know that I shall object to it at all, but I would like to look at it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I withdraw the report for the present.

Mr. McCOID. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his inquiry.

Mr. McCOID. I wish to inquire whether the bills that are reported here upon the Calendars and undisposed of are considered as on the Speaker's table, and whether they would be covered by the resolution which has just been read?

The SPEAKER. That is hardly a parliamentary question at this time. The resolution, as read, provides for bills on any one of the Calendars of the House.

Mr. McCOID. But these bills reported from the Committee of the Whole and undisposed of are not on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. McCOID. Then are they on the Speaker's table, and would they be covered by this resolution?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. They are like any other matter pending before the House.

Mr. McCOID. So that under this order——

Mr. ANDERSON. I call for the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. There is no order before the House, and therefore this is not a proceeding in the House under the rules. Is the demand for the regular order withdrawn?

Mr. ANDERSON. It is not.

HOMESTEAD-LAW MONUMENT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a memorial, accompanied with a specimen of the marble from which it is proposed to erect the monument to which the memorial relates. The Clerk will read the memorial.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, the general agent of the National Homestead Monument Association, located at Mitchell, Davison County, Dakota Territory, in behalf of said association and the homesteaders of the United States, respectfully petition that your honorable body will, at the earliest practical date, appropriate land or money to aid in building a monument in said city to commemorate the homestead law. The homesteaders, grateful for the homestead law and for what it has done for themselves and their families, desire to commemorate that enactment by the erection of a suitable and enduring monument, as an evidence to the present and future ages of their appreciation and gratitude. This law, the most beneficent of the world in relation to home and family, operates in twenty-seven States and Territories, and it has given to the homesteaders an area of territory larger than Great Britain and Ireland, and about equal to the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Kentucky, more than 3,000,000 people enjoying its bounty. This law recognizes the rights of the people to the soil. The old landed system held the land for the few. The tillers were mere serfs. This paternal law reserves the land for the people, for them to possess and enjoy as freemen. It has increased the number of our homes, the strong citadels of the nation, and added to the prosperity and happiness of the people and to the wealth and power and glory of the whole country; and its enactment has rendered this age an epoch in the history of our country and made more stable our system of government by establishing it more firmly than ever in the hearts of the people. The great praise this, the people's law; the poor bless it. Your petitioner and those for whom he acts, heartily desiring that this monument be built, will to that end do their part. Knowing that the homestead law is a great national benefaction, and believing that your honorable body will grant the appropriation asked, your petitioners will ever pray.

JAMES DAVIES.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, this memorial will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COX, of New York. I think it should be referred to the Committee on the Library. The bill which I introduced——

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope my friend from New York will consent that this memorial shall go to the Committee on Public Lands. It properly belongs there.

Mr. COX, of New York. If the gentleman from Indiana, who is an old homesteader, insists on that reference, I give way.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. CASSIDY, by unanimous consent the Committee on War Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution of the State of Nevada relative to the direct war-tax of 1861; and it was referred to the Committee on Claims.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WELLER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to ask whether under the rules it would be proper at this time to move that the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] be printed in the RECORD and lie over until to-morrow morning. If so, I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks that the resolution which the gentleman from Kentucky presented this morning from the Committee on Rules, and afterward withdrew, be printed in the RECORD and lie over till to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

A MEMBER. Let it be reported again.

The SPEAKER. It is suggested that the resolution be reported again, and then printed in the RECORD and lie over.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then, with the consent of the other members of the Committee on Rules, I will ask to resubmit the resolution to the House, with the understanding that it be printed in the RECORD and lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. WELLER. It is a very far-reaching resolution and an innovation.

Mr. KEIFER. Perhaps after consultation there may be, by unanimous consent of the Committee on Rules, some amendments to the resolution as proposed this morning. I suggest that the gentleman from Kentucky withhold the resolution for a little while, and then let it be printed in the RECORD as it may be offered and go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. WELLER. Then I ask whether the proposed amendments may not also be printed?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly; that is the object.

The SPEAKER. There are no amendments pending. The gentleman from Ohio suggests that the resolution be withheld for the present until members of the committee can confer, and that it be printed in the RECORD in the form in which it may be agreed upon by the committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. STORM. I ask unanimous consent that members desiring to offer amendments may be allowed to have them printed also.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is not yet presented. The Chair will entertain such requests when the matter shall come before the House.

Mr. WELLER. I wish further to inquire whether the amendments may not be printed with the resolution?

The SPEAKER. That is a matter with which the Chair has now nothing to do. The resolution has not yet been presented to the House.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Leave for withdrawal of papers from the files of the House was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. HOPKINS, in the case of Col. Alexander Montgomery, no report having been made thereon.

To Mr. CULBERTSON, of Kentucky, in the pension case of Thomas J. McIntyre, without leaving copies.

LAWRENCEBURG HARBOR, INDIANA.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from the Chief of Engineers of a survey and preliminary examination of Lawrenceburg Harbor, Indiana; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

MOBILE RIVER AND HARBOR.

Copen; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bill H. R. 4973 was ordered to be laid on the table.

WORK OF THE TENTH CENSUS.

Mr. COX, of New York, from the Select Committee to Ascertain the Results of the Tenth Census, reported, as a substitute for H. Res. 289, a joint resolution (H. Res. 322) authorizing the Superintendent of the Tenth Census to continue the work on the Tenth Census; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ARTICLES FOR COLORED RACES' WORLD'S EXPOSITION.

Mr. KELLEY, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution (H. Res. 290) providing for the admission of articles from foreign countries to be placed on exhibition at the world's exposition of the arts, &c., of the colored races to be held in Chicago in September, 1885; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GEORGE S. HUNT & CO.

Mr. REED, of Maine, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 688) for the relief of George S. Hunt & Co.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CASE OF KILBOURN VS. JOHN G. THOMPSON.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report; which was read, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be instructed to include in the sundry civil appropriation bill for the ensuing fiscal year the following clauses, to wit:

To Hallet Kilbourn, on account of and in full of judgment recovered by him against John G. Thompson, late Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, the sum of $20,000, with interest thereon from the 26th day of March, 1884, until paid, and $143.17, costs in the same.

To John G. Thompson, late Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, the sum of $2,650 for expenses of every kind incurred and for labor and attention in the case of Hallet Kilbourn against said Thompson.

To Messrs. Shellabarger & Wilson, attorneys at law, in Washington city, $2,000, fees for services in said case, and to William H. Smith, of Washington city, $1,000, for services rendered in the same case.

SINKING OF THE TALLAPOOSA.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I rise to present a privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs make the following report:

"Your committee, having had under consideration resolution of the House introduced January 26, 1885, calling upon the Secretary of the Navy for a list of the officers, crew, and passengers on the United States steamer Tallapoosa at the time she was sunk, and for other information concerning said vessel, respectfully report the same back with the recommendation that it do pass."

The resolution (introduced by Mr. GEORGE D. WISE) is as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to report to this House, at the earliest possible date, the order or orders under which the United States steamer Tallapoosa was cruising at the time she was sunk by a collision with another vessel, at what date she left the city of Washington and the several ports at which she entered or places visited up to the time of said collision, and what was her destination; also a list of the officers, crew, and passengers on said vessel, and what special duties, if any, were assigned to said officers and crew.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELIZABETH COMSTOCK.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill S. 1242.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been called.

Mr. LACEY. I wish to say in a word that this is a bill which ought to pass. A similar bill has been reported unanimously by the Committee on Ways and Means of the House.

Mr. WELLER. I was unable to hear the statement of the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reimburse Elizabeth Comstock, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum, not exceeding $722.78, as she may show by satisfactory proof that she paid as customs dues on articles donated for the relief of colored emigrants.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. LACEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several members called for the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the call for the regular order will not be insisted on until I ask unanimous consent for the passage of a bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to present a report from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to call up the Mexican pension bill, and insist on the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order. Unanimous consent was given for the presentation of reports by gentlemen who were not in their seats when their committees were called.

CATHOLIC CHURCH AT CARROLLTOWN, PA.

Mr. HISCOCK, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7551) admitting free of duty an altar and church regalia for the Catholic church at Carrolltown, Pa.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SAINT JOHN'S UNIVERSITY, COLLEGEVILLE, MINN.

Mr. HISCOCK, from the Committee on Ways and Means, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 3941) authorizing the refunding of duties paid on six statues from Munich, Bavaria, by Saint John's University, of Collegeville, Minn.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MONUMENT TO HOMESTEAD LAW.

Mr. COX, of New York, introduced a bill (H. R. 8137) granting lands in aid of the erection of a monument commemorative of the homestead law; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM W. THOMAS.

On motion of Mr. REED, of Maine, by unanimous consent, it was ordered that the Senate be requested to return, for the correction of certain errors, the bill (H. R. 691) for the relief of William W. Thomas.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CLAY, indefinitely; and

To Mr. BREITUNG, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

SCHEDULES OF CLAIMS ALLOWED.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting schedules of claims allowed by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now move that we go to the Speaker's table for the purpose of considering the Mexican pension bill.

The SPEAKER. That motion in that form is not in order. The House can not go to the Speaker's table for the purpose of considering any particular measure.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I move that we go to the Speaker's table for the purpose of considering the bill there.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and I announce that my intention is to call up the river and harbor bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] moves to proceed to the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table. Pending that motion, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] moves that the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and announces that he proposes to consider the river and harbor bill.

Mr. HENLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS], for information, how much time the consideration of the river and harbor bill will probably consume?

Mr. WILLIS. That is a question that the gentleman himself can answer as well as I can. It will occupy the time just as long as the House chooses to consider it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parlimentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Has the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS], to go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of calling up the river and harbor bill, priority over my motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so. It is provided by the rules of the House that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors shall have the same privilege to report as the Committee on Appropriations have to report general appropriation bills; and when the House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union revenue bills, general appropriation bills, and river and harbor bills have preference.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WILLIS. Pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the bill which I propose to call up, the river and harbor bill, be limited to two hours.

Mr. ANDERSON. Make it one hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] asks unanimous consent that general debate on the river and harbor bill be limited to two hours.

Mr. REED, of Maine, and Mr. WASHBURN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 112, noes 136.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. That is right.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have already stated that my purpose is to call up the Mexican pension bill.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were—ayes 39, noes 138.

So (more than one-fifth of the last vote voting in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 150, nays 102, not voting 71; as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 7619) to release the reversionary right of the Government of the United States to certain lands in the city of Detroit and State of Michigan.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, before the result of this vote is announced, for the information and convenience of the House I again ask unanimous consent that the report which I made from the Committee on Rules this morning lie over until to-morrow, and be printed in the RECORD without being read.

The SPEAKER. It will be so ordered.

The report of Mr. BLACKBURN is as follows:

The Committee on Rules, having had under consideration various propositions referred to it by the House, beg leave to report back the accompanying resolution in lieu of all others referred, and recommend its passage:

Resolved, That each morning during the remainder of this session, immediately after the approval of the Journal, there shall be set apart thirty minutes for motions to take up and consider such bills or resolutions on any of the Calendars of the House, or on the Speaker's table, or bills favorably reported from the Calendars undisposed of, as the member making the motion may designate; and the bills or resolutions so designated shall be immediately considered, unless objected to by at least five members; but no bill or resolution taken up for consideration under this order shall be debated for more than ten minutes, which time shall be equally divided between the supporters and the opponents of the measure. If the yeas and nays shall be ordered on any such bill or resolution, or any proposed amendment thereto, and the call of the roll shall be commenced before the expiration of the said thirty minutes, the same shall be completed before the regular order of business is entered upon: Provided, That while this order remains in force the Speaker shall not entertain any requests for unanimous consent to consider any bill or resolution at any other time than herein provided; but he may entertain such requests to refer bills or resolutions to committees or to dispose of Senate amendments to bills which have passed the House.

Mr. VALENTINE. I desire to give notice that when this matter comes up for consideration I shall offer amendments to strike out "thirty minutes" and insert "one hour;" and to strike out "five" as the number of members required to object and insert "ten."

A MEMBER. That does not require any notice.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. Before the vote is announced, I believe it to be in the interest of public business to try to secure some arrangement as to the time to be occupied in general debate. If gentlemen will suggest some time I think we can now agree. We all recognize the necessity of getting through this business as rapidly as possible. I would suggest that three or four hours be allowed for debate; or if any gentleman wishes to suggest any other time——

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think it might do to conclude the debate at 4 o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. VALENTINE. This is very important legislation.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] that this river and harbor bill has been but recently presented to the House, and that an opportunity should be afforded for members to understand its meaning as a whole. It is a long and somewhat complicated bill. It embraces entirely new matters, which have been but recently presented here; and there has been no opportunity to consider the measure. But I presume an understanding might be reached that general debate should close at 4 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. WILLIS. I will not press the question at this time.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I desire to give notice that when the pending appropriation bill has been concluded I shall endeavor to call up the contested-election case of Pool vs. Skinner.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Before the result of the vote is announced, I would like to submit to the Chair a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to ask whether, when the House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole, bills raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors should not be called up in their turn as they stand upon the Calendar?

The SPEAKER. That is not a question for the present occupant of the chair to decide. It is a question to be presented to the chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The Speaker of the House does not decide such questions.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. If the House will indulge me a moment, perhaps I can obviate the necessity of making that point. I believe under the rules it would be competent to call up in Committee of the Whole the bill giving effect to the Mexican treaty; but I have no wish to antagonize in any way the spirit of the House or to interfere with the business which the gentleman from Kentucky proposes to bring before it. I do wish to say, however, that it concerns the national honor that this bill in reference to the Mexican treaty shall at some time or other receive consideration. I do not say that it ought to be passed. I hope it will not be rejected. But it ought to be considered, because——

Mr. ELLIS. Is this proceeding by unanimous consent? If so, I object.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Because a special provision is inserted in the treaty——

Mr. ELLIS. I object, and demand the regular order.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Then the gentleman will have to take the consequences.]

The result of the vote on the motion of Mr. WILLIS was announced as above stated.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering appropriation bills.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The chairman has just stated that the House is in Committee of the Whole on appropriation bills. I respectfully submit that the House is in Committee of the Whole and not upon appropriation bills. I make the point that the order in which bills must be considered is stated in the fourth paragraph of Rule XXIII of the Digest:

> In committees of the Whole House business on their Calendars shall be taken up in regular order, except bills for raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors.

I respectfully submit that bills of these three classes—that is to say, bills raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors—must be taken up in their order on the Calendar.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from New York misapprehends the rule under which the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] was made. The motion to be in order must have been made, as I understand, under paragraph 9 of Rule XVI; and this rule gives to the member making the motion the right to designate one of two classes of bills—first bills raising revenue, and second appropriation bills. If, as I understand, this was a motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills, revenue bills can not be called up at all during this session of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I respectfully remind the gentleman from Ohio that the Speaker, in submitting the question, stated the motion to be that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House without any qualification, and the notes will show it.

Mr. KEIFER. I think that would raise a question of fact, because my recollection is the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] made the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering appropriation bills.

Mr. FORNEY. General appropriation bills.

Mr. KEIFER. And I think the answer of the Speaker was to that question as the notes will show.

Mr. WILLIS. It is proper to state, Mr. Chairman, that I did not make that motion. I made the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and stated that my purpose was when we got into committee to call up the river and harbor appropriation bill. Now, if the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] calls up a revenue bill and the chairman decides he is in order I shall object, in order to test the sense of the House as to whether it will go on with the consideration of that bill.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I wish to say to the gentleman from Kentucky and to the House that I did not propose to be in his way, but when my request to be permitted to make a reasonable statement by unanimous consent is objected to on this floor I am compelled to take to my rights under the rules.

Mr. WILLIS. I only hope the gentleman will not punish those of us who are with him because of that objection.

Mr. GIBSON. Under the circumstances, because others have been unreasonable I hope the gentleman from New York will not be unreasonable himself, and punish us for what was done by somebody else and over whom we have no control whatever.

Mr. KEIFER. It is easy to determine the fact by referring to the reporter's notes.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion was not made under that rule. This is not a general appropriation bill; it is simply a bill appropriating money.

Mr. KEIFER. I agree this is not a general appropriation bill in the sense of the rule, but it has been given rights by the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The rights given by the rule are merely to report but not for consideration.

Mr. KEIFER. That is true under Rule XI.

The CHAIRMAN. Hence the Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] is correct and that he is entitled to have the bill he designates, provided it is first on the Calendar, first called. The rule refers to three classes of bills, which are named in the rule itself. Each shall be called in its order on the Calendar.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. This matter can quickly be disposed of if the committee will only indulge me for one minute, after which I will waive the consideration of this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York shall be heard for one minute, after which he states he will waive the further consideration of this matter?

Mr. REED. Let the matter take its regular course.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine objects, and the Clerk will call the first bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5678) to amend the act entitled "An act to prevent the importation of adulterated and spurious teas," approved March 2, 1883.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move that be passed over informally. I have charge of that bill from the Committee on Ways and Means.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. REED, of Maine. This must be done by the House.

The CHAIRMAN. That can be waived if the gentleman objects.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I do object.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that it be laid aside.

The committee rose informally; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having reached on the Calendar the bill (H. R. 5678) to amend the act entitled "An act to prevent the importation of adulterated and spurious teas," approved March 2, 1883, objection was made, and under the rule the committee had directed him to report the fact to the House for instruction.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the committee proceed to consider the bill?

The House voted in the negative; and thereupon the committee resumed its session, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will call the next bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6751) to abolish the discriminating duty on works of art the production of foreign and of American artists.

Mr. WILLIS. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The committee rose informally; and the Speaker resumed the chair.

Mr. BAYNE rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to have the bill read in committee if he wishes.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not wish it read, but I wish to raise the point against this motion.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. KELLEY. I should like to have that bill read. It came from the Committee on Ways and Means, and I think is a very meritorious measure.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to raise a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to raise the question of consideration. I claim that under clause 4 of Rule XXIII, the House having gone into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills on the Calendar, the river and harbor bill takes precedence of any other bill, and that it is now in order for the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to call it up, and that to proceed to do away with each succeeding bill as it appears upon the Calendar is wholly unnecessary and a mere waste of time. I make the point that whole proceeding is obviated by clause 4 of Rule XXIII.

Mr. KELLEY. I call for the reading of the bill to abolish discriminating duties on works of art.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. BAYNE. That is not a bill raising revenue; that is a bill defeating revenue. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY. It relates to revenue.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule the gentleman from Pennsylvania recites speaks of three classes of bills—bills raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for improving rivers and harbors; and under the general designation of bills raising revenue have been considered all bills affecting the revenue. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON. It is whether, when the question of consideration is raised, the reading of the title of a bill is not all that is necessary—whether it is required to read the whole bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not. Any member demanding the reading of a bill on which he is called to vote has the right to have it read.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask the consideration of that bill. This is a measure involving our own diplomatic relations as well as the question relating to art.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order. Objection has been made to the consideration of the bill, and all the committee can do under the rule is to rise and report that fact to the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the Calendar, had reached the bill (H. R. 6751) to abolish the discriminating duty on works of art the production of foreign and of American artists, and objection having been made to its consideration, the committee had risen and directed him to report the objection to the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the committee proceed to consider that bill?

Mr. KELLEY. I think, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. KELLEY. I was going to ask for the reading of the bill in the House.

Mr. REAGAN. I object to its being read again.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman has a right to have it read.

Mr. REAGAN. It has been already reported.

The SPEAKER. But not in the House.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask now that it be not only read but heard.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House direct the committee to proceed to the consideration of this bill?

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 48, noes 87.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the House refused to direct the committee to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union resumed its session.

The next revenue bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4186) to refund duties upon goods on shipboard when the tariff act of March 3, 1883, went into effect.

Mr. WILLIS. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, the committee will rise and report that fact to the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the Calendar, had reached the bill (H. R. 4186) to refund duties upon goods on shipboard when the tariff act of March 3, 1883, went into effect, when objection was made to its consideration, whereupon the committee had risen and directed him to report that fact to the House.

Mr. GUENTHER. I ask for the reading of the bill.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House direct the committee to proceed with the consideration of this bill?

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative.

So the House refused to direct the committee to proceed with the consideration of the bill.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIS. Will it be in order to ask unanimous consent that all these revenue bills, except the one the gentleman from New York desires to have a vote upon, be passed over by consent?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that that bill to which the gentleman refers is next in order on the Calendar.

The next revenue bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7366) to carry into effect a convention between the United States of America and the United States of Mexico, signed on the 20th day of January, 1883.

Mr. WILLIS. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, the committee will rise and report that fact to the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the Calendar, had reached the bill (H. R. 7366) to carry into effect the convention between the United States of America and the United States of Mexico, signed on the 20th day of January, 1883, when objection was made to its consideration, whereupon the committee had risen and directed him to report that fact to the House.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I ask for the reading of the bill.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be directed to proceed with the consideration of this bill?

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 84, noes 91.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 57 members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 105, nays 144, not voting 74; as follows:

So the House refused to direct the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider the bill.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names of members voting be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. CLAY with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, on all political questions, for this day.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of New York, with Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire, for this day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union resumed its sitting, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill next in order for consideration.

Mr. WILLIS. There are only three other revenue matters, and I hope unanimous consent will be given to me now to call up the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to pass over all other bills in order on the Calendar for the purpose of calling up the river and harbor bill.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I hope that unanimous consent will be given.

Mr. HISCOCK. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7429) to modify existing laws relating to duties on imports and the collection of the revenue.

Mr. WILLIS. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The committee rose; and Mr. MILLS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the Calendar, had reached bill H. R. 7429, when objection was made to the consideration thereof, and the committee thereupon rose, and he reported such objection to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House instruct the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to proceed to consider the bill H. R. 7429?

The question being taken, it was decided in the negative.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union resumed its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next business on the Calendar in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Report 2027. Report and resolution relative to affairs of the Alaska Commercial Company.

Mr. WILLIS. I object to the consideration of that report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not say from what has been read that this is a bill in order. The fact is not disclosed that this is either a revenue bill or an appropriation bill. The Clerk will report the next bill in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8029) to authorize the establishment of export-tobacco manufactories, and for drawback upon imported articles used in manufacturing exported tobacco.

Mr. WILLIS. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The committee rose; and Mr. MILLS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had the Calendar under consideration, had reached the bill H. R. 8029, when objection was made to the consideration thereof, whereupon the committee rose, and he reported such objection to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House instruct the committee to proceed to consider the bill H. R. 8029?

Mr. REED, of Maine. I ask for the reading of that bill.

The bill was read.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Several messages, in writing, from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 7768) to authorize the National Bank of Bloomington, Ill., to change its name to the First National Bank of Bloomington;

An act (H. R. 7963) to remove the political disabilities of J. Pembroke Jones, of Virginia;

An act (H. R. 7872) to remove the political disabilities of Gabriel H. Hill, of Virginia;

An act (H. R. 5639) extending the jurisdiction of the justices of the peace in Wyoming Territory; and

An act (H. R. 4681) for the relief of Yost Harbaugh.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PETERS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7619) to release the reversionary right of the Government of the United States to certain lands in the city of Detroit and State of Michigan; and

A bill (H. R. 7874) making additional appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House instruct the committee to consider the bill H. R. 8029?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 10, noes 77.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. WILLIS, and the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. GEORGE D. WISE.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 5, noes 75.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE (one of the tellers). I do not call for further count.

So (further count not being called for) the House refused to instruct the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider the bill H. R. 8029.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union resumed its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Calendar in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8130) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors and for other purposes.

Mr. HISCOCK. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had the Calendar under consideration, the bill H. R. 8130 was reached, and when objection was made to the consideration thereof the committee rose, and he reported such objection to the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be directed to proceed to the consideration of the bill H. R. 8130?

Mr. WILLIS. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIS. Do I understand that an affirmative vote will take up the consideration of the river and harbor bill?

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the committee be directed to proceed to the consideration of the bill?

The question being taken, the Speaker stated that in the judgment of the Chair the "ayes" had it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 113, noes 21.

So (further count not being called for) the House directed the committee to consider the bill H. R. 8130.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union resumed its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee, in pursuance of the order of the House, will proceed with the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8130) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before that request is acted upon I wish to ask the Chair whether or no, if the reading of the bill be dispensed with, the point of order upon any particular paragraph of the bill will be in order when it is first read?

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair it will be in order when the bill is first read. There being no objection, the formal reading of the bill is dispensed with.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, our committee——

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] has been recognized.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Before the reading of this bill is dispensed with, I desire to inquire whether the bill as it lies on our desks is in perfect accordance with the views of the committee or whether there are amendments reserved by the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. That is a question about which the Chair has no information.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Then I call for the reading of the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I will say to the gentleman that I know of no amendments in the hands of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The formal reading of the bill has been dispensed with by unanimous consent.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I insist that I have risen in time to ask for the reading of the bill. I have no objection to dispense with the first reading of the bill if the committee will assure us that we have the real bill in our hands; but if this is not the committee's bill, then I call for the reading.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] can probably ascertain what he desires to know if he will ask some one who does know. For instance, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] can probably give him the information.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the gentleman [Mr. WHITE] has in his hands, but if he has House bill 8130 he has the river and harbor bill, and there are no amendments of the committee that I know of.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the answer of his colleague satisfactory to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE]?

Mr. WHITE. If I understand my colleague, he says that the bill of the House No. 8130 is the report of the committee. What I ask is: Is this a perfect bill, entirely satisfactory to the committee, or do they hold in reserve certain amendments? If they do, I shall ask for the reading of the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I state, Mr. Chairman, that this is the bill which the committee propose to press for consideration and adoption, and there are no amendments that I recall which the committee have or propose to offer to the House; there is nothing behind.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Then I do not insist upon the readings, but I was told that this was not the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, with the permission now of the House, and of each and every member of it, I will make a few suggestions in regard to the bill which the Committee on Rivers and Harbors have instructed me to report. Our committee fully realize the fact that we are in the closing hours of this Congress, and it is not the desire of the committee—certainly it is not the desire of myself—to do more at present than to call attention to the leading features and recommendations of this bill.

As the Committee of the Whole are aware, it is made the duty of the Secretary of War to submit every year estimates as to river and harbor improvements, and, among other things, he is required to state what amount can be "profitably expended" during the fiscal year. In pursuance of the law he has reported to the House and to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors (representing the House in these matters) that his estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, are $34,507,630. Of this amount our committee has allowed the sum of $12,323,700; which, after deducting certain matters that were not estimated for, is about one-third of the official estimates. This amount, $12,323,700, it is hoped will not be deemed excessive as compared with $12,069,000, the amount of the bill as it passed the House last session, and $18,743,875, the amount of the last bill prior to that.

The principal items of the present bill are as follows:

One hundred and forty-two rivers, aggregating the sum of $7,600,600; one hundred and two harbors, $3,368,600; four breakwaters, $160,000; seven channels and inlets, $821,500; four harbors of refuge, $152,000; three ice-harbors, $23,000; for snagging and wrecking purposes, $177,000; one dry-dock, $65,000; one canal, $300,000; gauging waters, $6,000; examination surveys and contingencies, $100,000; expenses of the board to be known as the United States harbor board, $50,000; making, as I have said, an aggregate sum of $12,323,700 as the total amount recommended in the bill.

Of the items contained in the Book of Estimates one hundred and forty have been rejected by the committee. Two or three new works have been recommended. One of these is the "construction of the canal from the Illinois River, near the town of Hennepin, to the Mississippi River, at or below Rock Island." For the beginning of the work the sum of $300,000 is recommended.

Another new work inaugurated by this bill is the improvement of the harbor of Galveston upon plans, specifications, and estimates to be submitted by Capt. James B. Eads, and for which an initial appropriation of $750,000 is recommended by a majority of the committee.

In the last bill an appropriation of $100,000 was made for a national harbor of refuge at Sandy Bay, Cape Ann, Massachusetts, but before any money could be expended, it was provided in the bill that a board of three engineers should be appointed by the Secretary of War, who should decide that this point was the best location on the coast between Boston and Portland for such a harbor. That commission has made a report to the present Congress; and upon it an additional appropriation of $100,000 has been asked and allowed by the committee.

The commission in their report estimate that this work, if carried out, will cost in the neighborhood of $8,000,000 for its construction; $2,000,000 for its defense, if it be made a harbor of defense; and half a million dollars for lighting—making a total for all these purposes of $10,500,000. It is proper to state that the local engineer immediately in charge makes a much smaller estimate, ranging from five to six million dollars.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER AND ESTIMATES.

The largest appropriation in the bill is for the Mississippi River; the committee have appropriated from its mouth to its source $3,855,000. An itemization of this aggregate sum is as follows:

Reservoirs at headwaters, $35,000.

Saint Paul to Des Moines Rapids, $200,000; Des Moines Rapids (dry-dock) $65,000; Des Moines Rapids to mouth of Illinois River, $200,000.

From mouth of Illinois River to mouth of Ohio River, $400,000; from mouth of Ohio River to mouth of the passes, $2,800,000; removal of snags, wrecks, and other obstructions, $55,000.

Survey of Mississippi, $75,000; operating snagboats on the Upper Mississippi, $5,000.

Examinations and surveys at South Pass, $10,000.

Gauging of the Lower Mississippi, $5,000.

Making, as before stated, a total of $3,855,000. The estimates submitted for the above items were as follows:

Reservoir at headwaters of Mississippi River: Continuing operations	$140,000
Surveys for reservoirs at sources of Mississippi River, and Saint Croix, Chippewa, and Wisconsin Rivers	50,000
Improving Upper Mississippi River: Operating snagboats	60,000
Improving Mississippi River from Saint Paul to Des Moines Rapids, Minnesota; Iowa, Missouri, Illinois, and Wisconsin: Continuing improvement	500,000
Improving Rock Island Rapids, Mississippi River: Continuing improvement	13,000
Improving Des Moines Rapids, Mississippi River, Iowa and Illinois: Completing operations under modified project	91,700
Constructing dry-dock at Des Moines Rapids Canal: completing construction	65,000
Improving Mississippi River from Des Moines Rapids to mouth of Illinois River: Continuing improvement	500,000
Improving Mississippi River between mouths of the Ohio and Illinois Rivers: Continuing improvement	$1,000,000
Improving Mississippi River: Continuing the improvement from Cairo, Ill., to the head of the passes, including the improvement of the Red River at and below the head of the Atchafalaya	7,000,000
Improving Mississippi River above Falls of Saint Anthony: Continuing improvement	10,000
Improving Saint Anthony Falls, Minnesota: Continuing improvement	50,000
Survey of the Mississippi River between the head of the passes and its headwaters: Continuing surveys now in progress, and to make additional surveys and examinations of the river and its tributaries; to make such additional examinations and investigations, topographical, hydrographical, hydrometrical, as are necessary for maturing a plan for permanent improvement of the entire river	100,000
Continuing removal of snags, wrecks, and other obstructions from Mississippi River	170,000

Making a grand total, according to the estimates, of $9,729,700. The committee have therefore allowed about 40 per cent. of the estimates for that river.

APPROPRIATIONS RECOMMENDED FOR OTHER LARGE RIVERS.

In addition to the Mississippi River other great rivers receive the following amounts:

Missouri River, including surveys, snagging, &c., $590,000; Ohio River, $350,000; Tennessee River, including the Muscle Shoals, $350,000; Columbia River, $165,000; Delaware River, $125,000; Illinois River, $100,000; Kentucky River, $200,000; Potomac River, $150,000; James River, $150,000; Great Kanawha River, $175,000; Cape Fear River, $70,500; Red River, $65,000; Saginaw River, $50,000; Monongahela River, $50,000.

Making a total for the above fourteen rivers of $2,590,500. Adding this total to the amount proposed to be expended on the Mississippi River, will give a grand total of $6,445,500.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to inquire of the gentleman whether this bill contains the same limitation that has been contained in previous appropriation bills as to the manner in which the money is to be expended upon the Mississippi River.

Mr. WILLIS. The wording of the present bill, as I understand, is substantially the same as the last bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. In the last bill was there a provision that the money appropriated for the Mississippi River should only be expended upon the improvement of the navigation of the river? There was some legislation upon that subject, I believe.

Mr. WILLIS. There was no legislation of that kind in the last river and harbor bill. The gentleman probably has in his mind a resolution offered in the last session touching that question, which was voted down. The last river and harbor bill followed the estimate of the Engineers, and there was no limitation of that character.

Adding to the aggregate of all these fifteen rivers, the improvement of Hay Lake Channel, Michigan, $125,000, and the channel through the Saint John's River, $150,000, we have a total for fifteen rivers and two channels of $6,720,500.

The total amount recommended by the bill for all the rivers included in it, one hundred and forty-two, and seven channels, is $7,922,100. It will thus be seen that the fifteen rivers and two channels which have been named embrace over three-fourths of the amounts recommended for such improvements.

There are in the present bill recommendations for other rivers, as follows: Three at $4,000, twenty at $5,000, six at $6,000 and upward, seven at $7,000, six at $15,000, twelve at $10,000, two at $15,000, two at $17,000, twenty at $20,000 and upward, making seventy-eight rivers, for which the total amount appropriated as recommended is $955,000.

HARBOR ESTIMATES AND APPROPRIATIONS.

Appropriations were asked for in the estimates for five ice-harbors, four breakwaters, and one hundred and four harbors. The following are the leading appropriations recommended by the committee:

Galveston Harbor, $750,000; Sandy Bay, Massachusetts, $100,000; Cleveland, Ohio, $100,000; New Orleans, $150,000; Charleston, $150,000; Humboldt, Cal., $100,000; Sabine Pass, Texas, $125,000; Mobile, $120,000; Aranzas Pass, $100,000; Savannah, $85,000; Toledo, $82,500; Chicago, $75,000; Milwaukee, $75,000; Cumberland Sound, Georgia, $75,000; Buffalo, $75,000; Baltimore, $75,000; Oakland, Cal., $75,000; Oswego, N. Y., $50,000; Boston, $50,000; Newburyport, Mass., $50,000, and Norfolk, $50,000, making a total for twenty-one harbors of $2,512,000, which, as compared with the total recommended for harbors in the bill, is two-thirds of the whole amount.

Mr. HEPBURN. What is your estimate or your idea of the cost of the improvement of Galveston Harbor under the plans which the bill seems to adopt?

Mr. WILLIS. I will state to the gentleman that the only way I can answer his question is by referring to the bill presented for the consideration of our committee, but which was not adopted. That bill called for $7,750,000 as the amount necessary under what is known as the Eads plan for the improvement of that harbor, but the committee have other information from the late Chief of Engineers, who held that this work even according to Captain Eads's plan could be done much lower than that, and they did not take the bill of Captain Eads, but placed the construction of the work under the charge of the Secretary of War, to be done under the plans and estimates to be submitted by Eads. I will state further that according to the report of the Senate, which adopted Captain Eads's plan, $1,500,000 of the total called for in Eads's bill was for contingencies, and deducting this the aggregate amount under the Eads contract would be $6,250,000. If my own opinion were asked I would express it, as drawn from various sources, that this harbor can be improved even on this plan at one-half what the bill calls for, which would be about $4,000,000.

Mr. HEPBURN. What was the plan commended to the committee by persons from that locality most familiar with the subject?

Mr. WILLIS. The bill was of course urged by those who were anxious to secure deep water, but not to the exclusion of the Government, and the committee in its final action has adopted not the Eads bill, but the Eads plan, and have required the Secretary of War on that plan, as cheaply and economically as possible, to improve that harbor.

Mr. HEPBURN. You adopted Eads himself.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope so, to some extent.

M. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Is the plan of Eads to result in the permanent improvement of the harbor, or does he not say in his plan it will be improved for a certain number of years, after which further appropriations will be required to continue the improvement?

Mr. WILLIS. The only answer I can make to the gentleman is that the committee have required it to be made with a view to the permanent improvement of the harbor. Of course we know no better than the gentleman himself how permanent it will be. All these improvements are hoped to be permanent.

In further answer to the gentleman's question that Captain Eads's plan, as stated by himself to the subcommittee, contemplates the construction of jetties of stone. The jetties now in process of construction there, as I am informed, are made not of stone but of willow and other like materials, and are subject to the depredations of what is known as the teredo, which rapidly destroys them. It is because of the facts disclosed in the report of the Secretary of War, showing the large expenditure heretofore made at Galveston is liable to be lost to the Government through the attacks of these marine insects, that the committee have been largely influenced in its present action. The plan of Captain Eads contemplates, I say again, that the jetties must be constructed of rock and concrete, and therefore will be as permanent as any human works can be made. The bill requires that they shall be equally strong with those at the mouth of the Mississippi River, which are capped now with concrete, and have stood the test of storm and time up to the present moment.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I ask for information whether Captain Eads suggests this appropriation of $1,000,000, more or less—I do not exactly remember the sum—will secure the improvement of the harbor for only about eight or ten years?

Mr. WILLIS. No, sir. The gentleman has in his mind a clause of the bill similar to that of the Eads jetty bill for the mouth of the Mississippi River, requiring him to keep it in good condition for a certain number of years and giving him an annual compensation for so doing; but the committee, believing that the jetties constructed on the plan proposed by him would be permanent, have declined to enter into any such arrangement.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I desire to say that it appeared to me from the information I have gotten upon the subject that it was going to cost about $1,000,000 a year to keep the harbor in the condition in which it is left after the work is completed. I would like to understand if that is correct; if it is believed that it will cost any such sum to keep it open.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman is entirely mistaken in that supposition. Nowhere in this bill, or the Eads bill, is there anything of that kind. The bill which is commonly known as the Coke or Eads bill provided that when one foot of depth should have been secured by Captain Eads he should receive the sum of $1,000,000, and probably the gentleman is of the impression that we recommend that bill. If so, he is mistaken.

The bill to which I have referred further provided, on securing thirty feet depth and a certain width, that for the purpose of keeping it in that order the sum of $100,000 a year was to be allowed. But there is nothing of the kind in the bill which we have reported to the House. We have made no contract with Captain Eads except for his services as advisory engineer.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But whatever is in the bill reported to the House by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, the question after all is, if you commence the improvements at all, how much they are going to cost in order to finish them, and how long they are going to remain in good condition. That is what we want to understand. If we are going to begin a series of improvements at this point which will only last some eight or ten years, then we will be able to estimate the cost per annum.

Mr. WILLIS. I can only answer the gentleman from Maine that the proposed plan is to construct the jetties of concrete and rock. How long such a work will endure of course I can not determine any better than he can; but from the experience of the past we may believe, with all reason, that they will be very permanent in their character. Every gentleman can determine that question for himself.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I am not antagonizing the gentleman's bill.

Mr. WILLIS. Of course, I understand that.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I am only trying to get information.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The best engineers believe that such work as contemplated here will be of a very enduring and permanent character.

Mr. WILLIS. We have endeavored, Mr. Chairman, in this bill to protect the Government in that direction as far as we could by requiring the very best character of work.

I have thus, sir, presented the leading features of the appropriations contained in this bill. There are three or four matters of legislation which will come up for consideration as the bill is read for action under the five-minute rule. One of them contemplates the appointment by the President of a commission, to be known as the "United States Harbor Commission," which commission, however, is of a temporary character, lasting only one year.

The object of the creation of that commission is to examine into the harbors, principally those upon our Southwestern coast, which are in their nature somewhat the same as at Galveston, and to report all of the facts ascertained by them to the next Congress, so that when the next river and harbor bill is framed the House will have the means for an intelligent decision. It was claimed on the one hand and denied on the other that at many points in the United States the jetty improvements were not of a permanent or enduring character, and in this conflict of evidence the committee thought it to be its duty to the House and to the country to provide some method of ascertaining intelligently the facts in connection with each one of the harbors which had been called in question.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Will the gentleman from Kentucky allow me right there?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I ask him why the duties of this board are limited to the examination of harbors being constructed on the jetty plan or system? Why not extend the duties of the commission to the examination of other works, and generally to the works which have been undertaken by the Government for the improvement of our rivers and harbors?

Mr. WILLIS. The principal reason is that the time allowed the commission, one year, would not warrant the examination of all the harbors in the United States.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Besides that, they are not all called in question.

Mr. WILLIS. They are not in the same position as those harbors with shifting sands in the bottom in the Southwest, like Galveston. There is no complaint against the method of constructing or improving harbors in the Northeast and in the North, where they have solid rock foundations. But the argument has been made in connection with the harbors having these shifting foundations of sand, and the object of this commission is to ascertain the facts and report upon them.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Will the gentleman allow me a moment further? There is a question about the propriety of many of the works for which appropriation is made in this bill. Why limit, then, the observations of this commission to a certain class of work? Why not leave it for them at any rate to judge of the propriety of making recommendations to Congress as to the other works of improvement on rivers and harbors? I think it is a most important commission and I would like to see that plan extended.

Mr. WILLIS. The only reason, as I have said, operating upon the committee was, that they did not believe in the short time allowed for the existence of this commission that they could travel over the whole

United States for this purpose. And besides there were no complaints as to these other points of a character which caused the committee to think it necessary to make investigation. So far as I am personally concerned, as a member of the committee, I would have no objection to an amendment looking to the enlargement of the objects the committee had in view in creating this commission.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I wish to offer an amendment at the proper time to that effect.

Mr. WILLIS. Provided, of course, it does not interfere with the necessary and important work of the commission.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I should not, of course, desire to interfere with what the committee believed to be the principal duty of the commission, as I regard that as most important; but I believe they will have abundant time to examine other works of equally great importance and advise Congress as to the propriety of continuing, increasing, or reducing the appropriations therefor.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the gentleman from Kentucky: Have there been any complaints against the jetty system at the mouth of the Mississippi River?

Mr. WILLIS. I have heard, in response to my friend from Louisiana, of no complaint of the jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi River, nor is this commission, in the discharge of its duties, required to consider the jetties at that point.

The only other material legislation in the bill is the appointment of an advisory engineer, a consulting engineer, on the Mississippi River. The reports of the Mississippi River Commission indicate that as to one class of improvements they were not entirely satisfactory. I refer to the revetment work; and the committee believe it would redound to the interest of the public if some other engineer were to examine into the character of that work and report to the next Congress; and with that view Captain Eads has been recommended for appointment as an advisory engineer.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion of these very desultory, imperfect, and hurried statements, I desire to say on behalf of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors that they have to the best of their ability applied themselves to the duties devolved upon them by the House. We have been in session over two-thirds of the legislative days; and not only that, but a majority of the committee were in session during the holiday recess. We have carefully examined these reports, and to the best of our judgment and with the fullest information before us we have endeavored within the limits of twelve or thirteen millions to reconcile the conflicting interests that are at stake. We do not disguise from ourselves the fact, however, that our work will not meet with the approval of all the members of this House. But I believe, and the committee believe, that when objection is made to the different improvements or appropriations, and attention has been called in committee to those appropriations, and all the facts are disclosed upon which the committee acted, the judgment of the House will be very charitable toward the action of the committee. We have had no desire to put anything in this bill that ought not to be there. We earnestly hope if there be anything in it that ought not to be there that this Committee of the Whole will strike it out. Our committee very much regret that the necessity for prompt action—this being the short session—has deprived them to a large extent of the advice of gentlemen whose interests were involved. While it was impossible, under the circumstances, to grant a formal hearing to the numerous delegations and gentlemen asking it, the committee gladly received all written communications and availed itself of the facts which they contained, and in this way every improvement desiring it had its day in court. With these brief remarks, and reserving the balance of my time, I now yield the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has twenty-six minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. PRICE. I desire to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to what appear to me to be some incongruities in this bill in order that they may be corrected. The first thing that strikes my attention that is worthy of consideration is the fact that below the mouth of the Ohio River at Cairo, there is provided in this bill an appropriation of $2,810,000 more than is appropriated for the Mississippi River for all points above Cairo. Having some personal knowledge of the navigation of the stream and its various wants, I can only say that in my judgment a larger amount to be expended above and a less amount below would be of more general advantage to the commerce of the entire Mississippi Valley and to the country.

At this point allow me to say one thing that I know will not receive the sanction of this House, and yet it is my deliberate conviction, founded upon extended experience, and that is, that your whole levee system, as advocated by Captain Eads and his engineers, must prove instead of a permanent benefit a lasting damage to the commerce of the river and the advancement of the sections of country on each side of it. The Black River, in the State of Wisconsin, was once dealt with in this way, and its waters were gathered together and concentrated and the volume and flow increased by exactly the same means with the expectation based on the opinions of scientific men that it would by increasing the volume and velocity of current scour the channel and improve the navigation. An official investigation has clearly demonstrated that instead of having that effect this system has had the very opposite effect, and that as we build our dikes on the sides of the stream the bottom rises at the same time.

Mr. BLANCHARD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PRICE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Is the Black River, of which the gentleman speaks, an alluvial stream?

Mr. PRICE. Yes, sir, near its mouth, and its deposits are precisely the same as the deposits in the Mississippi River.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman state what is the difference between jetties and levees?

Mr. PRICE. I am not opposing the jetty system. I am speaking of the system of levees for the purpose of concentrating the water in one channel.

Mr. KING. What is the difference between them?

Mr. PRICE. One is on the top of the water, the other is under it. There are differences in other respects. The jetty system is one applied to the outlet of the waters to the Gulf.

Mr. KING. I understand the gentleman is for the principle of concentration.

Mr. PRICE. I have not said anything that can be tortured so as to warrant that conclusion. My conviction is that the object desired can best be arrived at by dividing the waters.

Mr. KING. Your proposition is that by carrying out this system you scatter the water all over the country.

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman has no logical right to say that that is my meaning.

Mr. KING. That is the conclusion to which one is logically brought by the gentleman's remarks.

The CHAIRMAN rapped to order and said: The Chair begs to state to gentlemen that in not addressing the Chair they are not conforming to the rules of the House. The Chair is informed that the violation of this rule confuses the reporter.

Mr. PRICE. I thank the Chair for the suggestion. It may confuse the reporter, but it does not confuse me. I am laying down the general principle, based on an experience of twenty years, that your levee system is a failure. With the levee system one crawfish or muskrat may in twenty-four hours endanger the safety of half a State or an entire State. And that can not be guarded against. History is full of illustrations of what I state. There is one instance, in Holland, where to-day the hulls of steamboats and vessels are floating above the chimneys of farm-houses, and there they are protected not by a wall of gravel, but by one of stone. The River Po furnishes another example.

The inevitable tendency in every case where it has been tried has been to lift the bottom of the stream without lifting the banks. But enough of the levee system. I have another objection to the bill. The objection is based upon the fact that this bill provides for an appropriation of $2,890,000 mainly to build up a diking system, which must prove disastrous; whereas from the expenditure of money on the upper portion of the stream there may be benefits derived infinitely in excess of the results that you can obtain from this expenditure below.

Again, Mr. Chairman, it does not appear to me exactly good policy to put $2,890,000 into an experiment, when every man familiar with the commerce of the upper portion of the stream knows that nothing has ever been expended upon that end of the river for removing bars, for removing snags, for putting in the jetty system for the purpose of concentrating the water and thereby improving the channel at isolated points, but what it has returned benefits worth more than 100 per cent. upon every dollar expended. That has never been the case with expenditures made on the lower part of the river in building levees, and, though I am willing to experiment there, I am not willing to experiment to the extent of $2,890,000 simply upon a plan laid down by some scientific theorist.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] yield for a question?

Mr. PRICE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to ask my friend whether there is a single word in this bill which states that this $2,890,000 is to be expended in building levees? I will ask him if the bill does not state that the money is to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in accordance with the plans, estimates, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission?

Mr. PRICE. My answer to that is, that the only system that is being pursued under the direction of the Mississippi River Commission and the engineers and the War Department is that of the levee system, and that therefore the appropriation in this bill must inevitably go to improvements upon that system if it is expended at all.

Mr. BLANCHARD. My friend is mistaken in saying that that is the only system adopted by the Mississippi River Commission.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, it may be true that the money is not all expended in that way, but I say that nearly all of it is so expended. The jetty system also comes in, I know, for a certain amount of money, in contradistinction to the other system, but nearly all the money goes to the levee system.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The gentleman is again mistaken.

Mr. PRICE. I say, Mr. Chairman, that the jetty system is used to some extent in contradistinction to the other systems, and I suppose the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] will not contradict that.

MR. BLANCHARD. No, sir.

Mr. PRICE. But I say that nearly all the money expended on those improvements on the lower end of the river is expended on the levee system.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. PRICE. Will the gentleman from Louisiana pretend to say that it is not nearly all expended on the levee system?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I do say so most emphatically.

Mr. PRICE. Then, if that be so, I do not understand the bill, and I think I do, notwithstanding what the gentleman has said. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I know that my information upon this subject may not be quite accurate, for the reason that for long weeks I tried to get before this committee to tell them what I know on this subject of river improvement, but they drew around them the sacred circle of a transient and somewhat imaginary power and would not let me near them, while at the same time the only member Wisconsin and Minnesota had on the committee lay upon a bed of sickness.

Mr. Chairman, I denounce the levee system as simply a useless expenditure of the public money—I mean the $2,890,000 which is to be expended below Cairo and the main part of which is to be expended in a system which my experience tells me in the face of the theories of scientists will be of little or no use and will not result in any permanent benefit to the commerce of the river or of the country.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That was my idea. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRICE. I am glad the gentleman agrees with me.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to another thing. I am fighting the bill now generally, but I want to fight it specifically when we come to amendments. The Southern States pay probably about 30 per cent. of the revenue of the Government, but I find that this bill provides for an expenditure in those States of $3,887,900, as against $3,070,000 in the Northern States. Now, sir, that may be right; but as my friend from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] said the other day, I am a finite being, and I can not see the point.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Expended on what?

Mr. PRICE. For improvements. I say that there is to be $3,887,900 expended in the Southern States against $3,070,000 in the Northern States, making a difference of $817,700 in favor of a section that pays perhaps about 30 per cent. of the revenue, and against a section that pays probably the remaining 70 per cent. I can not undertake at this time to be exact as to the figures.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What is the aggregate amount appropriated by the bill?

Mr. PRICE. Eleven million one hundred and twenty-three thousand six hundred dollars.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. You have accounted for only between $6,000,000 and $7,000,000 in your statement.

Mr. PRICE. Well, I will account for some more of it.

Mr. BURLEIGH. May I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a simple question?

Mr. PRICE. Certainly.

Mr. BURLEIGH. Does not the gentleman believe that by improving the rivers and harbors of the South we benefit the trade of the North also?

Mr. PRICE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BURLEIGH. Then the benefits of these appropriations are not confined to any section?

Mr. PRICE. Most undoubtedly they are not. Now, will the gentleman hear my answer? In the statement I have made as to the amounts appropriated for improvements in the South and in the North respectively—$3,887,900 as against $3,070,000—I have not included the appropriations for the Mississippi, for the Missouri, for the Ohio, or for the reservoir system above. I have considered those as great national expenditures for the national benefit. The appropriation for the Mississippi, $3,770,000 in round numbers, is not included in what I have spoken of as the amount appropriated for the Southern States, $3,887,900, or in the $3,070,000 for the Northern States.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. Those last two items, as I understand, are for the "runs" and "creeks."

Mr. PRICE. I have no objection to the gentleman understanding it in that way if he desires, but that is not my understanding. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] seemed to think that the two amounts which I stated, $3,887,900 and $3,070,000, embraced the whole amount appropriated in the bill. I have here a statement of the amounts appropriated in the bill:

For the Hennepin Canal	$300,000
For the Missouri River	190,000
For the Ohio	350,000
For the reservoir system at the upper end of the rivers	35,000
For the Mississippi River above Cairo	880,000
For the Mississippi River below Cairo	2,890,000

Here you have a difference of $2,010,000 in favor of the Lower Mississippi.

Mr. Chairman, I will not insist upon the exact accuracy of my figures, because my calculations have been made here amid the confusion of the House, but I do say that they are substantially correct—sufficiently so to serve as a basis for my objection to the appropriation of this large amount of money for expenditure at points where I do not believe it will benefit the commerce of the country—I am speaking now of the main river. They are sufficiently correct, too, for me to base my objection upon them to ignoring entirely, in making these appropriations, the question of who gets the money and where it comes from. I am willing to admit that to a certain extent and in certain cases that question ought to be ignored; I would not make it the governing consideration, but at the same time I would consider it in connection with the commercial wants of the several sections of our common country.

There are some of the details of this bill which I would like to see struck out, but I will take occasion to speak of those when we come to consider those particular clauses. I am now speaking generally of the provisions of the bill, and I think I am understood. I do not believe that Congress ought to expend $2,000,000 or any material part thereof upon the system of building dikes along the river. I do not believe as a general principle that we ought to give one section of country a greater proportion of the common funds than it contributes, unless there is some absolute commercial necessity reaching out and covering the whole commerce of the country, and I do not think that exists in the cases to which I now refer. Here is an appropriation of $1,070,000 to Texas alone. To call attention to this is sufficient to raise a doubt as to its propriety. I do not know absolutely that it is not proper, but I have doubt about it and desire to call attention to it.

I would not take the time of the House upon this matter but for the fact that I have taken the trouble to ascertain the amount which this bill gives to each State, and I hold the list in my hand.

A MEMBER. Have it printed.

Mr. PRICE. I will do so, with the statement that I do not guarantee the exact accuracy of my figures. But they are substantially correct—as nearly so as I can make them in the midst of the confusion of this House.

A MEMBER. Read the statement now.

Mr. PRICE. I will do so:

New York	$309,500
New Jersey	137,500
Ohio	240,000
Pennsylvania	117,500
Michigan	476,700
Illinois	221,000
Minnesota	46,500
Wisconsin	208,500
Maine	67,000
Vermont	20,000
New Hampshire	10,000
Massachusetts	246,000
Rhode Island	62,500
Connecticut	138,000
Iowa	5,000
Indiana	57,500
Dakota	12,500
Washington	12,000
Kentucky	331,000
Delaware	118,000
Maryland	87,000
Virginia	289,000
North Carolina	112,000
South Carolina	180,500
Georgia	225,500
Florida	77,500
Alabama	451,500
Louisiana	254,500
Texas	1,070,000

Mr. REED, of Maine. That does not include Galveston Harbor?

Mr. PRICE. It includes $750,000 to commence the work.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It is the initiative of an expenditure of about $8,000,000.

Mr. PRICE. It is so foreshadowed in the report of the committee.

Mississippi	$46,500
California	262,500
Oregon	230,000
District of Columbia	150,000
West Virginia	250,400
Tennessee	311,500
Missouri	9,000
Arkansas	75,000
Hennepin Canal	300,000
Missouri River	190,000
Ohio River	350,000
Reservoirs	35,000
Mississippi River above the mouth of the Ohio	880,000
Mississippi River below the mouth of the Ohio	2,890,000

Or $2,010,000 more than above the mouth.

Southern States as States	$3,887,900
Northern States	3,070,200

I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, for four or five sessions of Congress when bills of this nature were before the committee or the House I have remained silent, and I should remain silent to-day if this bill had not ignored the district which I represent on this floor. [Laughter.] Let not this laugh be a mistaken one; for I say that I rise to-day for the purpose of speaking a word in behalf of the bill, when, if I felt particularly interested, I should remain silent. I represent the most important harbor on Lake Erie, especially outside of Buffalo, a greater tonnage than is found anywhere else on that lake, a growing harbor, an unfinished harbor, one that has cost comparatively little, and asks but little to finish it. Substantially it has been utterly ignored by this committee; yet I stand here for the purpose of saying a word or two in behalf of this and like bills, because I have never in this House given a vote or uttered a word in behalf of any measure because my people were solely or chiefly interested in it, and I have never given a vote against a bill because my people were not so interested. Upon this principle I acted in voting recently in regard to the interstate commerce bill, in which no people of any other State were more interested, I know, than were the people of Ohio.

Why do I say a word in behalf of this bill or bills of this kind? I do not like all the features of this measure, but I believe there is no such wise expenditure of the public money for the general good as in precisely such bills as this ought to be and substantially is. I have no sympathy with those who, because the works in which their part of the nation is interested have been finished, become indifferent or cool in their support of measures of this kind or oppose further appropriations of this character.

I have no sympathy for people representing large cities and great harbors who have no knowledge of or interest in others of a smaller kind. I believe mistakes have been and are made in bills of this kind by ignoring those harbors and rivers which are called small rivers and harbors. The great harbor and commerce of New York—what would it amount to if there were no smaller rivers, if there were no smaller streams of business to contribute to it? The harbor of Ashtabula, in my district, unknown to most of the people who listen to me on the floor or in the gallery, a harbor that would be classed with creeks and unknown harbors, unknown to me and to some of you until legislation was obtained for it, was unknown at home and useless to the people. Now it is a great harbor.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message in writing was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I say before these improvements were begun it was unknown at home. Now it is the great harbor between the Lake Superior iron-ore country and the coal country of Pennsylvania and Ohio, adding to the general interests and commerce of the whole country more in proportion to the number of dollars which have been expended there than any large harbor you could name, New York, or Boston, or Portland, or any other.

And so it is everywhere. It is certainly growing to be a national question to improve such a harbor as this and others which have been named. To-day we do not as formerly decide what is constitutional in this regard by analyzing the water to see whether it be salt or fresh.

Neither have I, Mr. Chairman, any objection to this or any other bill because it appropriates more for some other State than it does for Ohio. I never would dream of asking whether it appropriates more money South than North, more money West than East. Such a consideration would have no right to have a place in my mind at all. The question is whether the proposed appropriation is a proper and a judicious one. If it is, let it be made; if it is not, let it be refused, whether it be in Ohio or in Texas, whether it be Ashtabula Harbor or Galveston.

I have said these words on the spur of the moment, Mr. Chairman, simply because there was an opportunity for me to testify my belief in the wisdom of this kind of appropriation of the people's money for the people's benefit. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] desire to retain the floor?

Mr. PRICE. I promised to yield to a gentleman on this side, but I do not see him in his seat, and therefore I will reserve whatever time I have remaining.

Mr. GIBSON took the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman from West Virginia to allow me in his time to submit an amendment which will be read for information as a part of my remarks, with the notice that I will move it at the proper time when that part of the bill is reached.

Mr. GIBSON. It is due to me as a member of the committee to say that I have not read the amendment and do not know what is in it, and only allow it to be read out of courtesy to a fellow-member.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am only responsible for it myself.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after line 305 the following:

"Provided, That no money shall be paid on account of the appropriation herein for the improvement of the harbor at Galveston, Tex., or for the services of advisory engineers, or for the survey of Galveston Bar and Harbor and adjacent waters, until the persons or corporations owning, using, or controlling the wharf in said harbor shall file with the Secretary of War an agreement in writing, duly executed, to the effect that in consideration of such appropriations as Congress may make for such improvement, the said persons or corporations will hereafter charge only such sums for wharfage dues or storage, or for any services which such persons or corporations may perform as wharf masters, owners, or common carriers as may be just and reasonable, and that Congress may at all times fix or prescribe what rates or charges are just and reasonable."

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, it affords me great pleasure to be able to supplement the statement of our chairman with the conclusions arrived at by the committee in its report, which have been the result of earnest, intelligent, and constant labor on their part. The shortness of the session deprived the committee of the opportunity of being advised and enlightened by the members of this House and by the delegations representing the different places to be improved. That increased the labor devolving upon the committee. If, therefore, the committee in arriving at a bill have not been able to do exactly what the members of this House desired, or to do exact justice to every locality in the United States, the committee feels it has the right to appeal to the House for its charitable consideration.

There are other things, though, that I desire now to bring to the attention of the House, and I am precipitated into that line of remark by what has been said by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE].

It has been alleged this bill was sectional in its features; that it was partisan; that some sections paying less revenue to the Government than others have received greater appropriations. That is true, but the gentleman will remember that, commencing at the city of Washington and going south along the whole line of the Atlantic coast to the extreme point of Texas, there are but two harbors in the United States in which a modern ship can go, while above the whole coast is lined with harbors that need no building up, and which are open and ready for the reception of the commerce of the world. It was therefore unnecessary the amount of appropriation along that coast should equal what was made for the coast south of it.

The same state of affairs, Mr. Chairman, exists upon the Pacific coast. Upon that coast, that long stretch of country, there is not one single solitary harbor in the United States where a first-class vessel, a man-of-war or merchantman, can enter.

Now, the committee felt that it was called upon in the improvement of these harbors to give to the country not only such harbors as are necessary to afford satisfactory and suitable facilities for its local commerce, but at the same time facilities for the entrance of great men-of-war, when we have them, as I hope we will at some early day—facilities where these war vessels can ride safely at anchor, and where they would be ready at all times not only to defend the country from danger, but to go out as couriers upon the high seas for its commerce, or to make aggressive war upon those who interfere with it. Now in relation to the improvement of the Southern harbors I desire to say this: That so far as the committee goes there has been no difference of sentiment or opinion whatever with any member of it, whether he come from one section or the other, with the exception of the propriety of the appropriations or the manner of this application at one solitary point.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That is, I understand the gentleman to say, the members of the committee have agreed generally on the provisions of the bill?

Mr. GIBSON. I say, sir, that within my knowledge there has not been, with the exception of what I will state now, a difference of opinion among the members of the committee as to any harbor for which provision is made in the bill.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The other members of the House have not had any hearing before the committee, have they?

Mr. GIBSON. I stated, and the gentleman from Maine, I should think, must have heard me, that owing to the shortness of the session and the brief time remaining we were deprived of the benefit as well as the pleasure of hearing the views of the various members of the House on the provisions contained in this bill when the committee had it under consideration.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But you agreed among yourselves, I understand.

Mr. GIBSON. Yes, sir; with the exception of the difference which I will now state.

The only difference in the committee in relation to any of the harbors south, and the only trouble, was with reference to the improvements of the harbor at Galveston. There is not a member of the committee or of the House that does not recognize the great national importance of our having some harbors upon our Gulf coast. He may turn to the map of this country, and he will find that the entire commercial dependence of the northwest, the west, and the southwestern country is upon the commercial facilities of some harbor upon that Gulf coast. As it is now, the great cereal products of our northwest country can find no outlet to the markets of the world except they be carried by railroads to our far North Atlantic coast; and I venture to make the assertion that you will find every one of these roads fighting with all of its influence and power the development of the water ways of the South and everywhere else. Now, when we came to the consideration of the proposition for the improvement of this Galveston Harbor, there was, as I have said, a diversity of opinion. The Senate bill known as the "Eads bill" was referred to that committee. That bill upon investigation was found to be wholly faulty, in our judgment, from beginning to end.

It would have given to Galveston, Tex., or the Gulf coast, no solitary harbor or protection of any kind, and would have opened the public Treasury of this country to the untrameled energies of one man, and thus tempted him to use that for his own benefit and purposes. I make no reflection whatever, Mr. Chairman, upon that gentleman. I only speak of what we regarded as a defect in the formation of the Senate bill which precluded the propriety of its adoption by the committee. That bill, we believed, made it possible for the expenditure of $9,000,000, and more than possible that it would have resulted in utter failure to give to Galveston any harbor suitable for its commercial purposes. There were then certain members of the committee who were opposed to that bill, and the only question was, if it was to be improved at all, as to the method to be employed so as to give a suitable water way to the inland country dependent upon Galveston.

There were differences of opinion among the committee as to whether the Government engineers had been successful or not. Some thought that their works had proved to be failures. The subcommittee thought that the results expected had not been reached and could not be reached, unless there was a difference in the amount of appropriation and the mode of its application to the work. Some of that committee were unwilling in making the appropriation for Galveston Harbor to use it as a reflection upon the engineers of the Army. For myself I am free to say now that it would take something more than a one-side statement or a popular clamor to make me believe that the educated, scientific, intelligent, and honorable Engineer Corps of the United States Army is not capable of carrying on its engineering business. But I was not willing to bring my judgment and opinion in conflict with the judgment and opinion of most of the members of the committee or of persons interested there, and however much I might prefer, as an original proposition, some other mode or method, when it was acknowledged on all hands that the work was needed and ought to be done I would not quarrel or quibble about the manner of doing the work, but yielded; and I am here now to advocate the adoption of this or some other plan which will give to Galveston a harbor sufficient for its commerce at the present time as well as its prospective increase.

There are one or two other things in this bill to which I can not subscribe; and I want to give notice now that when we reach the consideration of the bill on page 39, line 933, I shall move to amend by striking out all after the word "commission." What I desire to call attention to now is that it is not only radical legislation, but it is an express provision repealing the whole features of the Mississippi River Commission, condemning all the work that has been done, and putting the Mississippi River in the unlimited and uncontrolled hands of Mr. Eads. I want to call the attention of this committee to the remarkable features of this provision.

After going on and saying that this money shall be expended and the work carried on by the Secretary of War in pursuance of the recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, the bill says:

> As approved or amended by an advisory engineer of said commission, which office is hereby created, said advisory engineer to be appointed by the President, at a salary of $3,500 per annum; and James B. Eads is hereby recommended to the President for that position.

Now, in the first place, if it was right that the Mississippi River Commission should be abolished, it is fundamentally wrong that this body should undertake to dictate to the Executive of this Government whom it shall appoint to execute the laws which Congress has passed. It is unconstitutional in every feature of it; to speak in the plainest terms, it would be an impudent recommendation to the Executive, an equal branch of this Government; and I have no hesitation in saying to the friends of this bill that I believe that it would bring an executive veto on the whole of it, as it ought to do.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from West Virginia yield to me for a question?

Mr. GIBSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to ask the gentleman whether in the preparation of this bill the committee were governed for the most part by the report of the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. GIBSON. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that that committee got all the light it could from the Chief of Engineers and all the light it could from personal knowledge of the points to be improved and all the light it could from information from anybody who knew anything about the matter before us.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. The point to which I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from West Virginia is whether in adopting this proposition as to the appointment of Captain Eads he could say the committee had no regard for the report or the opinion or the manner of proceeding adopted heretofore by the engineers.

Mr. GIBSON. I will come to that presently. Passing over the constitutional objection to this bill, which undertakes to interfere with the Executive by an uncalled-for, unusual, I might say unheard-of, recommendation by Congress on this subject, I come to the other point, as to the policy of adopting it if it were constitutional.

It will be remembered, Mr. Chairman, that this Mississippi River Commission, after thorough discussion by successive Congresses, after the subject had been considered and acted upon by every branch of this Government, was appointed, and not only so, but that it was appointed with a knowledge that a particular plan was to be carried out by them, and with something like a definite idea of what was to be the ultimate cost.

That commission is composed of seven gentlemen, all of whom are engineers except one, and that one is a lawyer. For what reason they put a lawyer on that commission I know not. But he has been put there; and only being one of seven, he is not strong enough to do much harm. But they have upon that commission six engineers, four of whom are Army engineers and two of whom are civil engineers. They were all selected on account of their supposed skill and knowledge. They have for several years been making themselves practically acquainted with all the points that were to be improved. They have started out with a comprehensive and consecutive system of improvement; and now, after we have appropriated several millions of dollars, the committee ask us to appropriate $3,000,000, and in the same breath condemn as utterly incompetent the commission that is there to carry on this work. I deny that that commission is incompetent; but there is some other reason why Mr. Eads is to be put there in charge of this work and why nothing can be done unless he approves of it. I call the attention of the House to the fact that it was only a few years ago that Mr. Eads submitted a plan for the improvement of the Mississippi River, and that plan was at an estimated cost of over $100,000,000.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Will the gentleman cite his authority for that statement?

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Eads made no report to Congress nor to any officer of this Government, because he was not an officer of the Government and had no right to make such a report. But every gentleman in this House who has looked into the matter knows that it is a fact.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I do not.

Mr. GIBSON. All I can say to the gentleman from Arkansas is that he did not take the same pains to get acquainted with the facts at that time as he has done since; for if he had done so I am sure the energy he has devoted to the study of the matter would have informed him of the character of that proposition.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman from West Virginia give his authority for that statement?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me? It is the substance of a report of Mr. Eads before the committee in 1882.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Is it there you get that information?

Mr. GIBSON. I will answer that. The gentleman asks my authority. I will tell him it was the common, accepted, and undenied statement of the newspapers of the day; and I will venture to say that some of the knowledge we get out of the newspapers on this subject has been as useful to this committee and to this House as much that we get from some other sources. For one I am ready not only to accept, but to express my appreciation of, the education that we get from first-class newspapers upon general subjects.

Now, I want to say it has been an acknowledged fact that the plan of Mr. Eads contemplated an expenditure of $100,000,000 from the mouth of the Mississippi up to Cairo, and now with the report of the commission adopted by Congress we are asked to set aside that commission and turn over all that magnificent stream of water, with all its tributaries and commerce, to the unlimited control of one man, and he not even under the obligation of an oath or a bond. I, for one, am opposed to it, and I will protest against it as the surrender of great national rights to one man. I am not ready to become a hero worshiper. I am ready to acknowledge that Mr. Eads is a great man. I am ready to acknowledge that he understands engineering much better than I could comprehend it. But I am here to say that there are other men in these United States and other men who are part of this Government who have some rights and some intelligence; and I do not propose to insult the whole Engineer Corps of this country by putting my condemnation upon a great project that has been carried on simply that Mr. Eads may get in control of it.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from West Virginia yield?

Mr. GIBSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from West Virginia please inform the House how much is appropriated by the terms of this bill as a salary to Captain Eads? I notice $3,500 mentioned in one place and $3,000 in another, with an additional bonus in case of success.

Mr. GIBSON. It is not fair to other projects to undertake to bring them into discussion in this connection. But I will say that if Mr. Eads gets the water that we ask him to get at Galveston he will be richly entitled to every solitary cent he will get by the terms of this bill. And if the Government can by purchase of superior skill make a great national harbor at Galveston, it would get it cheaply by the expenditure of double the money we propose to pay him. But I will answer the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Should Captain Eads succeed at Galveston he will probably get from $60,000 to $75,000 in the shape of salary and percentage upon the increase of water.

Mr. STEELE. Does he not get that whether he succeeds or not?

Mr. GIBSON. No, sir; he gets $5,000 salary per annum and then $3,000 for each additional foot of water to a channel depth of thirty feet, and he does not get any of the percentage until he has secured twenty-five feet of water there. There is no trouble about the payment of Mr. Eads there. If you decide you want a national harbor there is no trouble about the amount he gets for it.

But when you come to the Mississippi River you undertake to throw away the Mississippi River Commission you have got; you condemn a plan you have been operating for years; and you allow one man to go there and carry on this work according to his own plan, and that of nobody else, at an expenditure probably of a hundred million dollars. I want to submit this consideration to the friends of the Mississippi River, and I have as much interest in it as any one living on its banks; perhaps more so than those who have not so far to go to the seacoast as I have, and whose constituents are not so much interested in the question as mine are. We want to see that river improved and made navigable as far as possible and as it ought to be as a great national highway. But we do not want to see the great commercial interest overloaded and destroyed by injudicious and hurtful legislation.

There are some other features in this bill to which I desire to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole. There is notably one other, the Sandy Bay project. That, Mr. Chairman, is a harbor or project that does not address itself directly to the commercial development of the country or to the national defense. It can be in no sense a harbor of refuge such as is known by that name among European nations. There they undertake to specify as harbors of refuge such harbors as are used for gathering in their navy. They do not undertake to build harbors of refuge for merchantmen or for a mercantile navy. Those are not what are spoken of in European terms as harbors of refuge. Therefore, when gentlemen speak of European nations expending such enormous amounts of money for harbors of refuge, they fail to remember those harbors of refuge are great bulwarks of national defense.

Now, if we build a harbor of refuge at Sandy Bay, what have we accomplished? The report of the engineer shows you that it will cost from four to eight million dollars; and when it has been built it will be like the Arkansas man's house—it will be of no account when it rains, and when it is not raining he will not need any roof. The engineer reports that when the weather is bad merchantmen can not get into that harbor for refuge, and when it is good of course they will not need it. In addition to that we have the fact that all along that coast there are spacious harbors. You can not travel fifty, forty, or even thirty miles along the coast without finding some magnificent natural harbor where the commerce of the world might find refuge from storms and rest in safety and tranquillity.

A MEMBER. Where is that?

Mr. GIBSON. In Massachusetts. I am talking now about Sandy Bay, in Massachusetts. Why should Congress consent to the expenditure of from five to eight million dollars there when it will not add one solitary ship to our mercantile marine nor open up one single foot of land to foreign commerce? The expenditure of money for foreign commerce ought to be but for one great purpose. Every expenditure that this country can make to aid in the clearing up of a field or in carrying into the markets of the world, either at home or abroad, any of the natural products of our soil or any of the artificial products of our skill, commends itself to us, for the money so expended is wisely expended. We have recommended appropriations for the improvement of numbers of small streams and harbors, and why? Because the commerce of this country must be made up of the driblets that come from the interior. New York city has no commerce. With all its houses and all its wealth it does not make a solitary grain of corn or wheat, nor grow a stick of timber, nor dig from its soil a solitary particle of ore. Only after the wealth of the country is brought to New York can she handle it and carry it into the markets, and all the money of the world spent in the harbor of New York would not add to the development of this country unless at the same time we were to expend equivalent or adequate amounts in opening up the channels of trade between New York and the interior. For this reason the committee has thought it proper to recommend the improvement of these small streams. We have looked upon them as so many springs or fountains from which are made up the great rivers of trade and commerce which, in co-operation with the labor of the country, create its wealth. And not only this, sir, but we viewed them in another aspect.

A distinguished gentleman from New York stated upon this floor the other day that it was idle for this country to make treaties, reciprocal or of any other kind, because there were no markets into which we could go, because we could make nothing that we could sell in competition with the other manufacturing peoples of the world. Now, sir, the object of this committee has been to open up the water ways of the country and give the people cheap transportation. We wanted to some extent to break loose our internal commerce from the merciless hands of the railroad corporations, that are felt not only throughout the country but in this House. We thought that if we could open up all these channels of commerce and make the rivers free, so that the wealth created by the people in the interior could get out to the ocean, our people might then be able to manufacture and sell in competition with the people of other countries, and thus might be able to give employment to our starving poor, and peace, comfort, and prosperity to the industrious in our midst.

There are numerous other projects provided for in this bill which I think will commend themselves to the favor of this committee and of the House. I am here to commend the general features of the bill, to commend its purposes, to commend the good faith and the honest efforts of the committee in preparing the bill; and while I have felt called upon to make some objection to some of its features, I have done so, I hope, with good feeling and in a spirit of fairness.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GIBSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. The chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has stated to the House that in this bill there were one hundred and forty-two rivers appropriated for, but he also stated that there were one hundred and forty rivers for which recommendations had been made in the Engineer's report, but for which no appropriations had been recommended in this bill.

Mr. WILLIS. One hundred and forty items, I said.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Will the gentlemen of the committee explain to us how they came to such a conclusion?

Mr. GIBSON. Why, sir, we came to that conclusion as any other gentlemen called upon to consult facts and to decide a case would come to a conclusion. We came to that conclusion because we did not conceive that the facts warranted us in recommending any additional appropriations.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Did the committee hear the views of any members of this House?

Mr. GIBSON. Why, my dear sir, if we had undertaken to hear some members of the House we never would have reported the bill at all. [Laughter.] I want to call the attention of gentlemen again to the fact that they ought not to complain of the committee because it did not hear them all. But I was going to say, Mr. Chairman, when I was interrupted, that, not feeling very strong to-day, if the House will permit me to reserve the balance of my time I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve the remainder of my time. How much have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-two minutes.

Mr. REAGAN obtained the floor.

Mr. GUENTHER. I desire to put a question to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. REAGAN. I can not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas will proceed.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I shall not detain the House long in making some remarks which it seems to me proper should be made this evening. There is in this bill a provision making an appropriation of $750,000 for improving the harbor at Galveston, Tex. It is manifest from suggestions which have been made on this floor since this bill has been up for consideration that there is a disposition to object to the amount of this appropriation. If the appropriation concerned only the city of Galveston there might perhaps be foundation for that objection. But I desire to call the attention of the House to some of the considerations which appear to me to justify and make necessary appropriations sufficient to secure a deep inlet to the harbor at that point.

The conformation of the country places Galveston far back from the general range of the coast line—eight hundred miles west of the island of Cuba, four hundred miles west of the mouth of the Mississippi, so that if you draw the radius from Galveston for a thousand miles and from New York for a thousand the lines will cross each other in Southeastern Minnesota.

I trust the House will bear in mind that when we speak for this appropriation we are not speaking merely for Galveston or for Texas, but we are speaking for a territory as large as that embraced in the original thirteen States. We are speaking for a population which at present is larger than was the population of the United States at the time of the Revolution. We are speaking for a people who can only reach the markets of the world and the great markets of our own country through shallow harbors by light-draught vessels or by rail. We need this harbor to accommodate the commerce and business of this large extent of country to which I have called attention.

I wish to refer briefly to a few facts presented in a report of Mr. Nimmo, the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics. Texas is a new State, and for that reason may be regarded as not of very much consequence. Being but one State, it may be considered as a State like Delaware or Rhode Island; yet its territory would make twenty-eight States like Massachusetts. Its capacity for sustaining population and producing wealth is very nearly or quite equal to a corresponding amount of territory in other parts of the country. Its population, according to the report of Mr. Nimmo, made last spring, amounts to 2,150,000. I am speaking now of the State of Texas.

According to the report of Mr. Nimmo, Texas is the largest cotton-producing State in the Union, having produced in 1883 1,193,400 bales of cotton. The next State in respect to the production of cotton was Mississippi, with 936,320 bales. Texas is also the largest cattle-producing State in the Union. Its cattle, according to this report, amounted in the year named to 4,277,700. The next State in respect to the production of cattle is Iowa, with 1,955,810. Texas is also the largest sheep-producing and wool-growing State of the Union, the number of sheep in the year 1883 having been, according to this report, 7,957,275; the next State in this respect being Ohio, with something over 5,000,000. In respect to these great branches of production Texas stands at the head.

Now, when gentlemen undertake to criticise appropriations for the improvement of harbors on the coast of Texas and contrast them with appropriations for other States, they should bear in mind that Texas fronts not less than four hundred miles on the Gulf, and that in point of territory it is as large as the six New England States, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Ohio, and part of Indiana. So that because Texas is but a single State it should not be argued that it must be put on a par with some other State so small that it may take forty such States to make one equal in area to Texas.

Upon another point I desire to say a word. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] in speaking about appropriations of this kind drew a contrast between the appropriations for different States. Is that the rule by which we are to be governed? Is it the object of the bill reported by this committee after so much labor and care and painstaking to distribute a given amount of money among the several States, or is it the object to improve the navigation of this country and furnish facilities for its commerce?

If the latter be the object, then, as stated by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON], you will find, commencing at the northeastern border of our country and coming to Norfolk, for the most part deep natural harbors adapted to the accommodation of the commerce of the country. Yet, notwithstanding this, it will be found, according to a statement made at the last session of Congress by the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Habors [Mr. WILLIS], that the total amount appropriated to New York for the improvement of navigation from the beginning of the Government to June 30, 1882, was $10,237,611. I simply call attention to this fact; I do not complain of it, for I suppose these expenditures have been for the benefit of the commerce of the country.

If the object is to improve the navigation of the country, to furnish facilities for its commerce, the money appropriated to this purpose should be expended where that purpose can be carried out. If you commence with the Norfolk Pass around Cape Sable to the mouth of the Mississippi and the mouth of the Rio Grande, there are, with three or four exceptions, none except third-class harbors—none accommodating vessels of over fourteen feet draught.

The entrance to these harbors is in most cases interrupted by bars and shoals in their front. The object of the appropriations by the Government is to execute plans for deepening channels over these bars into the harbors so as to accommodate the commerce of the country.

And here, sir, I desire to call attention to another thing. It seems to me in this House it has escaped the observation and reflection of members that the improvement of the commerce of the country, the improvement of the commercial facilities of the country, is not merely for the benefit of the locality where the improvements are made, but that as you improve the water ways you increase the commercial facilities, that by deepening the harbors and improving them you augment the general body of the commerce of the country; and I wish to say to my friends from New York, from Boston, from Philadelphia, and from Baltimore that if they desire commercial intercourse with our own country they should secure harbors at other commercial centers which would accommodate vessels as large as those which enter their own ports. If they do this they will secure enlargement and extension of their commerce. They can not, as was suggested by one of the gentlemen who spoke this evening, improve their commerce by improving their own ports and making deep water there and refusing to improve harbors and rivers elsewhere. That is not the way to do it.

I would say to gentlemen from New York that if they desire still further increase of commerce for that great city they ought to feel an interest in the improvement of navigation of every river and in deepening the water and the navigation of every harbor in this country. For wherever we augment the commerce of the country, wherever we build it up, that being the great commercial emporium of the country, its commercial capital, its banking capital, its railroad capital, where the capital of the country for various purposes is centered, its commerce will be improved of necessity by the general aggregate of commerce created by furnishing the necessary facilities to that commerce in all the ports of the country. And it is narrow, it is selfish, it is unjust, it is an unpatriotic view to refuse to extend commercial facilities to the balance of the country in order to build up the very commerce it is to their interest to build up.

Reference to the map, Mr. Chairman, will show that if we can have a deep entrance to the harbor at Galveston—a harbor of thirty feet depth—we will have a harbor that will accommodate the trade and commerce of the states of Northern Mexico. We will have a port that will accommodate Arizona, New Mexico, and the overland commerce of California, which is beginning to be very great. As one of the first wheat-producing States in the Union, as one of the first wool-growing States in the Union, and as the great vine-growing and wine-producing State in the Union, it is of great moment that its commodities should be brought within easy reach of the markets of the Atlantic coast. If you desire to do this to avoid long overland transportation on the one hand, or long ocean transportation around Cape Horn on the other, reference to the map will show you that you can do that best by making the short overland route that reaches from California to the Gulf of Mexico. Reference to the map will show you when you start from New York to California and get to Galveston you are half way to California.

A few years ago Mr. Huntington, in speculating on the result of the completion of the Southern Pacific Railroad from California to Galveston, estimated the number of thousands of tons of wheat that could and would be carried over that road as soon as they could reach deep water there. We shall not only benefit the present and prospective business of Texas, but command the commerce of Northern Mexico and give value to the commerce of Arizona, New Mexico, California, Nevada, and Utah, and coming farther east, this would be the nearest port to that rich and extensive tract of country called the Indian Territory. It would be the nearest port to the great grain-growing State of Kansas, now, perhaps, the first corn-producing State in the Union. While I have not myself made an examination, I heard a Senator, distinguished for his accuracy, recently state that with a deep-water harbor at that point the cost of shipment of corn to the markets of the world would be reduced 8 cents a bushel; and if that were so it would be a saving on the present year's crop of corn in Kansas greater than the cost of deepening the water in that harbor to thirty feet.

Mr. PETERS. Kansas is also the first wheat-producing State this year.

Mr. REAGAN. It has become the great grain-growing State of the southwestern part of the Union.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. It is not a question with me as to the propriety of deepening the harbor at Galveston, but, from my knowledge of the past, whether it is possible to deepen it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Has not the money spent there heretofore been wasted?

Mr. REAGAN. I will not undertake to make as full an answer to that question as the gentlemen who are on the committee will be able to do.

Mr. LONG. I hope the gentleman will yield to a motion to rise, and finish his speech in the morning.

Mr. REAGAN. No, I will not take up much time, and would rather finish what I have to say this evening. In addition to these countries which I have already mentioned, I might also include Western Arkansas, Western Missouri, Colorada, and Nebraska, whose interests are largely in favor of developing and improving the Galveston Harbor, through which they would find their nearest outlet to the ocean.

I understand the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana. He has considered this question, and is prepared to deal properly with it in the light of the facts I have stated. But it may be that there are other members who have not taken the trouble to look into the facts and see the necessity for the construction of a great harbor in that indentation made by the Gulf of Mexico extending so far into the interior of the country. But in relation to the expenditure of money on Galveston Harbor, it is true that a million and a half of dollars have been expended from first to last, and there is but little difference in the condition of the harbor now and when the expenditure was commenced.

Now as to the question of the possibility of improving the harbor. Not being an engineer I can not speak on the basis of personal knowledge. But Captain Eads proposed for $7,750,000 to make an inlet into that harbor of thirty feet in depth, and to make his compensation dependent upon the successful prosecution of the work—that is, the obtaining of that depth of water—so that if he failed, however much money he might spend in the enterprise, he was to receive nothing for it. The committee have not seen proper to adopt that proposition, and I have no complaint of them for not doing so, for I understand the difficulties of the problems they had to encounter in their great work for the benefit of all parts of this country, and cheerfully accept the results of their labor.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Just in this connection I hope the gentleman from Texas will permit me to ask him a question. Do I understand that Captain Eads proposes to construct a harbor with a channel of thirty feet depth at Galveston and agrees to take his pay after he has completed his work?

Mr. REAGAN. No, sir; his proposition contemplated that he was to be paid as the work progresses and a final payment on the completion of it. He was to be paid, according to his proposition, foot by foot as he increased the depth of water, but he was to get nothing at all until the depth of water was obtained. The water was to come before he was paid a cent.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. He was to get his pay for each foot of water as the water came?

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is there anything in this proposition which would prevent him from abandoning the project altogether after he had obtained, say, five or six feet of water?

Mr. MILLS. That proposition is not embodied in this bill.

Mr. REAGAN. No; the committee have not adopted the proposition of Captain Eads.

I entered upon the discussion of this point to show to the committee that in the mind of this great engineer the harbor is capable of improvement in the manner suggested, and that he who had built the bridge across the Mississippi River at Saint Louis, who deepened the mouth of the Mississippi from eight to thirty feet, he who has been consulted by the greatest governments on earth as the leading engineer of the day on works of engineering importance, who designed the plan for the ship-railway across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, and who stands to-day undoubtedly in my judgment at the head of the engineers of the world, was willing to undertake the work. He says that the work is practicable, and speaks with the utmost confidence of his ability to get thirty feet depth of water.

The guarantee of such a man as to the success of the enterprise, a man whose performances stand pre-eminent in the engineering skill of the world, with a reputation that is now world-wide, must be worth something in the minds of thoughtful men, because he proposes to stake that reputation upon the result of his judgment as to the work in Galveston Harbor. It seems, sir, that that guarantee, with the amount of money he would have had to risk, should carry responsibility and weight with it as to the advisability and the practicability of making it a suitable harbor for the commerce of the country to which I have referred.

Mr. GIBSON. If the gentleman from Texas will allow a suggestion I would say there is no doubt in the minds of any of the engineers as to the advisability of getting deep water there; and the only doubt is as to whether his project would not give too much water at Galveston.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is one of the principal points to which I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. I will answer the gentleman from Ohio after a while.

Mr. Chairman, for eleven years this Congress has been most liberal in its appropriations for the harbor of Galveston. It has required the expenditures there to be made under the direction of the Engineer Corps of the United States. It has expended in attempting the prosecution of that work about a million and a half of dollars. That money has been expended and substantially no progress has been made. The interests of our country are so great and the needs of commerce of this immense region to which I have referred are so pressing, the interests at stake are so vast, that we seek now to have something done that is practicable, and that will be a success in the minds of men capable of deciding.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I hope the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him a moment to ask whether this plan of Captain Eads has the approval of the Chief Engineer of the United States Army and the United States engineers generally. I would like to know this as a matter of information.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, the plan of Captain Eads has not been submitted to them for their approval; nor was the plan for deepening the mouth of the Mississippi submitted to them. It was done in spite of all that they could do to prevent it.

Mr. LEWIS. That is true.

Mr. REAGAN. It was done in spite of their declarations that it could not be done. It is simply because Captain Eads has succeeded against their judgment in that great work, because of his success in other great works, that we choose to appeal to Congress to allow him to do for us what he has done for the Mississippi.

But I desire now, Mr. Chairman, to fortify what I have said about the extent of region to be benefited by this great work by reading a paragraph or two from the report of Mr. Nimmo, submitted to the last Congress. He states, under the heading of

COMPARATIVE EXTENT AND IMPORTANCE OF THE AREA OF COUNTRY WHICH MAY BE SUBSERVED BY THE PORT OF GALVESTON:

The entire territory of which Galveston would become the nearest and most accessible first-class seaport, namely, the States of Texas, Kansas, and Colorado, the Indian Territory, and the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, with parts of contiguous States and Territories, has an area of about 797,000 square miles. In that calculation California is left out. This is equal to the aggregate area of the New England States, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, North Carolina, Kentucky, Tennessee, Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, the aggregate population of which States in the year 1880 was 35,756,780, as against a population of only about 3,000,000 within the area referred to, as being embraced within the range of the commercial enterprise of Galveston, under the favoring condition of a first-class harbor.

The area of which Galveston would thus become the nearest and most accessible seaport is also equal to the aggregate area of Great Britain and Ireland, France, Spain, Italy, and the German Empire, the total population of which countries is about 163,000,000, and is fully equal to those countries in the extent of land susceptible to culture, in fertility of soil, and in all the capabilities of material prosperity. Attention is invited to Inclosure E, the same being statements furnished to this office by the Chief Signal Officer of the United States Army, showing the mean annual precipitation throughout the area mentioned as being naturally tributary to the commerce of Galveston. The comparison as to rainfall in this area and in the countries of Europe above referred to is quite favorable to the former. These facts suggest the possibility of an enormous increase of wealth and of population within this area described as being within the range of the commercial activities of Galveston. Evidently the present development of the resources of the State of Texas and of its neighboring States and Territories are to the possibilities of such development but as a beginning. The proposed improvement of Galveston Harbor has therefore a prospective importance vastly exceeding its value to interests which would thereby be subserved at the present time.

Another feature of the case which I wish to present—perhaps it is the only one I shall present this evening—is that not only is this vast region of country described in the extract which I have just read interested in the improvement of the harbor of Galveston, but all the remainder of the country is interested also. We put into the markets of the world more than half a million of beef cattle annually. With this deep-water outlet these cattle may be sent in ships, either alive or dressed, to the great markets of the country, to supply the teeming millions of our people in the East, Northeast, and the North. The people of those portions of the country are interested in getting cheap meats, and we are prepared to give them cheap meats. The laboring poor, to whom meat is a luxury, would thus be blessed by the advantages of cheap and free intercommunication by deep-draught vessels between Galveston and all the ports of the North and East. We could supply them in this way not only with cheap beef, but also with cheap mutton. According to the Bureau of Statistics there are 7,000,000 sheep in that region now, and the country has capacity for their indefinite increase.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman from Texas allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HISCOCK. Does the gentleman think that any part of the meat could be transported by water?

Mr. REAGAN. I can only answer the gentleman by saying that thousands and tens of thousands of our cattle are transported now by water in light-draught vessels. That was for some time our means of getting them to the markets of the world. More recently we have been driving our cattle northward, feeding them for a time by the way, and then driving them eastward to supply the people with meat. But it has been stated that those cattle, in being driven through the country at certain seasons of the year, communicated to other cattle a disease which they do not have themselves, and our neighboring State of Kansas, for the purpose of protecting her cattle against this, is adopting such legal means as will probably prevent the driving of our cattle through that portion of the country. Missouri, too, attempted to do the same thing in another form by a law which was declared unconstitutional simply because it was not directed against diseased cattle, but inhibited the passage of all cattle. It has therefore become a serious question whether our people can much longer drive their cattle on through the West onto the plains of Dakota and Montana, where they are fed and fattened and sent to the States east of that region.

In addition to this, as I said in the outset, the region tributary to the harbor of Galveston is the largest cotton-producing region in the world. The manufacturers of cotton goods in the United States and elsewhere are interested in procuring cheaper cotton, in order that they may furnish to the people of the world cheap cotton goods. With deep water in Galveston harbor we can make our freights cheaper; we can cheapen the cost of our cotton to the manufacturers, and thus enable then to cheapen their cotton goods, which the people of this country, and the poor people especially, use so extensively. I mention these things simply as illustrations of what deep-water navigation there will do in improving the commercial facilities of the country generally. As I have said, it will cheapen food, and cheapen the great staple article of cotton and the products made from it, while at the same time it will give a better market to those who produce the cattle, the wool, and the cotton.

Mr. Chairman, I trust that when members come to consider their final action upon this appropriation they will bear in mind the extent of country that is to be benefited by it, the extent of population whose products are to be increased in value, and the extent of the population that is to be benefited by getting cheaper meats, cheaper cotton, and cheaper wool. I trust that they will look over the vast territory embraced within the Union and observe that Galveston stands in the halfway place between the city of New York and the city of San Francisco, and that from the conformation of the Gulf it is projected far back into the interior, and thus made accessible to a vast region and to millions of people.

I have already said that I have no objection to the appropriation in the bill, but it is right that I should accompany that remark with the expression of the wish which lies nearest to the hearts of many thousands, I might say millions, of people, that in providing for this great work an adequate appropriation should be made at once to be expended in successive years as the work progresses; so that there might be no interruption growing out of a failure of appropriations either by accident or otherwise until the completion of the work.

I join my colleagues in bowing to the judgment of the committee as to what is the better plan. We simply ask the House to give us what the committee in its good judgment has determined to be necessary for the beginning of this great work.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-five minutes.

Mr. REAGAN. I yield the residue of my time to my friend from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MILLS took the floor.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] desire to occupy his time now?

Mr. MILLS. No, sir; I wish to occupy it to-morrow. I yield for the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] to waive his motion for a moment in order that I may ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter of General Gillmore concerning the jetties in Charleston Harbor.

Mr. WILLIS. I have no objection to that; I think the letter should be before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the letter referred to by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection; and the following was ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

THE JETTIES IN CHARLESTON HARBOR.

Letter of General Q. A. Gillmore, United States engineer, describing the condition and results of the work, and setting forth his reasons for believing that a depth of 30 feet on the bar can be secured:

CHARLESTON, S. C., January 22, 1885.

DEAR SIR: Referring to our recent interview, I wish to express my satisfaction with the progress of work on the Charleston jetties under the present contract, and the beneficial results in immediate prospect.

Captain Bailey informs me that the survey just completed indicates quite plainly that increased scour on the bar between the jetties has been developed.

Although the concentration of water upon the bar secured by the jetties up to the present time is very small in comparison with what is intended and with what the plan requires, both works being as yet little more than foundation courses, and the south jetty not having yet reached the crest of the bar by about 1,000 feet, I am confident that, even in their present condition, the works are able to maintain a much deeper channel than that which exists between them, and that the time to begin the dredging contemplated in the original estimate has arrived. Proposals for dredging have, therefore, been invited, the object being to aid the scouring power of the accelerated current.

I wish to reaffirm my confidence in the ability of these works, when completed, to maintain a deep navigable channel across the bar. I believe a depth of 30 feet to be easily attainable.

Adverse criticisms on the efficacy of submerged jetties have no application to the Charleston works. The latter are strictly tentative in character, and their distance apart was planned with the special object of reserving entire freedom of choice with respect to their ultimate height.

Their crests can of course be carried up to the height necessary to maintain the desired channel depth between them. Where they cross the bar they are half a mile apart, equal to about one-half of the width of the throat of the harbor between Forts Sumter and Moultrie, where the channel depths are 75 to 80 feet at low water.

Omitting engineering technicalities, two significant questions may be popularly stated as follows:

First. If the flow between Sumter and Moultrie maintains a channel depth of 75 feet where the width is one mile, what portion of that flow will be required between the jetties where the width is only half a mile in order to maintain a depth of 28 to 30 feet? The answer suggests itself, that not all the water flowing past Fort Sumter will be needed between the jetties. The plan, therefore, allows part of it to pass over their tops, thereby lessening the cost of the works more than one-half.

Second. If the flow between Sumter and Moultrie maintains a depth of 75 feet where the width is one mile, what depth would the same volume of flow maintain if it all passed between the jetties where the width is only half a mile? The answer is again evident, that, under these conditions, the depth scoured out would be excessive, possibly endangering the stability of the works themselves, and transporting a large body of sand to the seaward slope of the bar beyond the end of the jetties. This would introduce serious complications in the way of new shoals and a new bar. It has been one of the leading objects of the project to avoid such a contingency.

The principles suggested in the foregoing answers are neither new nor novel. They not only rest on long experience and observation, but are easily demonstrable by approved methods and formulæ. We need not go far for numerous and well-defined illustrations; two or three that are near home will be mentioned.

At the mouth of Saint John's River, where the tide rises and falls about five feet, the low jetties planned on the principles applied to the Charleston works, and not yet half finished, have produced a marked improvement in the gap between them. A channel has there been established by a scour alone of twice the depth existing there six months ago.

In Savannah Harbor, where there is about 7 feet rise and fall of tide, the Fig Island jetty, one mile long, with its crest fully 4 feet below high water, maintains a navigable channel 19 feet deep at high water through a shoal upon which there was only 11 feet before the improvement was begun. Farther down the harbor, at the head of Elba Island and at the upper flats, the low jetties, having their crests about 3 feet below high water, are continuously maintaining navigable channels 20 to 23 feet deep through shoals where only 16 feet could be carried at high water before any improvement was made by works or by dredging. These are points where the jetties have been completed a year or more, or long enough to produce a substantial approach to maximum results. At other points where the jetties were finished more recently the scouring is now in progress. In some cases the movement of the sand is so tardy that the deepening process has to be hastened or aided by other means, and this is the object of the dredging which will be commenced in Savannah Harbor in a few days.

It goes almost without saying that the Charleston jetties should not excavate a channel of unnecessary depth between them, with the certain result that the excess of material removed will be deposited outside where the natural depths are very moderate and the slope of the bottom exceptionally flat, and where we must depend for its removal upon the intermittent and irregular littoral current produced by winds. Where interests of great magnitude are at stake, ordinary prudence suggests that there should be a liberal factor of safety. This is provided in the present project by reserving the power to resist the volume of flow and the amount of scour between the jetties.

It has been the subject of profound regret on my part that the importance of this great national work has not been recognized in Congress by liberal appropriations. Frequent stoppages and increase in the ultimate cost of the work have been the results of this policy.

I invite attention to my annual report for a more lengthy expression of my views on this point.

Q. A. GILLMORE.

Hon. S. Y. TUPPER,
Chairman Committee on Harbor Improvements of Charleston Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. WILLIS. I now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLACKBURN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8130) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

CORRECTION OF ENROLLMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to submit for adoption a resolution providing for the correction of an error in the enrollment of a bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk of the House of Representatives, in the enrollment of the bill of the House (H. R. 1017) relative to the Inspector-General's Department of the Army, be directed to change the word "hereafter" in said bill to the word "thereafter."

The resolution was adopted.

And then, on motion of Mr. WILLIS (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARKSDALE: Petition of Thomas B. Magruder, of Claiborne County, Mississippi, asking compensation for property taken and used by the United States Army during the late war—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. W. W. BROWN: Memorial of Philadelphia Produce Exchange, praying for the passage of the national bankrupt law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CAINE: Petition of Cyrene E. Hix and 20 others, of Monroe, Utah, asking for an increase of widows' pensions—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CALDWELL: Petition of John L. McMillan, executor of Dr. B. N. Carler, deceased, of Houston County, Tennessee, asking compensation for property taken and used by the United States Army during the late war—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CASSIDY: Resolutions of Nevada State Teachers' Association, favoring the Blair educational bill—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. CONVERSE: Petition of the board of trustees of Ohio State University, asking the passage of the bill establishing agricultural experimental stations—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. ELLWOOD: Petition of citizens of Highland Park and of Belvidere, Ill., asking for an increase of widows' pensions—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ERMENTROUT: Memorial of the Philadelphia Produce Exchange, favoring a national bankrupt law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FORNEY: Petition of John Edwards, of De Kalb County, Alabama, asking compensation for property taken and used by the United States Army during the late war—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 30, 1885.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LANDS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of 27th instant, with inclosures, from the Secretary of the Interior, in relation to objections on the part of the Creek Nation of Indians to pending legislation providing for the opening up to homestead settlement of certain lands in the Indian Territory.

The matter is presented to the consideration of the Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 29, 1885.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a tracing of the plat of the preliminary survey of the unconfirmed private land claim, No. 109, in the Territory of New Mexico, known as the Rancho de Taos, Francisca de Antonio de Gijosa, claimant; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a tracing of the plat of the preliminary survey of the unconfirmed private land claim, No. 123, in the Territory of New Mexico, known as the Santissima Trinidad or Rancho de Galvan tract, Francisco Sandoval, claimant; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

WILLIAM W. THOMAS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution from the House of Representatives:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 29, 1885.

Ordered, That the Clerk of the House be directed to request the Senate to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 691) for the relief of William W. Thomas.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the request be granted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate comply with the request of the House of Representatives, and that the Secretary be directed to return the bill to that body. That order will be made if there be no objection.

ARMY INSPECTOR-GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was considered by unanimous consent:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk of the House of Representatives, in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 1017) relative to the Inspector-General's Department of the Army, be directed to change the word "hereafter" in said bill to the word "thereafter."

Mr. BECK. I move that the Senate concur in the resolution of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. INGALLS. I should suppose that action upon the motion of the Senator from Kentucky to concur in the resolution would depend very much upon the information the Senate had as to whether the word in the bill originally was "hereafter" or "thereafter."

Mr. BECK. That has been carefully examined. It was "thereafter" in the engrossed bill, and was passed by both Houses as "thereafter." The President was requested by both Houses to return the bill after the facts were all fully ascertained. He did so return it, and the purpose of the resolution is to correct the enrollment so as to make it correspond with the bill as it passed both Houses.

Mr. INGALLS. The bill has not then been signed by the President?

Mr. BECK. He returned the bill. He may have signed it; he had it before him; but the ten days had not elapsed, and he returned it at the request of both Houses.

Mr. INGALLS. This slipshod manner of amending legislative enactments is altogether too common. I can recall within the last Congress a dozen or fifteen instances where we have been called upon to amend bills in which mistakes had been made in the enrollment or engrossment either by joint or concurrent resolution. There is a defect somewhere in our system. If we have not a force of clerks who are competent to properly enroll and engross bills, I think there should be some reformation. I have no objection to this resolution, of course, but it is a very grave question.

Mr. BECK. The resolution makes the bill correspond with the action of both Houses.

Mr. INGALLS. The change of the word "hereafter" to "thereafter" changes the whole purport and range and scope of the bill, and we ought to know something about it, instead of being called upon in this blind and senseless way to act upon a resolution from the House. I suppose this is all right.

Mr. BECK. It is.

Mr. INGALLS. But it is a very improper mode of legislation.

Mr. SEWELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is perhaps the duty of the Chair to state, as the Chair signs enrolled bills, that this was a House bill. It came to the Senate engrossed of course. The Chair has examined the engrossed bill upon which the Senate acted, and finds that the enrollment at the House of Representatives of that House engrossed bill did not correspond to the engrossed bill in the particular that the resolution refers to. The bill, therefore, as it passed both Houses, was incorrectly enrolled in the other branch. The Committee on Enrolled Bills of the Senate and its clerk in all such cases, of course (the original engrossed bill having been returned to the House of Representatives), take the certificate of the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the House that the bill has been correctly enrolled. The Chair takes that certificate also, together with the signature of the Speaker, as proof that the enrollment is correct, and the presiding officer of this body, as he is authorized and in fact required to do, signs the bill, which was done in this case. The error in the enrollment was not discovered until after that.

Mr. SEWELL. As chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills I was about to make a similar statement to that made by the Chair. I have thoroughly investigated the matter, and find that it was a clerical mistake which originated in the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the House. The engrossed bill and the correct bill contained the word "thereafter;" and the letter "t" being left out changed the whole character of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of Amos A. Lawrence and 15 other citizens of Boston, Mass., praying that they may be made a corporation, for the purpose of promoting immigration to the Territory of Utah and developing its agricultural and mineral resources, with such privileges and immunities, and subject to such restrictions, as Congress may grant or impose; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. PENDLETON. I present the petition of a large number of citizens of the county of Lake, in the State of Ohio, constituting the Farmers' Association of that county, praying for the passage of the interstate commerce bill commonly known as the Reagan bill. I move that the petition lie on the table, inasmuch as the bill is before the Senate as the unfinished business.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh, Pa., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed Spanish reciprocity treaty; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BECK presented a memorial of officers in the United States naval service, remonstrating against the passage of the joint resolution (S. R. 107) giving the thanks of Congress to Commander W. S. Schley, United states Navy, and Lieut. W. H. Emory, United States Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of corporations and citizens of Chicago, Ill.; a resolution adopted by the Board of Trade of Chicago, Ill., and a petition of business men of Chicago, in favor of the United States acquiring title to the two canals connecting Portage Lake, in Michigan, with Lake Superior, and making said canals free of tolls, as recommended by the Secretary of War; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Quincy, Ill., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed Spanish reciprocity treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. VEST presented the petition of G. W. Cooper and other citizens of McDonald County, Missouri, praying for legislation opening the Oklahoma country to settlement by citizens of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SEWELL presented a petition of citizens of New Jersey, praying an appropriation for digging out and opening a channel not less than six feet deep at high water between the bays of Barnegat and Tuckerton, New Jersey; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONGER presented resolutions of the Detroit (Mich.) Board of Trade, in favor of the passage of Senate bill No. 2522, providing for the purchase by the United States of the two canals across Keweenaw Point, Lake Superior, State of Michigan; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of J. T. Cobb, secretary, and 11 other members of the Michigan State Grange, praying for the passage of the so-called Reagan interstate-commerce bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented the petition of Edward S. Torrey, administrator de bonis non of the goods, chattels, and credits which were of the estate of Joseph Torrey, deceased, late a major in the Revolutionary war, praying the payment of certain commutation-money due the decedent in accordance with the provisions of the resolution of Congress passed March 22, 1783; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

COLUMBIA INSTITUTION FOR THE DEAF AND DUMB.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask leave to submit a statement of the expenditures of the Columbia Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb, by the president of that institution. This statement is in accordance with a section of the Revised Statutes, which makes it requisite that such a statement should be communicated to Congress. It was handed to me as one of the directors of that institution on the part of the Senate. I move that the statement be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on the Library, reported amendments intended to be proposed to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2420) to provide for the establishment of evening schools in the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 2162) granting an increase of pension to Julia M. Michler, widow of Lieut. Col. Nathaniel Michler, deceased;

A bill (S. 2048) granting a pension to Elizabeth Templeton;

A bill (S. 1949) granting a pension to Elise Burki;

A bill (S. 2052) granting a pension to William Gieseking;

A bill (H. R. 4613) granting a pension to Preston M. Shannon; and

A bill (H. R. 1836) for the relief of Elizabeth Moyal.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Mary A. Hughes, praying for a pension, reported adversely thereon; and the committee were discharged from its further consideration.

Mr. JACKSON. Some days since the Committee on Pensions reported adversely on the petition of Mrs. Nannie Cushman, overlooking the fact that there was a bill accompanying the petition. They now report adversely the bill (S. 2466) to increase the pension of Mrs. Nannie Cushman, and I move its indefinite postponement.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMDEN. The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3332) granting a pension to George S. Riggs, have instructed me to report adversely. I will state that the relief asked for in the bill has been granted at the Pension Office since the bill was introduced, so that the party has obtained the relief desired. I move the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMDEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 1801) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth Ann Rice; and

A bill (S. 1837) for the relief of George P. Home.

Mr. CAMDEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2348) granting a pension to John D. Rickards, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 6594) granting a pension to Russell F. Dimmick;

A bill (H. R. 5632) granting a pension to Sarah J. Bremmer; and

A bill (H. R. 5630) granting a pension to George W. Rugg.

Mr. VAN WYCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2453), granting a pension to Frank S. Marsh, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WILSON. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2452) granting a pension to Mary M. J. Frank, to report it back adversely. I wish to state that the adverse report is based upon the fact that by a special act, approved August 15, 1876, the person named in the bill was placed on the pension-roll. I move that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I am also directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 435) granting a pension to Samuel W. Tracey, to report it back adversely, on the ground that the case has been reopened in the Pension Office and is there pending. I move the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1924) granting a pension to Thomas Simpson, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7141) granting a pension to Daniel W. Adams, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred a concurrent resolution in regard to the count of the electoral vote, to report the same back and recommend its adoption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives the 11th of February, 1885, at 12 o'clock noon, pursuant to the requirement of the Constitution and laws relating to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States, and the President of the Senate shall be the presiding officer; that two persons be appointed tellers on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to make a list of the votes as they shall be declared; that the result shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall announce the state of the vote and the persons elected to the two Houses assembled as aforesaid, which shall be deemed a declaration of the persons elected President and Vice-President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses.

Mr. HOAR. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say that the resolution is precisely the one under which the electoral count proceeded four years ago, except that there was connected with it then another resolution providing for a declaration of the result of the vote in the alternative in case some State should be found to have voted on a day not according to law. There is no occasion for that at this time.

I ask unanimous consent that the House resolution on the same subject may be taken from the table and considered at the present time, and I shall then move to amend it so as to make it conform to the Senate resolution. The House resolution is exactly like the Senate resolution except that the House propose to have but one teller for the Senate instead of two, as provided in the resolution now before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What disposition does the Senator desire to have made of the resolution now before the Senate?

Mr. HOAR. I desire that the House resolution shall take the place of the pending resolution. Unanimous consent to consider the House resolution involves the laying of the Senate resolution aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the pending order be laid aside temporarily, and that the Senate now consider the resolution of the House of Representatives, which will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives at 12 o'clock noon on the 11th of February, 1885, pursuant to the requirement of the Constitution and laws relating to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States, and the President of the Senate shall be the presiding officer; that one person be appointed teller on the part of the Senate and two persons appointed tellers on the part of the House of Representatives, to make a list of the votes as they shall be declared; that the result shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall announce the state of the vote, and the persons elected, to the two Houses assembled as aforesaid, which shall be deemed a declaration of the persons elected President and Vice President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution just read? The Chair hears none, and it is before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend the resolution by striking out in line 6, after the word "that," the words "one person be appointed teller" and inserting "two persons be appointed tellers;" so as to read:

That two persons be appointed tellers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. Are not all the precedents in accordance with the amendment suggested by the Senator?

Mr. HOAR. They are, without interruption, from the foundation of the Government.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not recall any instance where the custom has been departed from.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was concurred in.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate resolution be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 2599) for the relief of R. G. Ward; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BECK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, it was Ordered, That Louis C. Madeira and Emilio F. Cabada have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate their papers in connection with Senate bill No. 878.

MICHAEL P. SMALL.

Mr. HAMPTON. I ask unanimous consent that a bill reported the other day from the Committee on Military Affairs, being the bill (S. 2399) for the relief of Maj. Michael P. Small, with an adverse report, may be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs. I have the permission of the committee to make this request, and I do it because some important evidence which was not before the committee is now in the possession of a Senator who was absent at the time of our consideration of this measure in the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from South Carolina state the condition of the bill? Is it on the Calendar or was it indefinitely postponed?

Mr. HAMPTON. The bill was indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the vote of the Senate indefinitely postponing the bill named by him be reconsidered, and that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

GERIAH COLLINS.

Mr. COCKRELL. On the 6th of January the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JACKSON] reported adversely from the Committee on Pensions the bill (H. R. 930) granting a pension to Geriah Collins, and the bill was placed upon the Calendar. The adverse report was based upon the ground that the claim was then pending in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions unadjudicated. I have in my hand a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions, which gives a different statement from the statement that was given to the Committee on Pensions, and I ask, in view of that fact, that the bill and the adverse report be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions for reconsideration.

Mr. JACKSON. Do I understand that the Commissioner of Pensions makes a different report from that which he made to the committee?

Mr. COCKRELL. He makes a different report, and says that the claim was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 930) granting a pension to Geriah Collins be taken from the Calendar and recommitted to the Committee on Pensions. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. I now present the letter of the Commissioner of Pensions giving a statement as to the rejection of the case, and I move that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate now proceed to consider the bill (H. R. 6771) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I would inquire, if the bill is taken up now——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. An inquiry is in order, I presume; a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A parliamentary inquiry is in order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then I make the parliamentary inquiry of the Chair, whether if the bill is taken up now it will be under the five-minute rule?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be.

Mr. HOAR. That is not my purpose.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator from Massachusetts says it is not his purpose to have the bill considered under the five-minute rule. So I thought.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hear it, if there be no objection.

Mr. HOAR. It is not my purpose to have the bill taken up under the five-minute rule, but it is my purpose simply to have it taken up and proceed to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks on reflection that the Chair was in error in replying to the Senator from Nebraska. If the Senate agrees to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, the Chair thinks that the bill will be before the Senate at large.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to state further that it is not my purpose to press a vote upon the bill or to press any formal action upon it to-day. I suppose it would go over, of course, in the interest of the interstate-commerce bill at 2 o'clock at least and perhaps before. I propose to ask the Senate to listen to the reading of the report, which is a few pages, and the reading of the amended bill, and then to make a brief statement, which will not occupy more than ten minutes, perhaps—not a speech—and then let the matter go over.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me, I desire to inquire if it would not be well to ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bills favorably reported upon the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. This is a House bill favorably reported on the Calendar, and such an order would put it at the foot.

Mr. HARRIS. I can readily see how the Senator from Massachusetts may desire to take up a particular House bill, as perhaps every other Senator may.

Mr. HOAR. It would require unanimous consent, I suppose, to make a general order to proceed to the consideration of a number of bills by name or an amendment of the rules.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course it would require unanimous consent, unless it were presented in the form of a resolution changing the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that this debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senate will pardon me, as this is a very important matter. This is an extremely important bill, as every Senator within the sound of my voice knows. It undertakes to deal with a vast indebtedness to the Government, and it undertakes to remove from further discussion and dispute a great many complicated questions. It is a bill which has excited a good deal of interest in the country. I suppose I am not saying anything which will be disputed anywhere when I say that it has excited an immense deal of interest among stock-jobbers and speculators, and that newspapers are full of all manner of discussions pro and con, some of which, of course (I make no such general charge against the press of the country), are inspired by the interest of speculative dealers in stocks.

This measure as reported has been the result of great care. It is not stimulated or instigated by any railroad, but the result of the original investigation of the Judiciary Committee, looking very carefully into the whole subject with such aid as the representatives of the Government have afforded them. It seems to me that it is proper that the bill should be brought at an early day before the Senate, and that the principle upon which it proceeds should be understood by the Senate, which will be largely the result of reading the report, and that a brief statement should be made in addition to what is contained in the printed report. After that is done I shall propose to let the bill stand over until to-morrow, and I suppose under the rules it will require another motion to bring it up at that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, that the bill be now taken up for consideration.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk began to read the House bill.

Mr. HOAR. I inquire of the Chair if the Secretary is reading the House bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Secretary is reading the House bill.

Mr. HOAR. That, of course, is the proper and regular way; but the House bill is quite a long one, and I ask unanimous consent that the reading of that bill at this time be waived, and that the substitute reported by the Judiciary Committee may be alone read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent of the Senate that the reading of the House bill be dispensed with, and that the Secretary read the substitute reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will proceed to read the substitute.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to ascertain the amount of the respective indebtedness of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Kansas Pacific Railroad Company, the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company, the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and the Western Pacific Railroad Company, to which the subsidy bonds of the United States were advanced in aid of the construction of the Pacific railroads and branches, as of the 1st day of April, 1885, upon the same principle as if the whole sum of said bonds and interest paid and to be paid by the United States thereon, and not theretofore repaid by credits on account thereof, were to be paid to the United States in cash on said day. And the said sums shall be computed and ascertained as follows:

First. From the sums which shall on said 1st day of April, 1885, have accrued as interest paid or payable down to that day by the United States on said bonds, and not already reimbursed to the United States, there shall be deducted the amounts in the sinking fund properly applicable to the respective companies.

Second. The balance remaining shall be added to the sum of the principal of said bonds attributable, respectively, to the said Central Pacific Railroad Company and the said Union Pacific Railroad Company in the settlement hereinafter provided for.

Third. And there shall be also added to said principal sums the amount of the interest yet to accrue and be paid by the United States on said bonds, so as to ascertain the total sums that would be due to the United States for principal and interest paid on said bonds at their maturity if no further payment or reimbursement were in any wise made by any of said companies in respect thereto after said 1st day of April, 1885.

Fourth. The present worth as of said last-named day of said total sums shall then be computed, without compounding, on the basis that money is worth 3 per cent. interest per annum. And the final sums so computed and ascertained shall be deemed the sums that would be paid in cash on said 1st day of April, 1885, by said companies, if payment in cash were to be made.

SEC. 2. That the Union Pacific Railway Company, successor to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and the said Central Pacific Railroad Company be, and they hereby are, authorized to make, issue, and deliver to the Secretary of the Treasury, who is hereby authorized and directed to receive the same, each its one hundred and twenty several bonds of redemption, each bearing date the 1st day of April, A. D. 1885, to an aggregate amount equal to the balance of said indebtedness so computed and ascertained as in section 1 of this act is provided, that is to say, the Central Pacific shall issue its bonds for the debt due by it to the United States and also the debt due by the Western Pacific to the United States, and the Union Pacific shall issue its bonds for its debt due the United States and also the debt of the Kansas Pacific, the Central Branch Pacific of the Union Pacific, and the Sioux City and Pacific Railroads; and each of said bonds shall provide for and bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum for the time each bond has to run; and each of said bonds shall be for the equal one hundred and twentieth part of the balance of such debt and interest so ascertained. Each of said bonds shall be payable semi-annually, with interest at 3 per cent. per annum, in lawful money of the United States, the first thereof on the 1st day of October, 1885, the second on the 1st day of April, 1886, and so on on the 1st days of October and April thereafter until all said bonds shall have been fully paid and discharged; and each of said bonds, respectively, when paid, shall be thereupon canceled and surrendered to said company. Said bonds of redemption shall be received by and on behalf of the United States in provisional payment of the bonds so issued by the United States to said companies mentioned in section 1 of this act: Provided, however, That no money shall be paid to the said several companies, or any of them, or any of their successors or assigns, from the United States Treasury, for or on account of services rendered to the United States, or any department of the Government thereof, over or upon the said railroad and telegraph line so aided by the advances of subsidy bonds, or upon any railroad or telegraph line owned, leased, or operated by said company, until the bond next maturing shall be fully paid as herein provided; but the obligation to pay said bonds so to be executed to the United States by said companies, and the obligation of the United States to pay for services, shall be deemed otherwise independent.

SEC. 3. That the statutory lien and security created and subsisting under and by virtue of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1862, and the act of July 2, 1864, and the act of May 7, 1878, to secure the repayment of said subsidy bonds, and the interest thereon, including and together with the whole line of all of the said railroad companies, and also any railroad owned by them, wherever the same may be situated, and all their telegraph lines, their rolling stock, fixtures, and property of every kind and description forming a part of the operating property of said companies, as well as that which they, their successors or assigns, may hereafter acquire, shall be and remain as security for the payment of the bonds of redemption herein authorized until the same are fully paid: Provided, however, That said Central Pacific and Union Pacific Companies, respectively, or their successors as aforesaid, shall be entitled at any time to prepay or anticipate the payment and discharge of said bonds of redemption so held in the United States Treasury; and to that end it shall be lawful for said companies, their successors or assigns, respectively, to make, issue, and dispose of their bonds to an aggregate not exceeding the amount of their said respective bonds of redemption which may remain then outstanding and unpaid, together with the amount of the first-mortgage bonds of said companies outstanding, to bear such rate of interest and to run for such term as may be deemed most expedient, and to secure the same by mortgages upon their respective railroads, telegraph, equipment, franchises, and property, said bonds and mortgages to be subject and subordinate to said lien and security of the United States until the same shall be extinguished; and upon such payment of all said bonds to the United States the said statutory lien and security in favor of the United States shall thereupon cease and be of no effect; but the duty of each and every of said companies, respectively, and their successors and assigns, to obey and perform all the requirements of law in all other respects shall continue to exist; and upon any anticipated payment of said bonds of redemption the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to abate from said bonds interest on the amount thereof, from and after the date of such payment to the maturity thereof, at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum; and whatever mortgages any of said companies may execute in pursuance of the provisions of this section shall be made in all things in strict conformity to the laws of the States or the Territories in which the property mortgaged is situate; and that in respect of all the property that exists in any State or Territory, the security of the United States shall be made by a mortgage or other suitable conveyance of such form, tenor, and effect as shall make the security a valid and legal one under the law of such State or Territory: Provided, That neither of said companies shall use or dispose of any of its property or assets, otherwise than in the ordinary and proper course of its current business, without the consent of the President of the United States first obtained: And provided further, That no dividends shall be paid by either of said companies unless the same shall have been actually earned, nor unless such company shall have paid to the United States the amount of all matured indebtedness then due and payable under this act, and shall also have paid all debts which have previously matured which are secured by a lien paramount to that of the United States.

SEC. 4. That so long as each and every of said companies shall keep their said railroads and telegraph lines in proper repair and use, and shall at all times transmit dispatches over said telegraph line, and transport mails, troops, munitions of war, and supplies of public stores upon said railroads for the Government, or any Department thereof, whenever required to do so (at fair and reasonable rates of compensation, not to exceed the lowest rates paid by any private party for the same kind of service, and subject to and bound by the provisions of any act of Congress, and the authority exercised thereunder, relating to postal, military, or any other Government transportation), and shall give the Government preference in the use of the same for all the purposes aforesaid, as mentioned in the sixth section of the act of July 1, 1862, and all acts amendatory of said act, and shall make punctual payment of the said bonds of redemption, no other or further sums shall be demanded or required of the company so performing said service and complying with this act; and none of the penalties or liabilities provided for in said acts, or any of them, shall be incurred by or enforced upon said companies while such due performance of all duties and punctual payments shall continue, but all such payments, requirements, penalties, and liabilities shall be suspended and not deemed to be due or payable, owing or incurred, until default of some of the provisions of the acts relating to and in force respecting said companies shall be made, in which case they shall stand revived and continue in force in the same manner and to the same extent as if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 5. That the acceptance of this act shall be deemed and held to be an acceptance of the act approved May 7, 1878, entitled "An act to alter and amend the act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of said first-mentioned act."

SEC. 6. That a failure for six months to pay any of said redemption bonds as the same shall become due and payable as hereinbefore provided shall, at the option of Congress or of the President of the United States, be deemed, taken, and held to make all the said bonds due and payable, and all the rights and securities of the United States may be thereupon enforced.

SEC. 7. That this act shall take effect, as to said companies and their branches, respectively, as hereinbefore described, upon their acceptance by their boards of directors, and under their corporate seals, signed by their presidents and countersigned by their secretaries, respectively, being filed or deposited with the Secretary of the Treasury, within three months from the passage of this act; but if such acceptance be not so filed, said companies shall take no benefit therefrom. Upon said acceptance being filed and the settlement in this act provided for being completed, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to sell any securities held in the sinking fund for said companies. And said settlement shall be completed on or before the 1st day of October, A. D. 1885.

SEC. 8. That if said companies shall fail to accept the foregoing provisions of this act, or if said settlement shall fail to be completed as and within the time in this act provided, there shall be charged and collected from such company or companies, their successors and assigns, so failing, from and after the 1st day of July, 1885, 35 per cent. of their annual gross earnings, to be ascertained as provided in section 1 of the act of May 7, 1878, in lieu of the 25 per cent. provided for in said act; and to that end said act of May 7, 1878, commonly called the "sinking-fund act," and any and all amendments or modifications thereof, be, and the same are hereby, extended to the Kansas Pacific Railroad Company, to the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company, and to the Central Branch of the Union Pacific Railroad Company; and said act, and all amendments or modifications thereof, shall henceforth apply to said corporations equally as to those specifically named in said act.

SEC. 9. That in the event of the non-acceptance of the provisions of this act by said companies, or in the event of the failure to complete the settlement hereinbefore provided for in this act, it is further provided that section 3 of said act of May 7, 1878, be, and the same hereby is, so amended as to allow the Secretary of the Treasury to invest in the sinking funds of said companies, in the first-mortgage bonds of said companies, or any bonds or securities of the United States, in his discretion; or he may, with the assent of the companies, apply the same to the extinguishment of the interest of the subsidy bonds, the Government to refund the same on demand at any time, if at any time it becomes necessary in order to meet any debts or obligations of the said corporations prior in lien to said interest.

SEC. 10. That it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to cause the provisions of this act to be enforced, and he shall take all steps needful to that end, and shall make report to the President each year or oftener thereon, which report shall be laid before Congress. And until the settlement in this act provided for shall be completed, all existing provisions of law relating to said companies, respectively, shall remain in force; and on and after said 1st day of October, 1885, sections 8 and 9 of this act shall, if said settlement fail to be completed, take effect.

SEC. 11. That this act shall be deemed and taken to be a public act to all intents and purposes, and shall be subject to alteration, amendment, or repeal, as in the judgment of Congress the public good may require.

Mr. HOAR. Let the report be now read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report of the Judiciary Committee will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. HOAR January 28, 1885:

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration House bill 6771, report the same back with an amendment and recommend its passage.

The bills referred to relate to, and attempt to provide for, the ascertainment and settlement of the debts due the United States by the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and the Western Pacific Railroad Company, the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Kansas Pacific Railroad Company, the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company, and the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company.

In the investigation of this most important matter the committee have endeavored to devise some means by which the Government could best secure the payment of the debt due the United States by the several companies named, and at the same time do justice to the companies and parties interested besides.

It may be well for a moment to revert to the reasons why the Government consented to be connected with these enterprises, and the causes which lead to the impressing upon them the character, in any way, of national undertakings. These are most forcibly stated and set forth by Judge Davis, speaking for the Supreme Court of the United States, in United States vs. Union Pacific Railroad (91 U. S. Rep., 79, et seq.), as follows:

"Many of the provisions in the original act of 1862 are outside of the usual course of legislative action concerning grants to railroads, and can not be properly construed without reference to the circumstances which existed when it was passed The war of the rebellion was in progress, and owing to complications with England the country had become alarmed for the safty of our Pacific possessions.

"The enterprise was viewed as a national undertaking for a national purpose, and the public mind was directed to the end in view rather than to the particular means for securing it. Although the road was a military necessity, there were other reasons active at the time in producing an opinion for its completion besides the protection of an exposed frontier; there was a vast unpeopled territory lying between the Missouri and Sacramento Rivers which was practically worthless without the facilities afforded by a railroad for the transportation of persons and property. With its construction the agricultural and mineral resources of this territory could be developed, settlements made where settlements were possible, and thereby the wealth and power of the United States largely increased; and there was also the pressing want, in time of peace even, of an improved and cheaper method for the transportation of the mails and of supplies for the Army and the Indians.

"It was in presence of these facts that Congress undertook to deal with the subject of this railroad. The difficulties in the way of building it were great, and by many intelligent persons considered insurmountable.

"The scheme for building a railroad 2,000 miles in length, across mountains, over deserts, and through a country inhabited by Indians, jealous of intrusion upon their rights, was universally regarded at the time as a bold and hazardous undertaking. It is nothing to the purpose that the apprehended difficulties in a great measure disappeared after trial, and that the road was constructed at less cost of time and money than had been considered possible. No argument can be drawn from the wisdom that comes after the fact.

"The project for building the road was not conceived for private ends, and the prevalent opinion was that it could not be worked out by private capital alone. It was a national work, originating in national necessities, and requiring national assistance.

"The primary object of the Government was to advance its own interests, and it endeavored to engage individual co-operation as a means to an end—the securing a road which could be used for its own purposes."

These corporations are, then, except the Central Pacific Railroad, creatures of the United States. They were brought into existence for public purposes, and their property, to a large extent, is devoted to public uses. Many severe accusations have been brought before the committee against these companies, as to their management and control, and as to exorbitant exactions in many instances, and invidious distinctions made by them in the direction of their affairs. Of the truth of many of these charges the committee have no doubt, but they do not consider these as bearing largely on the question of the relations of the United States as a creditor endeavoring to obtain adequate security for its debt. This is to them simply a question of how to ascertain the indebtedness of these companies to the Government and secure its payment, and not to regulate the freights and charges of these companies, propositions more directly and naturally connected with other and different measures. There can be no doubt very gross abuses have been committed, but with them the committee have not thought they were concerned in this proceeding further than as they touched or affected the indebtedness to the Government and its security. In this connection the language of Chief-Justice Waite, speaking for the Supreme Court in the Sinking-fund cases (99 U. S. Reps., 723), will not be considered inappropriate:

"Without undertaking, in any measure, to cast censure upon those by whose matchless energy this great road was built, and, as if by magic, put into operation, it is a fact which can not be denied, that when the road was in condition to be run its bonds and stocks represented vastly more than the actual cost of the labor and material which went into its construction. Great undertakings like this, whose future is at the time uncertain, requiring as they do large amounts of money to carry them on, seem to make it necessary that extraordinary inducements should be held out to capitalists to enter upon them, since a failure is almost sure to involve those who make the venture in financial ruin; it is not, however, the past with which we are now to deal, but rather the present and future; we are not sitting in judgment upon the history of this corporation, but upon its present condition. Dealing then with the present condition of these companies, and anticipating as far as can be their future condition, the question is one merely between creditor and debtor, and that is how to so deal with the debtor as to best secure the creditor in his just claim against the debtor, and the solution of this is to be had upon common business principles, applied to the actual existing state of affairs as connected with these obligations."

The history of these debts and their present status may be found in the annual report of the Commissioner of Railroads, made at this session of Congress, page 18 et seq., and from which the committee beg to quote somewhat at length:

"In my report for last year, page 15, I recommended that Congress consider the practicability of funding the debt, and called attention to the fact that under the decision of the First Comptroller, affirmed and adopted by the Secretary of the Treasury in his circular of June 27, 1883, the Government is liable to pay in cash for all services rendered by the bonded Pacific railroads over any portions of their roads, owned, leased, or operated, which have not been subsidized in bonds. I added 'it is clear that under this decision, which is in accord with the decision of the Court of Claims (U. P. R. R. v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cls., 353) the companies have a manifest interest in diverting traffic from the subsidized portions of the roads.' I also called attention to the detailed statement of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and to the fact that the earnings on the subsidized portion of the road diminished in greater proportion during the year 1882 than on the non-aided portion. Comparison of the statement on page 43 of my report for 1883 with that on page 43 of this report will show the net earnings of 1882 on the aided portion to have been $3,171,680.93, and for 1883 $2,646,122.76, a decrease of $525,558.19, or $131,389.55 of the proportion of such earnings due to the Government.

"The Central Pacific system, in connection with the Galveston, Harrisburg and San Antonio system, embraces a line from Ogden, Utah, by way of San Francisco, to New Orleans, a distance from Ogden to San Francisco of 895 miles, from San Francisco to El Paso of 1,286 miles, and from El Paso, over the Galveston, Harrisburg and San Antonio sytem, to New Orleans of 1,209 miles, a total distance of 3,390 miles, exclusive of 915 miles of auxiliary roads, and 490 miles of steamer lines. Of this total mileage only 860.66 miles are subsidized with bonds and are under the operation of the act of May 7, 1878.

"The figures for the year 1883 show still more strikingly the decrease of earnings per mile on the subsidized portion of this system. The comparative statement of earnings and expenses on page 40 of this report shows that while there was an average decrease of earnings per mile on the whole system in 1882 of $462.35, the decrease on the non-aided portion was only $227.47 per mile as against $553.26 on the aided portion. During the year 1883 the average decrease per mile on the whole system was $183.30, but the earnings on the non-aided portion increased $57.62 per mile, while there was a decrease on the aided portion of $835.63 per mile.

"These figures clearly exhibit the grave uncertainties which must be encountered, in any plan which makes the payment of this vast debt depend upon a mere percentage of net earnings. This contrasted decrease is doubtless to be largely attributed to the natural diversion of traffic from the subsidized portions of the line, which lie wholly north and east of San Francisco, consequent upon the opening of new and competing lines through a territory whose traffic before the opening of the Southern Pacific and the Atlantic and Pacific roads was necessarily limited to the Central Pacific, but a large part of which is naturally tributary to the newer lines, and which mainly induced their construction.

"For all foreign freights the Atlantic seaports are the objective point.

	Miles.
From San Francisco to New York, via the Central and Union Pacific	3,334
From San Francisco to New York, via Atlantic and Pacific	3,458
From Los Angeles to New York, via Atlantic and Pacific	3,176
From San Francisco to New Orleans, via Southern Pacific	2,495
From San Francisco to Galveston, via Southern Pacific	2,184
From Los Angeles to New Orleans, via Southern Pacific	2,014

"It will thus be seen that the Atlantic and Pacific has opened a very formidable competition to New York and San Francisco and all points to the south of it, and that the Southern Pacific, on its line to New Orleans and Galveston, has opened to the whole of California, even to its northernmost extremity, the shortest present line to the Atlantic ports. The point on the Central Pacific of equal distance between New York and New Orleans at which, other things being equal, the traffic destined for foreign exportation would seek the New York or New Orleans terminus would be about four hundred and nineteen miles east of San Francisco.

"The Union Pacific is now subjected to the competition in the territory south of its line of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, and the Denver and Rio Grande roads, which parallel it through its whole length from its eastern terminus to Ogden. It is also threatened with a no less formidable competition in the near future by the construction of a line through the territory north of it in the interest of the Chicago and Northwestern, upon a line, partially surveyed beyond the terminus at Valentine, of the Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley Railroad Company, of which two hundred and ninety-three miles west of the Missouri River are already constructed, and which, when completed, will open a line of easy grade and construction again parallel to this road through its entire length.

"By reference to the statements on pages 14 and 15 of this report it will be seen that up to July 1, 1884, the United States has paid $65,099,504.18 as interest on the subsidy bonds, while the total credits of the several companies on the interest account, as shown by the Treasury statement, were $18,804,122.28, leaving an unpaid balance of $44,295,381.90. This, added to the principal sum of the bonds, 64,623,512, makes $108,918,893.90. Deduct from this sum $6,084,099.82, the amount now in the sinking fund, and there remains a balance of $102,834,794.08, the amount of their indebtedness July 1, 1884, none of which is due until the maturity of the bonds.

"The annual interest paid by the United States on these bonds is $3,877,410.72. The total average annual repayment by the companies thus far has been $2,266,-624.79, showing an average annual increase of the debt of $1,610,785.93.

"Of the $2,266,624.79, the average annual payment, $1,013,016.64, is carried to the sinking fund, and only $1,253,608.15 is carried to the interest account. The United States, therefore, advances annually for interest an average of $2,623,802.57 in excess of the annual repayments of interest by the companies.

"The first-mortgage bonds of these companies respectively are equal in amount to the subsidy bonds issued by the Government, and mature about the same time. They are secured by the mortgage pledge not only of all the property of the companies respectively, but of their 'corporate rights, privileges, and franchise.' Foreclosure would pass the title to the purchaser, discharged from the Government lien, and exempt from all legislative interference based upon the existing subsidy debt.

"By section 10 of the act of 1864 they have priority of the lien over the Government.

"By section 8 of the act of May 7, 1878, the sinking fund created by that act 'shall be held for the protection, security, and benefit of the lawful and just holders of any mortgage and indebtedness of such companies, respectively, lawfully paramount to the rights of the United States.'

"The continuation of the sinking-fund method is therefore to accumulate a fund which, in the possible insolvency of any of these companies, will stand for the benefit of the first-mortgage creditors, and must be paid to them should the foreclosure of the first mortgage for any reason fail to realize the debt thus secured.

"The relation of the Government to the debts of these railroads is shown by the following tables:

"The first-mortgage debts, at their maturity, assuming that the interest in the mean time will be paid, and all of which has priority over the subsidy lien, will be as follows:

Central Pacific	$27,853,000
Union Pacific	27,229,000
Kansas Pacific	6,303,000
Sioux City and Pacific	1,628,000
Central Branch Union Pacific	1,600,000
	64,613,000

"The subsidy debt to the United States was, on the 30th of June, 1884, $102,834,-794.08, and at the maturity of the subsidy bonds (say 1898) will be about $128,500,-000, allowing to the companies the average of past annual credits, and assuming the average increase to be, as in the past, about $1,600,000 per year. In other words, the total indebtedness at maturity will closely approximate $193,000,000, including both the first mortgage and subsidy debts.

"It necessarily follows that if the Government, as a second-mortgage creditor, would protect its debt in the event of the foreclosure of the first mortgage, it must bid to an amount sufficient to cover both, or about $193,000,000, a sum vastly in excess and probably twice as much as the same property would now cost to construct.

"Should the property be sold to any purchaser other than the Government for a sum less than enough to cover both these debts, the Government must lose the difference. If sold to the Government, it must pay in cash the whole first mortgage, amounting to about $64,613,000, and become the owner, contrary to any policy of the Government which has hitherto obtained, and operate them in the face of all the competition of parallel and rival roads which they must necessarily encounter. Nor is there any probability that the Government could reimburse its outlay by any resale.

"Should the debt be funded as proposed, each semi-annual payment would be so nearly, or possibly quite, paid by the current earnings for Government transportation—if with the consent of the companies the whole may be so applied—that the balance, if any, could be easily paid out of the general earnings, and under such circumstances it would be clearly in the interest of the companies to pay.

"In my annual report for 1882 I called attention to the unsatisfactory working of the present system. I said, page 15:

"'It is manifest that when the bonds mature, at the close of the present century, the present sinking fund will not be sufficient to meet them, and if left to be dealt with then as a mere book account, with the risk of possible diminution of income from the rapidly increasing competition which they must surely encounter, adjustment may then be more difficult and embarrassing than now. * * *

"'It is respectfully submitted that it is worthy of careful consideration whether it would not be wisest and best for Congress now to commute the present mode of payment into one of fixed amounts not dependent upon the fluctuations of net earnings or the contingencies of competition, which might cause net earnings to disappear.'

"In my report for 1883, pages 13-16, I again called attention to the subject. Without repeating that discussion, I may quote my opinion as then expressed, that—

"'At the rate provided for in the Thurman act it would require a century or more to accumulate a fund sufficient to discharge this debt, and with strong probability that by this method it can not be done. Nor would it be practicable to increase the percentage without manifest detriment, as well to the companies as their patrons. The payment, by whatever mode it be collected, must come from the earnings of the road. If the rates be too high the burden falls with onerous weight upon the business, and would work directly in the interest of non-aided competing lines.'"

It is further shown by the Commissioner's report, as all who have examined the matter now fully understand, that the act of May 7, 1878 (the Thurman sinking-fund act), has failed to accomplish its ends and purposes, and it is manifest the payment of these debts can not be secured by and under this measure, and this from causes that could not be anticipated when the act was passed.

With this array of facts before the committee, and an exhibit of the liabilities and the assets of these roads, as appears more fully in the report of the Secretary of the Interior at this session (pamphlet, President's message and reports of heads of Departments, page 189, et seq.), the committee have concluded that while harsh and coercive measures might, to some extent, punish justly these companies for failing to meet their obligations, they might also, and most probably would, result in great loss to the Government in a failure to be reimbursed for outlays for these roads. The crippling or breaking down these companies, or the compelling a sale at which the Government would be forced to bid to protect herself, would not be wise policy. Whatever mismanagement may have attended these roads in the past, and however little they appeal to the sympathy of Congress for time in the payment of their debts, yet the surest and speediest possible payment, as matters now stand, will be secured, in the judgment of the committee, by an extension of time, with large further securities for payment, in which to meet these debts. And to this end, concurring in the views of both the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Railroads, the committee favor the bill with amendments as before indicated.

The bill is in brief this: to fix a day on which the indebtedness of the companies respectively to the Government shall be ascertained upon the same principle as if the whole debt and interest were to be paid on that day, with a proper rebate of interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, and deducting from such amounts all payments made by the companies in money, or transportation, or otherwise, and extending the time at an interest of 3 per cent. The period for extension of payment of the last installment of the indebtedness is forty-six years beyond the date of maturity of the subsidy bonds, or an average extension of the whole debt of twenty-three years.

In consideration of the extension of time thus granted the companies are required to deposit with the Secretary of the Treasury bonds of redemption for the amount of the debt as ascertained in specific sums, one bond to mature every six months, and all the earning of the roads by Government transportation upon any roads owned, leased, or operated by the company shall be applied to the payment of the current maturing bonds of redemption, and no money shall be paid by the Government for transportation or service of any kind over the aided or non-aided roads until the bond next maturing shall be fully paid.

It extends the statutory lien and security now subsisting over all roads owned or operated, or hereafter acquired and wherever situated, by the companies, including telegraph lines, franchises, rolling-stock, and property of every kind and description, to remain as security for the bonds of redemption until all are paid, embracing over 5,000 miles of road not now held as security by the Government.

It also requires that the company accepting the provisions of this bill shall also accept the provisions of the Thurman act, yielding all questions of constitutionality of said act.

The plan further provides that either of said companies may prepay and discharge the debt in full at any time, and, as an inducement for such prepayment, an abatement of 3 per cent. per annum in interest is allowed, and the companies are authorized to mortgage their franchises and property for the purpose of raising funds to redeem these bonds of redemption if they see fit to do so. The sinking fund heretofore established in the Treasury is discontinued, but not till the bonds and mortgages provided for in the bill are executed and delivered.

The railroads and telegraph lines are required at all times to be at the service of the Government at rates as low as the lowest accorded to any individual for like service. A failure for six months to pay any of the redemption bonds at maturity, under the provisions of this bill, renders all of said bonds thereupon due and payable.

In order that the companies shall partake of the benefits of the proposed plan, they must accept the same under their corporate seals on or before April 1, 1885.

The purpose of the extension proposed is to bring the semi-annual payments sufficiently within the ability of the companies to render such payments entirely certain, and it can not, in the opinion of the committee, be of any vital consequence to the Government whether the debt be paid in fifty or sixty years, so long as its ultimate payment can be certainly secured.

The necessity of this extension further appears from the fact that the first-mortgage bonds of equal amount with the subsidy bonds mature at the same time, and these bonds having under the act of 1864 priority of lien over the Government, which stands in the relation of only a second-lien creditor, must be paid before the Government can obtain anything, and such payments would so strain the resources of the company that if no extension be given the probabilities are that the foreclosure of the first-mortgage bonds would extinguish the debt of the Government, unless it is prepared to pay for the Union Pacific, including the Kansas Pacific, and for the Central Pacific sixty-odd millions of dollars to cover the debt with interest of the mortgage which has priority over the Government.

If the Government became the purchaser and thereby the owner of these roads, it would thus find itself engaged in the railroad business generally, which would be altogether a new and very questionable policy in its history, and then it is by no means certain that, after paying this large prior debt, the Government would reimburse itself with the entire management and control of the roads in its hands, at least for many years beyond the time contemplated in the extension provided for by the bill. And there is scarcely any reasonable probability that the Government could reimburse itself for this outlay by any resale of the roads. In the event of the companies failing to accept the provisions of the plan of extension, "the Thurman sinking-fund act" remains in full force and effect as to all of the aided roads, including the three lines not hitherto embraced thereunder, with the percentage increased from 25 to 35 per cent.

If the Thurman sinking-fund act remains in force by the neglect of the companies to accept the plan heretofore described, then the Secretary of the Treasury is given enlarged power in the investment of the fund. The Attorney-General is required to look to a strict enforcement of this act.

Believing the plan of adjustment provided for in the bill herewith presented is fair and just, and will secure the Government in the payment of the debts due her by the roads, the committee submit it to the Senate as amended.

Your committee therefore propose to amend the bill by striking out the preamble and all after the enacting clause, and inserting the substitute herewith submitted. They further propose to amend the title of the bill by substituting the title herewith reported and marked "A:"

"A.

"A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act, and to provide for a settlement of the claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain of said railroads, and to secure to the United States the payment of all indebtedness of certain of the companies therein mentioned."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, if the condition of my voice will permit me to make a brief statement, I shall ask a few minutes at the present time in explaining the theory on which this amendment goes. I suppose every Senator has a general knowledge of the history of the Union Pacific Railroad so called, the line connecting the Eastern States at a point which was then the western extremity of compact settlement in 1862 with the Pacific Ocean. Congress intended, for reasons which are very familiar and which are stated in the report, to make a great railroad line from the east to the west, which should be situated among the railroads of the country, having a relation to the transportation of traffic, freight, and passengers east and west, something like that which the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers had north and south, and which they are to have in the future when all the land on their banks is filled with cities, farms, and compact settlements. That was intended to be a great, well-endowed, solvent, independent line, which would be beyond the reach of stock-jobbers or persons who were ambitious to use it for speculative ends, and which would bear to the commerce of the country a relation like that of the Mississippi River or of New York Harbor. The reasons which caused that expectation to fail are also known; they were the subject of investigation both in this and in the other branch of Congress, and they are a memory in our political and business history which nobody desires needlessly to revive. It turned out that the bonds which had been given by the Government to aid in the building and endowment of the road, the first-mortgage bonds which the Government permitted to be a lien upon the road and its property prior to its own, the mortgage bonds which were secured by the mortgage of the land grants of the companies and other special mortgages made on special properties of the company, were all divided among the persons concerned in the building of the road, leaving the road crippled, poor, embarrassed, and without provision for the security of its indebtedness when it should become due.

Congress at that time had its choice of two remedies which were proposed. One was to repeal the charter of the Union Pacific Railroad, which was the one of these roads that was the creature of the Government, and to have the road managed for an indefinite period by commissioners to be appointed by the President of the United States, and to allow the stockholders and holders of bonds, creditors of the road, to prove in a judicial proceeding to be devised by Congress their claims against the road, and show that the owners of the stock and the bonds were free from the taint of the transactions to which I have referred, and then that a new corporation should be made, the Government coming in to succeed to the apparent debts of the persons whose debts were exposed to this taint and to the stock held by stockholders who were in complicity with these proceedings, so that the just stockholders and the Government should make a new corporation owning the stock to the extent of the original stock, and the honest creditors and the Government should be creditors owning the debts to the amount of the original debts.

That scheme, which was prepared by two eminent counsel then employed by the Department of Justice to represent the interests of the United States, did not for various reasons meet the approbation of the committee of the House of Representatives which had charge of the investigation, of which committee I was then a member, the principal reason being the injury to our institutions of having a corporation managed by five persons, who might be five politicians; we did not know who would be appointed or what skill or knowledge or even what integrity they might have; and it would give rise, if not to actual scandals, certainly to actual fears and rumors of scandals. So that scheme was dismissed.

The other scheme was the one which was adopted; the only other alternative suggested. It was to provide for a suit in the Supreme Court of the United States, to be instituted by the Government, in which all the persons who had received dividends of stock or bonds, or in any other way, in excess of a reasonable dividend, should be made parties, and should be compelled to refund to the treasury of the road (and of course to that extent increasing the security of the United States for its debts) what they had so wrongfully received.

The Supreme Court of the United States held that this suit could not be maintained, some of the judges dissenting. By that decision the United States are bound. Since that time the stock in this road has almost entirely changed. Some year or two ago, when the stock of the road was above par, statements were made by persons high in the confidence of the public that this road would undoubtedly immediately and for the future earn enough, in addition to discharging its obligations, to make it a good dividend-paying road, paying 6 to 10 per cent., and that its stock was a valuable investment at par. Thereupon, it being difficult to find profitable investments, Government bonds yielding only 3 per cent. interest, a very large number of persons, millions upon millions of dollars in my own State being represented, proceeded to purchase the stock of this road, and it is held by widows, by orphans, by trustees, by persons in humble places in life, by savings banks who represent such persons, by charitable institutions, and by educational institutions. Mr. Adams, the present president, who has lately come into the presidency, has made an analysis of the stock of this road, by which it appears that only about one-sixth of its entire stock is held by persons who can be supposed for a moment to hold it for speculative or stock-jobbing purposes.

It did not seem to the committee I believe, certainly it did not seem to me, that it was just for the United States to deal with the present question of the condition of the road by constantly remembering and citing against it the faults or wrongdoings of twenty years ago. We determined for good reasons to let the road live and not to kill it. Then we determined for good reasons to let it go on and manage its own business, let its stock remain salable upon the market as the stock of other corporations is. And therefore it seems to us that although the remedy of the United States failed, yet still that the duty of Congress is to deal with this road to-day with absolute justice, looking out of course in the first instance for the interest of the Government as a creditor, without being affected in our judgment by the faults of past years, except so far as those faults operate as a warning to be careful and strict in exacting the securities which shall prevent their repetition.

Within the past year a gentleman has come into the management of the road bearing an honored historic name, but not needing the historic honors which have come down to him from his ancestors to make those who know him ready to give him their confidence as a person who by his capacity and by his integrity is fit to be trusted in the management of a great enterprise like this; and he has undertaken the management of the road, called to it by the majority of its stockholders, with the purpose, as he declared publicly and privately, to have the road so managed that all its obligations to the Government and to its creditors shall be met, the first obligation or duty of the management of the road being scrupulously, fully, and exactly to discharge those, and then to manage it as a road to earn money for its proprietors like other business enterprises. Now, though I suppose I speak the opinion of the entire Committee on the Judiciary, I am authorized only to express my own; and I say that for one I confide in that as the purpose of the present management of the road, and therefore am prepared to recommend to the Senate and vote for a scheme which will in my judgment afford perfect security for the Government, be best for its business interests and for its debts, and at the same time will permit this road to escape bankruptcy and go on and discharge its public duties as a carrier and its duty to its stockholders as a business enterprise.

Then all the roads mentioned in this bill, which are the Central Pacific and one or two roads which are its dependents; the Union Pacific and the Kansas Pacific, which is its dependent, and the Sioux City and Pacific, which is classed here with the Union Pacific, but will have to have a separate clause in the bill relating to it, for it does not belong where it is now put in the bill—these roads all together will owe to the United States in twelve years or thereabouts from the present time when their debts mature—they all mature from 1894 to 1898—a sum (deducting what the Thurman act proposes shall be paid into a sinking fund), as near as it can be calculated, amounting to about $129,000,000; and the property of the companies is subject to a prior debt to become due at the same time which will bring it up to about $193,000,000. The precise accuracy of those figures depends of course on the amount which will be paid in the mean time under the provisions of the Thurman act, which depends on the amount of business of the roads, but that is about the amount.

If things go on as they are at the present time, the United States will be confronted with this problem: It must pay off the prior indebtedness, which will amount then to over $60,000,000—I speak in round numbers—and must then take the road to be run by itself as a great railroad manager, or to be sold in the market where the United States, of course, will be the victim of any combination of purchasers who will undertake to buy it for a song, bankrupting and destroying the present ownership of the road, or we must adopt some other method at that time.

The proposition of the committee is a plan which does not come from the roads; it is not the suggestion of the roads; it comes in its main feature from the Secretary of the Interior and the Railroad Commissioner, and is matured in its details by the committee of the Senate. It proposes to divide the indebtedness, to ascertain the present worth of the indebtedness; in the first place to apply the sinking fund to the present debts; take that money and have the sinking fund applied at its existing value to the present debts; then calculate what the debt will amount to in 1896—I think that is the year which is fixed upon—and then take the present worth of that sum, supposing money to be worth 3 per cent., which is, of course, the hardest rule that could be applied to the railroads, because 3 per cent. is the lowest point that money has touched, and it will take at the present time a larger sum at 3 per cent. to be worth the sum fixed upon in 1896 than would probably be required by what will be the actual rate which securities will bear in the interval. But that rule has been adopted by the committee. Then, having obtained that sum, it is to be divided into one hundred and twenty parts for each railroad in regard to the indebtedness of each, and a bond is to be given payable with interest at 3 per cent. every six months. That would amount to an extension of the debt to a period of sixty years from the present time, and to an extension of the indebtedness, deducting the twelve years which it runs now, about forty-eight years from the present time, and as the debt will be paid every six months, of course it will be an average payment of it in twenty-three years. It is, therefore, an extension of the credit to these companies for twenty-three years. That is the substance of it.

In return for that we get, in the first place, the expectation on our part that the roads will be able to pay that debt. We get instead of the probability of their becoming bankrupt and a certainty in my judgment of their becoming bankrupt if we do not adopt the scheme, an assurance of payment. We get in the next place the removal from the courts and from Congress and from the public mind of all the questions, which are very numerous and complicated, growing out of our present relations to the roads and growing out of the complicated provisions and details of the Thurman act. But we get further the subjection to the United States as security for the debt of the United States of all the railroads which these companies have built as extensions of their present lines, of all their interest in roads which they have acquired by taking their stock, and of every property wherever situated of the roads of every nature and kind whatever, which is required to be put into securities which will be satisfactory to the law officers of the United States. We get an additional security of more than 5,000 miles of railroad constructed, operating in many instances very profitably, that is not now in the existing mortgage.

I will not detain the Senate at this time by any longer or fuller statement.

Mr. CONGER. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. CONGER. Would these new bonds, which will be liens upon the old subsidized road and also upon the new roads, have any better security in point of priority of lien than the present bonds?

Mr. HOAR. Not in point of priority of lien over the prior debt to which the United States is now subjected.

Mr. CONGER. Will those bonds take the place of these?

Mr. HOAR. They will have to pay them at maturity.

Mr. CONGER. I mean to ask whether the present mortgage is relinquished?

Mr. HOAR. No; it is not the purpose or effect of the bill to relinquish the present mortgage; that stands, but is changed as to the terms of payment.

Mr. CONGER. The Government will have no additional security except the additional roads?

Mr. HOAR. That is the principal addition. I ought to say further that there are some detailed provisions, which I will not detain the Senate now by calling attention to, which remove doubts in regard to the right of the road to dispose of its property not in the ordinary course of business. The right to make dividends is limited, but they can not dispose of any property, except in the ordinary course of business, without getting the consent of the President of the United States.

Mr. SEWELL. I did not hear the first part of the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts, and I ask him what does the United States relinquish in the bill as reported?

Mr. HOAR. It relinquishes its right to have its debt paid in twelve years from the present time.

Mr. SEWELL. Is the interest the same?

Mr. HOAR. No.

Mr. SEWELL. Does not the present debt bear 6 per cent. interest?

Mr. HOAR. That will be computed at 6 per cent. interest.

Mr. SEWELL. Does not the report make it 3?

Mr. HOAR. On the present debt 6 per cent. interest is to be computed up to the time it is due.

Mr. SEWELL. And hereafter it bears how much?

Mr. HOAR. Hereafter it is to bear 3 per cent.

Mr. SEWELL. That is a relinquishment of 3 per cent., practically.

Mr. HOAR. I do not so understand it. We have no right to collect interest after the maturity of the debt.

Mr. SEWELL. But suppose it is not paid and the debt contiuues?

Mr. HOAR. Provided it is not paid at maturity, the United States need not trouble itself about the rate of interest after that. It is beyond any human being's idea where it is to go or how the debt is to be paid with a rate of interest of 6 per cent. after maturity.

Mr. SEWELL. Does the Senator then consider that the road is not worth the debt?

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from New Jersey is too good a business man not to know that that is a question to which a literal answer might convey a very incorrect impression. Suppose you should come to me as the counsel of some dry-goods merchant who had a million dollars of indebtedness, and who, if his business was now wound up or wound up six months hence, could not pay fifty cents on the dollar; but still, if his business went on and he had an extension over a period of time, he would be very sure to work out the whole of it. I could say I had no doubt of it. Those two statements would not be inconsistent. If I should say the business and property are worth the debt now you might find it difficult to answer that question literally.

Mr. SEWELL. I should say from reading the report that the Senator from Massachusetts had made up his mind that with this amount of debt bearing 6 per cent. interest the road could not pay it.

Mr. HOAR. That is my belief.

Mr. SEWELL. And that a reduction of 3 per cent. would allow the company to do it.

Mr. HOAR. My belief is this: Under the Thurman act there is very great and reasonable dispute as to the meaning; but as the Government claims the Thurman act to be, the roads would have been in bankruptcy last summer if it had been literally and rigidly insisted upon. The roads would be in bankruptcy within a year under the Thurman act administered according to the extremity of the Government claim. That is what I have to say about it. But suppose it goes on, suppose the Government claim is not rigidly administered until the courts have passed upon the various questions as to how much the companies shall pay into the sinking fund and what is the rate of compensation for their transportation of mails and other Government freight; I still think, if the railroad goes on according to its own construction and claim of the meaning of the Thurman act, that in 1896, this whole indebtedness of $193,000,000 becoming due at that moment, the roads then will be bankrupted and the property must either be run by the Government as a great railroad manager or sold for a song. So, then, what this bill does——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived. The unfinished business is the bill (H. R. 5461) to regulate interstate commerce and to prohibit unjust discrimination by common carriers.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent to say a word further. The 6 per cent. interest for the next twelve years reserved by the contract is to be received just as the principal without any relinquishment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts ask unanimous consent?

Mr. HOAR. I have the right under this bill to say what I choose. The Chair will recognize me on the present order of business.

Mr. SEWELL. The Senator from Massachusetts is answering my question.

Mr. HOAR. After the maturing of this debt the bill contemplates that interest is to be paid upon the debt on the same terms as the Government now is able to borrow money upon its indebtedness. That is the position of things. So in point of fact the operation will be, the Government paying 3 per cent. interest on the whole public debt or nearly the whole of it at that time, there will be $193,000,000 on which these roads will be supplying to the Government the 3 per cent. which is paid out till they pay off gradually the principal. It will amount to the same thing as if these roads in 1896, if they keep this provision of this bill, assumed and wiped out $193,000,000 of Government debt at that time.

Mr. SEWELL. I did not get exactly the time that the interest is computed up to.

Mr. HOAR. The bonds fall due thirty years from the time when they were advanced by the United States in the course of the construction of the Union Pacific Railroad, as the Senator knows very well, twenty-five miles at a time. They built twenty-five miles, and the Government commissioners reported that the twenty-five miles were finished in accordance with the terms of the law, and then they got so many bonds. The Senator from Iowa, I suppose, knows better than I do about that matter. They fall due in thirty years.

Mr. WILSON. They commence maturing in 1895 and continue until 1899.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, understanding the Senator from Massachusetts as yielding the floor, recognizes the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND].

Mr. HOAR. I yield the floor.

Mr. GARLAND. I do not claim it.

Mr. HOAR. I have got through, unless the Senator wishes to speak in reference to this colloquy.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business, and continue its consideration until the bill is finished.

Mr. GARLAND. I ask permission of the Senate to occupy ten minutes of its time on the matter brought up by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] is entitled to the floor on the interstate commerce bill.

Mr. GARLAND. I thought I was recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas was recognized.

Mr. GARLAND. I want to make a few remarks on the matter that the Senator from Massachusetts has called up.

Mr. PUGH. I will take the floor on the interstate commerce bill, and I will yield to the Senator from Arkansas ten minutes, if it is agreeable to the Senate.

Mr. GARLAND. The bill which the Senator from Massachusetts has been speaking to I wish to say a very few words about.

Last summer I reported a bill from the Judiciary Committee in reference to this general subject, but limited to the Central Pacific Railroad. For reasons that were then shown to the Senate the Union Pacific was omitted from that bill. This winter the Judiciary Committee having before it the House bill on this subject, on my own motion the bill in reference to the Central Pacific road was recommitted to the committee, and on the investigation had after the recommitment of that bill and the House bill the present bill is reported by the Senator from Massachusetts. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that it is substantially, only putting in the Union Pacific, the bill that I reported last summer in reference to the Central Pacific, being changed in a few particulars. There is one particular in which it is changed, to which I wish now to call the special attention of the Senate. I allude to the first, second, third, and fourth clauses of section 1.

Upon re-examination of the whole question as to two of these railroads the committee thought it was best to remedy what was a defect in the original legislation in regard to these roads in relation to the roads paying the interest. That was not in the bill that was on the Calendar last summer in reference to the Central Pacific Railroad. When the question came before the Supreme Court, as reported in ninety-first United States Reports, the court disposes of the question thus:

A provision in the charter that the grants thereby made are upon the condition that the company "shall pay said bonds at maturity," while it implies an obligation to pay both principal and interest when the bonds shall become due, does not imply an obligation to pay the interest as it semi-annually accrues. (U. S. vs. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 91 United States Reports, 72.)

The court, in reasoning upon that section, which was section 6 of the act, said that the language of the act led to that conclusion. It thereby left the United States paying current interest when the roads were not paying the current interest. The first, second, third, and fourth clauses of section 1 of the proposed bill are an attempt to remedy this, to make up as far as can be this difficulty that arose under the original legislation on the subject. The court, in giving this construction to section 6 of the original act, seems to incline to the conclusion that Congress purposely omitted to require the interest to be paid by the companies for reasons which I will not now detain the Senate by reading, that is, for supposed advantages that the Government had in the transportation of its mails, its munitions of war, and anything else it chose to send over the roads. The committee thought upon the investigation of this matter that it was proper to remedy this difficulty as far as possible, as it was probable the companies would have an undue advantage by this arrangement over the Government. The introduction of this new feature in these clauses of section 1 is for the purpose of making the Government whole, as far as it can; as it pays out current interest to receive current interest.

I thought it was best that I should give this explanation to the Senate on this particular feature of the bill. That is all I care to say now.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the fortification appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CHACE introduced a bill (S. 2600) for the relief of the Woonsocket National Bank of Woonsocket, R. I.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MAHONE introduced a bill (S. 2601) to remove the political disabilities of George T. Sinclair, of Virginia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MANDERSON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2602) to exempt the Young Men's Christian Association of Washington, D. C., from the payment of general taxes upon certain lands in Washington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 2603) for the relief of Andrew Burgess, John Hall, and William T. Roundtree, of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ALLISON. I present some letters and statements in the nature of a report on the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, and ask that they be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The Chair hears no objection, and the order will be made.

COAST-SURVEY REPORT.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report a resolution.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,000 extra copies of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, showing the progress made in said survey during the year ending June 30, 1884, for distribution by said Superintendent.

Mr. MANDERSON. That is the usual concurrent resolution, and I ask that it be considered at this time.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will not make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). The question is not one open to discussion.

Mr. CULLOM. I am very anxious to have the Senate sit to-morrow in order to finish the interstate-commerce bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5461) to regulate interstate commerce and to prohibit unjust discriminations by common carriers, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. BECK to strike out all after the word "reasonable," in line 14, section 1, down to and including the word "person," in line 31; as follows:

And any person or persons having purchased a ticket to be conveyed from one State to another, or paid the required fare, shall receive the same treatment and be afforded equal facilities and accommodations as are furnished all other persons holding tickets of the same class, without discrimination; but nothing in this act shall be construed to deny to railroads the right to provide separate accommodations for passengers as they may deem best for the public comfort or safety, or to relate to transportation relating to points wholly within the limits of one State: Provided, That no discrimination is made on account of race or color; and that furnishing separate accommodations, with equal facilities and equal comforts at the same charges, shall not be considered a discrimination. Nor shall any railroad company or its officers charge to or receive from any person who is to be conveyed from one State or Territory into another any sum exceeding 3 cents per mile for the distance to be traveled by such person.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. President, the question before the Senate is whether the Senate bill shall be substituted for the House bill as a remedy for admitted evils in interstate railroad and water transportation. The undisputed evils are clearly set forth in both bills. The methods and practices of transportation companies in all their unjust, injurious, and immoral character are seen and felt in every State, and the sufferers demand relief in some form from Congress. It is the duty of Congress to make an honest effort to meet the demand. What is the best thing to be done is the troublesome question. I frankly admit my inability to answer the question.

I have no knowledge or information, and, not to be offensive, I do not believe any other Senator has such knowledge or information founded on trial and intelligent experience that properly qualifies us for general legislation that will safely and wisely regulate by fixed rules interstate commerce. The far-reaching importance and confounding variety of complications admitted to exist in the freight carriage of our 1,200 railroads, running in every direction a distance of over 125,000 miles, through thirty-eight States abounding in marketable productions, should fill the minds of lawmakers with doubt, difficulty, and hesitation in undertaking to legislate upon the subject. The kind of knowledge indispensable to a proper understanding of the causes and character of the evils to be remedied, and what laws will cure them, is possessed by very few Senators. Theoretical or speculative reasoning as to the practical operation and effect of any inflexible statutory laws to govern railroads in all the cases of unjust and injurious interstate transportation, specified in each of the bills before the Senate, is to my mind too misleading and unreliable to conduct us to safe and wise conclusions in legislation. There is no subject over which Congress claims jurisdiction that is more elastic, shifting, changeable, and unmanageable in its very nature than interstate commerce and railroad transportation. The unalterable variety of its nature makes it necessarily incapable of regulation and management by permanent and inflexible statutory rules that are allowed no relaxation, modification, or variation in their application and enforcement. These manifest truths teach me that it is the highest duty of Congress to enter this unexplored field by slow and gradual approaches. Radical and speculative legislation may multiply the evils and cause irreparable mischief. Not knowing myself what is certainly best to be done, I will do the best I can with the lights before me and rest on the conviction that if what I do fails to reach the evils it can do no harm. A great man has said that "statesmanship is the science of circumstances." How to apply organic Congressional power to the new facts, conditions, relations, and circumstances constantly arising and requiring treatment, in the wonderful growth of this great country, is the severest trial and test of American statesmanship. The regulation of interstate commerce and railroad transportation by Congress furnishes a complete illustration of my meaning.

I can not make a more valuable contribution in the discussion of this interesting subject than to read the testimony of Albert Fink, one of the ablest, most experienced, and best informed railroad men in this or any other country. His knowledge was derived by many years of personal association with the operation of railroads and their management; he has filled for years positions of great trust and responsibility, and his integrity has never been questioned. Under the sanction of an oath he made the following statement as a witness before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, September 17, 1883, and his testimony relates directly to every question involved in the proposed legislation; and whether we agree or disagree with his opinions and conclusions, he will certainly add to our information and aid us in comprehending and solving the difficult problems under consideration.

The testimony of Mr. Fink is divided and addressed to each particular subject, as follows:

NECESSITY FOR CO-OPERATION OF RAILROADS.

A. I am the head of a bureau established by a number of railroads—about forty—which are endeavoring to work together in all matters which require co-operation, for example, and particularly the establishment and maintenance of uniform tariffs; that is the principal object for which the bureau is established. The railroad system has become so extended and the business relations of so many roads to each other have become so complicated that it became necessary that there should be organized co-operation. The tariff of one road influences the tariff of many others. It would not do for so many companies to operate each road separately from the other. They have to arrange with each other to form connections, to establish through lines of transportation and tariffs for such through lines. It is a very complicated question, to make these tariffs uniform on many competing lines, and to arrange them so that they bear equally upon different localities, and to avoid unjust discrimination, and it is still more difficult to see that the tariffs properly established over so many roads are maintained alike to all shippers receiving like service. To accomplish this is the object of the bureau, which is established in the interest of the public as well as in the interest of railroads. It is a union of railroads for the purpose of conducting the transportation business in a business-like way and in the best interest of the public and the companies.

The commercial management of railroads has become very much complicated by the great number of competing roads. If there was only one road or if all the roads belonged to one company it would be comparatively an easy matter to manage the tariff question, but when there are so many roads, each operated separately, having separate interests, there would be nothing but confusion and chaos as far as the tariffs are concerned.

Q. (by the Chairman). How many roads are there?

A. I suppose there are upward of 1,200 roads, even counting many roads that have been consolidated as one road.

THE ASSOCIATION OF ROADS EAST OF CHICAGO.

* * * * * * *

There are five trunk-lines—the Grand Trunk of Canada, the New York Central, the Erie road (or the New York, Lake Erie and Western, as it is now called), the Pennsylvania road, and the Baltimore and Ohio. These are the main lines. Then come their connections—the Lake Shore, the Michigan Central, the New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio—in fact, all the principal East and West roads as far as the Mississippi River, and as far as Chicago, and as far as the Ohio River—all the principal roads in that territory—the Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati and Indianapolis, the Indianapolis and Saint Louis, the Vandalia, the Ohio and Mississippi, the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago, the Chicago, Saint Louis and Pittsburgh, the Indianapolis, Bloomington and Western, the Lake Erie and Western, the Canada Southern, the Boston and Albany, the Fitchburg, the New York and New England.

Q. The Grand Trunk of Canada is included?

A. The Grand Trunk is one of the roads; yes, sir, and a very important one.

Q. With all its connections?

A. Yes. They have a road to Chicago. Their main road runs from Chicago to Portland, Me.

Q. This combination or association, if I understand you correctly, does not include any roads west of the Mississippi, or at least none west of the Missouri?

A. None west of the Mississippi. West of Chicago they have separate organizations of the same nature. They also have a similar organization in the South. These associations are formed pretty much on the same plan and for the same purpose.

Q. These are the roads that naturally take the produce from the interior of the country to the Atlantic seaboard?

A. Yes; east and west roads. There is a system of roads between the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, and others, running north and south. They are separately managed.

Q. By a like combination or association?

A. Yes; as far as rates of transportation are concerned.

Q. As to this association of which you are the head, what are the principal westerly points and connections of your roads, and what are their principal points of outlet on the Atlantic seaboard?

A. The principal points west are Chicago, Saint Louis, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Toledo, Detroit, Cleveland, and other intermediate points. The eastern outlet is the Atlantic coast from Portland, you may say, to Baltimore, including Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore.

Q. Would it include the outlet of the Chesapeake and Ohio?

A. They have an outlet here at these points, also one at Newport News, Va., but are not part of the association, although they work together with the association as far as tariffs are concerned.

Q. They abide by the regulations and decisions without being actually bound by them?

A. Yes, they agree to them, but they need not abide by them if they do not choose to do so.

Q. So far as actual results are concerned, they are practically part of the association?

A. Practically, yes.

Q. Are there any other lines of importance that carry through products from the interior to the Atlantic coast—is there any outlet for the South—at Brunswick, or anywhere?

A. There are outlets at the South by some railroads, but not very important ones as far as export traffic is concerned. There is a route from the West to Brunswick, Savannah, Charleston, Port Royal, and Norfolk. The Chesapeake and Ohio have their terminus at Newport News. Then there are other roads, besides these I have named, from the West, from Saint Louis and Louisville and Memphis—the Norfolk and Western, the East Tennessee and Virginia, the Memphis and Charleston, called the Virginia Air Line, with its terminus at Norfolk. This is an important east and west road. It is, however, more particularly engaged in the Southern business, the cotton business; it connects with roads to Saint Louis, Louisville, Cincinnati, Memphis, Nashville, and other points, and does business there.

THE ASSOCIATION OF ROADS WEST OF CHICAGO.

Q. West of this system is one lying between the Missouri and the Mississippi Rivers, I understood you to say?

A. Yes.

Q. What is that called, and who is at the head of that association, and what roads are in it?

A. That association comprises the roads running from Chicago west—the Chicago and Alton, the Rock Island, the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, then the Chicago and Northwestern and the Chicago and Milwaukee roads.

Q. Who occupies in that association a position similar to yours?

A. Mr. J. W. Midgley.

Q. Farther westward what are the principal railroad connections? Is there any associations among the railroads to the west or south of those you have mentioned?

A. There are associations, called the Iowa and the Colorado Associations, that take in all the roads to Colorado west of Chicago. The same roads that I have named are engaged in the traffic to Colorado, and the same commissioner is at the head of the bureau.

Q. This same Mr. Midgley?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then his system takes in the Colorado roads?

A. Not the Colorado roads, but the roads between Chicago and Saint Louis and the Missouri River.

Q. And the roads that reach to New Mexico and Arizona and the Territories?

A. Not the roads as far south as that, but of course it takes in the traffic to those points.

Q. They all feed into and connect with each other?

A. They all compete with each other.

THE SOUTHERN RAILWAY AND STEAMSHIP ASSOCIATION.

Q. What other like associations among railroads exist in this country?

A. There is an association called the Southern Railway and Steamship Association, the first one established upon the present plan. It was established in 1875. It comprises nearly all of the Southern roads south of the Ohio and east of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, and the Atlantic coast.

Q. Mention some of the principal ones.

A. The principal ones are the Georgia Central road, the Georgia road, the Western and Atlantic road, the Louisville and Nashville system, the Richmond and Danville system, the Norfolk and Western, the Memphis and Charleston, the Savannah, Florida and Western, the East Tennessee, Virginia, and the Georgia system. These are the principal roads.

Q. Does this system cover the Mississippi Valley?

A. No; it does not reach the Mississippi Valley. There are some other roads in that territory east of the Mississippi; they run north and south. They have no joint interest with the other roads, which are east and west roads—such as the Illinois Central and the Mobile and Ohio.

Q. Under what system or arrangement, if any, are those roads you now mention comprised?

A. They are not under any particular system. There is no organized system under which they operate; they co-operate with each other. There are only two or three roads, and it is an easy matter for them to co-operate without any organization.

Q. Then to recur to this system of the South, of which you have been speaking, which was organized first of any, and in 1875, under what gentleman having the same powers or like powers to yourself were these roads organized?

A. The organization was made after I left the Louisville and Nashville Railroad. I had then been connected with the Southern system of railroads, and there was so much confusion and strife in regard to the establishment and maintenance of tariffs that it was utterly impossible to conduct the transportation business in a proper way. It caused a good deal of ruinous competition and unjust discrimination, each road making its own tariffs and underbidding the other. The result was, generally, that the roads worked for almost nothing, or at a loss, and it was almost impossible to control the tariffs. I was then the general manager and vice-president of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, a road that was in contact with both the Northern and Southern systems of roads—a sort of connecting link between these two systems, and I had to do business with between fifty and sixty different roads, and when it was desired to make an agreement of any kind the parties could not be got together, and when some of them came together others were missing, and nothing could be done. But if they should all happen to come together they could not agree, or if they did agree there was no organization or executive department to see that the agreements were maintained. This state of affairs led me to suggest the plan of an organization of railroads with a central bureau through which the different roads could readily transact business with each other, instead of so many roads endeavoring to do business separately with one another, making it almost impossible to accomplish anything. All these complications were avoided by transacting business through the head of the bureau, who understood the relations of the roads to each other, and knew what was required, and through whom the roads could communicate with each other, and negotiate on all subjects requiring co-operation. The representatives of the roads would hold meetings and discuss matters. If they could not agree, the head of the bureau was to decide the questions at issue, and act as the executive, it being also his duty to see that the agreements were carried out. In this way the roads would be enabled to transact business promptly and to establish uniform tariffs and to see that they were maintained. This is the object of this and like associations. They are in the nature of clearing-houses, where the parties, instead of settling the money balances, settle their differences and their little quarrels (or their big quarrels, as the case may be). A definite way is provided in which business can be successfully transacted. It is simply accomplishing by organization what was ineffectually attempted by a mob under the old system. I made it my special business for about six months to organize the association, and since then it has been successfully carried on by others. The plan has been found to work so well that it has been adopted elsewhere. Mr. Virgil Powers is the present commissioner.

THE WATER ROUTES OF TRANSPORTATION.

Q. Will you now mention the water routes, whether by river or canal connection, that have to do the transportation of the country, either by connection with the railroads themselves or otherwise?

A. The principal water lines engaged in the East and West traffic are via the lakes and the Erie Canal in the North, and the Welland Canal in Canada. The Mississippi River to New Orleans forms another important water line.

Q. How important is that water line in connection with the transportation interests of this country?

A. The water lines that I have mentioned are very important factors in the transportation business of the country. They not only secure cheap transportation themselves, but they have the great advantage of regulating the railroad tariffs.

Q. Please explain how that is—that the water lines regulate, or can regulate, the railroad charges.

HOW THEY ACT AS REGULATORS OF RAILROAD CHARGES.

A. The cost of transportation upon the water routes being cheaper, the railroads have to carry freights as cheaply or nearly as cheaply. They can only increase their charges over the charges made by water routes to the extent that they offer additional advantages; while somewhat higher rates can be charged by the railroads, the basis of their charges are the charges made by the water lines. If they charge more than a certain amount above the water rates, the business would all go by water. Not only is this the case where railroads come in direct competition with the water routes, but the effect of these water routes upon the rail transportation rates is felt throughout almost the whole country. This is the result of the great competition between the railroad companies themselves. As to the Erie Canal and lakes, the railroads that directly compete with those routes between Chicago and New York must conform to the low water rates; but it is also necessary that, say, for example, from Indianapolis, which has no water connection with New York, the rates should be made upon the same basis as the Chicago rates—that is, the same rate per ton per mile, or nearly so.

CHICAGO RATES THE BASIS FOR RATES FROM AND TO OTHER WESTERN POINTS.

That rule is almost a fixed rule now, adopted by the railroad companies; that whenever the Chicago rates are lowered the rates throughout the whole territory east of Saint Louis, Louisville, Cincinnati, Peoria, Columbus, &c., are lowered proportionately. There are so many roads that run from those points direct to the East, under independent management—they want a share in the business of the country. If they were to try to exact proportionately higher rates, say from Indianapolis or Saint Louis, than from Chicago, there would be enough margin left between the Saint Louis or Indianapolis rate and the Chicago rate to New York that freight could be sent from Indianapolis to Chicago, and then by railroad or canal from Chicago to New York. In order to prevent this the railroads that run direct from Indianapolis, Saint Louis, &c., to the East make the rates so low that the business must go over their roads, and can not go to Chicago. While the water routes only exist between Chicago and New York, the effect upon transportation rates is felt all over the country by reason of the competition between the railroads.

NOTWITHSTANDING COMBINATION, RATES ARE FIXED BY COMPETITION.

No combination of the railroads can suppress this competition. It could only be done if the railroads were all owned by one party and were operated in one interest. But as it is they have all separate interests, and each one guarding its own interest keeps up this competition, and even in agreeing between themselves upon rates, those rates are fixed by competition. This, unfortunately, is not understood by the public. It is generally believed that when competing railroads agree upon uniform rates, that this excludes competition. This is not the fact. The effect of water competition is not only felt in the territory east of the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers, but is felt south of the Ohio River. For example: The low rates from Louisville, under the influence of the Chicago low rate, are felt at Memphis, Nashville, and farther south. Freight from Memphis is shipped to Louisville and gets a low rate from there, and the people of Nashville and such places get as much advantage from the low rates as if really located on a water course: so that the influence of the water transportation is felt almost throughout the whole country. That is the influence of the Erie Canal. To the south there is the water-route from New York to New Orleans via ocean, and from New Orleans freight is carried to Memphis and Saint Louis and the West via the Mississippi. In order to meet these low rates, the east and west roads from Louisville and Memphis or from Memphis to Norfolk east have to conform again to the low rates made by the Atlantic Ocean and the Mississippi River.

Q. That has reference to goods from east to west, as well as from west to east?

A. Both ways. In this way the water-courses are really regulating the railroad transportation rates throughout, you may say, the whole country. Of course the low rates from here to the Mississippi River are enjoyed by the people west of that river. Rates generally are higher west of that river, but the people west of the river get the benefit of the low rates east. In many other ways the water routes help. The Ohio River, the Tennessee River, and the Cumberland River affect the railroad rates at the interior. There is plenty of competition that regulates the rates and keeps them at an exceedingly low figure.

NO COMBINATION PRACTICABLE ON WATER LINES.

Q. Will you please state how it is that there can be no combination of transportation interests by water as well as by land? Why can there be no combination so as to put up water rates as well as land rates?

A. It is hardly possible. The competition is only between canal-boats or steamboats; the water ways are free to all. If any one boat or a combination of boats should try to charge too high rates, it would require a comparatively small capital to start new boats. * * * I mean combinations for the purpose of charging excessive rates. Nor is it possible for railroads to combine for that purpose, because, as I have shown, the railroad charges are controlled by the charges on water ways. The water ways are free; nothing is paid for their use, and it requires very little capital to start competing steamboat lines.

There are certain arrangements by which railroads run in connection with steamship lines.

The Pennsylvania Railroad owns a steamship line from Erie, Pa., to Chicago. They have control of what is called the Anchor Line. The New York, Lake Erie and Western road owns a water line absolutely—the Union Steamship Line—running between Buffalo and Chicago. There is another steamship line between Buffalo and Chicago, that, while not owned separately by a railroad corporation, runs in connection with the New York Central road. All these water lines, while working with the railroads, are subject to competition, and their rates must be as low as by other water lines.

* * * * * * *

WATER TRANSPORTATION THE REGULATOR OF RAIL RATES.

Q. The real water regulator of the prices of fares and freights is the Mississippi River and the Atlantic Ocean, is it not?

A. And the Erie Canal.

Q. But the Erie Canal is liable to interruption?

A. During the interruption of navigation the Erie Canal still influences rail rates, although during the winter months the railroad companies are able to charge higher rates.

RAILROAD RATES COMPARED WITH WATER RATES.

It is the general impression that when the Erie Canal closes the railroads have it all their own way, that the railroads can then charge what they please. This, however, is not the fact, nor would it be if there were no Mississippi River. If the railroads were to attempt to charge high rates during winter-time business men would endeavor to throw most of the freight on the canal during the summer-time, leaving the railroads nothing to do in winter. The railroad companies can not increase their charges over the transportation charges by water more than the advantages are worth which the shippers receive by getting their goods promptly forwarded at all times. That is all the additional charge that railroads can impose, even in the winter-time, over the transportation rates charged by the canal.

Q. Still that would make necessary the holding back of the crop?

A. It would, but the railroad companies do not want the crop held back, and they must offer such inducements that will move the crop during the winter season; and they do so.

Q. But are not the necessities of the farmers such as to oblige them to send the crop forward?

A. At present they have become accustomed to sending their crops forward, but before the railroads undertook to carry this low-priced freight the farmers had to hold their crop. Now the advantages of the railroads over the canal are such as to induce them to move the crop, and of course the railroads offer every inducement to them to move it. * * * The canal carries now about from 40 to 60 per cent. of the grain that comes to New York during the navigable season. It carries only about 20 per cent. of the total grain receipts at Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore during the year.

THE FIXING OF RAILROAD CHARGES.

Q. Will you explain as fully as you can to the committee the actual modus operandi or method by which this association arranges the fares and freights among the different roads—upon what general principles do you act—and, in fact, give us as correct an inside view of its operations and its useful or beneficial tendencies to the general public as you will?

A. It would be very difficult for me to explain fully to the committee the operation of this association, as the committee would have to be in a great measure familiar with many details in the management of this railroad transportation. I can only give, perhaps, a general outline of it. As I said before, the principal object of this association is to establish equitable and uniform tariffs over the roads represented on the committee as far as their competitive traffic is concerned. It has nothing to do with the local business of the roads. When two or more roads come into competition with each other for the same business, then it becomes necessary to have some understanding between those two roads as to the rates that should be charged for the same service. If one road were to charge one rate and another another rate, of course the road that would charge the lowest rate would do all the business and the other could not do any.

Q. That is competition, is it not?

A. Yes, but it don't work well in the transportation business. If there was no agreement as to uniform rates, shippers who would want to ship by one road would have to pay higher rates than shippers by another road. If these rates were kept secret the shipper would not know what the rates of the different roads were, and one shipper might thus get his goods shipped cheaper than the other. That would be unjust discrimination. It has become the practice of all railroads, and I think of all steamship lines, when they compete with each other, to agree upon a certain charge to be made by all routes for the same service, and let the shipper select his own route. That is generally called combination, and it is assumed generally that this combination is made for the purpose of exacting unreasonable compensation. But this is not necessarily so.

Q. That is, as you say, generally called combination, and we hear, under the existing system of transportation, that competition is the natural regulator of fares and freights; and the natural protector of the interests of the public in that regard. Is not, then, the direct purpose of this association to prevent that natural competition which is supposed to protect public interests?

A. These associations can not control the natural and legitimate competition, as I have already stated.

Q. Right there, I wish you would make your explanation as clear and full as possible.

LEGITIMATE COMPETITION DISTINGUISHED FROM RUINOUS COMPETITION.

A. We have to draw a line between legitimate competition, that is the life of trade, and competition that results simply in the ruin of the parties that are engaged in the competition. The object of these associations, besides that of giving uniform tariffs, and arranging through tariffs for the whole country, is to prevent ruinous competition. I think the competition between railroads is somewhat different from the competition in other business. Competition between private parties soon comes to an end when prices get so low that they can not carry on any business. A railroad company, however, can carry on competitive business for a long time at non-paying rates, and either not find it out, or else make the traffic for which there is no competition pay for the losses incurred in the competitive business.

Q. I suppose an instance of that is where they make up on local charges what they lose on the through charges?

A. Yes.

CHARGES ASSESSED ON THE VALUE OF SERVICE.

The proper plan is to assess the railroad charges in accordance with the value of the services rendered. Nobody should ask services for less than cost. The tendency of this railroad competition is, that by one road underbidding the other on the competitive business, the rates soon become so low that the business is worth nothing. They have often carried it, and sometimes carry it yet, at less than cost, and this is not to the advantage of the public. The public can always afford to pay reasonable rates for the service. It is not to the advantage of the public at large to do otherwise, because if you send all these railroad companies into bankruptcy, and thus ruin the people (who are really the owners of the railroads), you ruin the credit of the country, and you ruin the industries that are dependent upon railroads, such as the iron industries and the other manufacturing establishments which furnish supplies to the railroad; you also necessarily reduce the wages of the laborers. When railroads can not earn any money, the laborers employed on the roads have their wages reduced, or frequently lose their pay altogether. I may refer to the difficulties which arose in 1877, during and after a long railroad war, when so many of the employés rose and "struck." This was the result of low wages or reduced time of labor during the railroad wars.

EFFECTS OF COMPETITIVE STRIFE BETWEEN RAILROADS.

In fact it is hardly necessary to demonstrate that it is not to the interests of the people to have the railroad companies do work for less than cost; and this would be the inevitable result if they engage in competitive strife (as I will call it to distinguish it from legitimate competition). The nature of the business is such that when one railroad underbids another in order to secure a little more business, as soon as the other finds out that it has been underbid, it has to underbid its rival still further, and so rates go down and down until as in 1881 freight was carried from Chicago to New York, 1,000 miles, for 8 cents a hundred. This is a loss of from 8 to 12 cents a hundred in doing the mere work, not to say anything of interest on capital invested.

Q. What is the actual cost?

A. Anywhere from 16 to 40 cents—Chicago to New York. It depends upon what you count in the cost. The mere additional cash cost of moving 100 pounds of freight from Chicago to New York may be estimated at about 16 cents on grain. The average cost of all classes of freight, taking in general expenses, would be about 24 cents; and taking in interest it would be about 40 cents per 100 pounds. I will have to explain this subject more particularly later on; but upon the lowest estimate the charge of 8 cents made in 1881 was about only one-half the actual outlay of money, not to say anything about investment. But, apart from the ruinous result to the railroad companies, these railroad wars are objectionable as far as public interest is concerned. During these wars each road makes its own tariff without any agreement with its competitors as to uniform rates. It may make changes from day to day in these rates, and the shippers do not know what the charges will be for twenty-four hours to come. One man may have laid in his supplies at the regular tariff to-day and in a week from now the tariff is down to one-half of what it was then, and he is at very great disadvantage compared with his neighbor who lays in his goods a little later.

OBJECTS OF COMBINATION.

Now, it is for the purpose of establishing uniform tariffs, and to maintain the same without great fluctuation, to prevent ruinous wars, and the bankruptcy of railroads which would necessarily follow, that these railroad associations are established; it being their object to agree upon the proper tariff to be charged, and to have that tariff made known to the public, to prevent railroads from making reductions secretly in these rates, and to make charges alike for the same service. That is the object of these associations. And it is a very important object; in fact, if fully obtained, we would have reached the solution of what is generally called the "railroad problem." In my opinion it is only upon this plan of association, now adopted by many railroad companies in this country, that the evils of the transportation business heretofore experienced, and of which the people so much complain, can be remedied.

PRUSSIAN SYSTEM—STATE GOVERNMENT OF RAILROADS.

In Europe, especially in Prussia, this object has been obtained by the purchase on the part of the government of all the railroads in the country. This puts them all under one control, and enables the government to make uniform tariffs and strictly maintain them. This plan, however, could not be followed in this country.

AMERICAN SYSTEM—SELF-GOVERNMENT OF RAILROADS.

Here we must accomplish the same end by voluntary associations of roads under what may be called a self-government. Between the two modes of dealing with the railroad problem, I think the one adopted here is much more suitable to the spirit of our people and the character of our Government. I merely wish to call attention here to the necessity and importance of the work which these railway associations are to accomplish. The difficulties encountered in endeavoring to accomplish this work are as great as is its importance. How are some 1,200 independent railroad companies, each having separate interests, to govern themselves so as to secure to the people, over 120,000 miles of railroads, throughout this immense country, uniform tariffs—tariffs that operate justly upon all sections of the country, justly between commercial communities, between rival cities, and between individual shippers? That is the problem to be solved. It can not be solved by each individual road following its own course and making its own tariffs without reference to the tariffs of other roads. The work to be done can only be done by the joint action of all roads that are jointly interested in the same traffic and that can influence each other's tariffs.

HISTORY OF ATTEMPTS AT JOINT ACTION.

Ever since there have been competing roads, efforts have been made, arising from the nature and necessity of the case, to act jointly in all matters of joint interest; and this for the reasons above stated. But the methods that were frequently adopted for such joint action were defective and inefficient. Representatives of railroads would hold conferences and discuss the subject-matters that required joint and uniform action on the part of many roads. They could hardly ever be all got together, and if they came together they could hardly ever agree; but if they did agree, the agreements were hardly ever carried out, at least not for any length of time. There was no authority to see that the agreements were enforced. Considering the complicated transactions covered by the agreements, it was impossible that these agreements could carry themselves out without supervision or control. Yet, strange to say, that was expected. The history of railroad management in the past records the complete failure of these efforts; and nothing else should have been expected.

In 1874 the first effort at some sort of organized co-operation was made by the roads which are now represented on the joint executive committee. I refer to the agreement known as "the Saratoga compact." Some seven commissioners were appointed, whose duty it was to control the rates. The organization was imperfect, and it soon fell to pieces. But it taught its lesson.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY AND STEAMSHIP ASSOCIATION—METHOD OF OPERATIONS.

In 1875 the Southern Railway and Steamship Association was organized. (I have already referred to it.) It provides for a complete government of the subject-matter with which the association has to deal. The representatives of the roads come together and form a legislative department. There is an executive officer who carries out the resolutions of the legislative department. If the representatives of the roads do not agree, there is a judicial department that decides the question at issue between the contending parties. Majority does not rule. All questions of difference are to be settled judicially. They are to be submitted to arbitration. The interests of each individual road can thus be protected, which would be impossible under a majority rule. This is the principle upon which the Southern Railway and Steamship Association was established, and the joint executive and other associations have adopted the same principles. The only defect in these organizations is that there is no authority to legally enforce agreements. The voluntary consent of all parties is necessary, and it may be considered surprising that under these conditions the government of the railroads by these associations has been as successful as it has proved to be; although it is still very imperfect, it is a great improvement upon former methods.

The difficulty is not so much in arranging the joint tariffs, because there are certain principles that guide this work. The tariffs are generally determined for the railroads by other conditions and competition such as the water routes. These latter are really the tariff-makers for the whole country.

ADVANTAGE OF THROUGH BILLS OF LADING.

The railroads are now in the habit of issuing through bills of lading, guaranteeing the delivery of goods at destination, collecting the charges from each other, so that the shipper has nothing to do but to ship his goods to the consignee at the point of destination, who, upon receiving the freight, pays the full charge. This saves a great deal of labor to the shipper.

That system is now in full operation throughout the country. Perhaps in no country in the world is it so perfect as here. You can get a rate to any point in the country and get a through bill of lading.

Now, in order to give a rate to a shipper to any point in the country, it is necessary that the railroads should come together and establish the rate, and that it shall be understood and made known to the public. It is one of the objects of this association to do that. In other words, instead of a shipper having to deal with forty or one hundred railroads, these roads are practically operated as if they were a single road, so far as the accommodation of the public requires. Taking the several roads from here to Chicago constituting one route, not only is it necessary that they should agree among themselves, but there are about fifty different routes or combinations of routes by which goods can be shipped from here to Chicago; and in order to give people one uniform rate from here to Chicago, all the roads constituting these routes have to come together and agree upon uniform rates. The question is, what shall that uniform rate be?

FACTORS IN FIXING RATES.

The idea generally entertained is that railroad companies can ask anything they want. But there is the competition with water routes, the competition in the markets for the articles to be transported, and other conditions influencing rates. The point is for the managers of these roads to come together and study the conditions under which they have to do business, and to adapt their rates to these conditions so that they may induce shippers to ship by the railroads. That is the problem. What the rate shall be is a matter of judgment and experience. If you make a rate that does not bring you any business, it is very soon found out.

Q. Is the result of that, practically, that all have to ship at that rate at which the route having the greatest advantages can do it?

A. All roads have to conform to the rate that is charged by the road that can or wants to make the lowest rate.

Q. But still the road that can carry at the lowest rate wants to get all it can?

A. Of course it does, and so do all the others, but the rates are limited by competition and condition of trade.

Q. And is there not, on the other hand, a tendency among the other roads to hold the charges as high as possible, and is it not to the interest of that road having the greatest facilities to conform to that higher rate, and make all the more profits?

A. It is to the interest of all to get as much freight as possible; it is for their interest to make such a rate as will induce freight to move. If you charge too high rates you get very little business, and it is better to encourage business and get more at reasonable rates. Of course there are certain limits to which only you can go, below which the business becomes unprofitable.

ITS COMPARISON TO THE FEDERAL SYSTEM FOR STATES.

I might explain further that the relation of this office to the various railroads having established it is pretty much like the relations of the Federal Government to the several States. It attends to the general business in which all the roads are interested, the same as the Federal Government transacts the business in which all the States have a common interest. If, for example, each State were allowed to make its own tariffs, and levy tolls and duties on commerce, without any restraint or agreement between all the States, it would lead to a terrible condition of affairs; and so, likewise, it would if all the railroad companies should do the same thing each for itself.

The regulation of commerce between the States became impossible under the Articles of Confederation. The common carriers in each State were governed by the common law, which is well adapted to the regulation of transportation in a State where facts and conditions are the same or similar. But there is no common law of the United States, and the impracticability of applying the fixed rules of the common law to interstate commerce and transportation created, among other causes, the necessity for our present Government, in which Congress is invested with "power to regulate commerce between the States." To undertake to establish the common law by a statute of Congress to regulate interstate commerce is to do what was found to be impossible under the Articles of Confederation. Again I read from Mr. Fink's testimony:

To compare the railroads under the organizations which I have explained with the States under the Federal Government, each road would represent a State. If each road, acting for itself, would make its own tariff, levying its own duties, you can see that it would lead to a great deal of confusion, just as it would if the separate States of the Union were to establish tariffs and collect duties separately, each for itself. The railroads have established a general government; all roads come together and legislate as to the uniform tariffs and freights that should be charged, and appoint an executive officer to see that these tariffs are complied with. The fact that in all countries where there are railroads there are these institutions in a more or less organized form indicated the necessity for them.

"RAILROAD UNIONS" IN GERMANY.

In Germany they have what they call the "Railroad Unions," dealing with the same questions that we deal with here in my office.

RAILROAD CLEARING-HOUSE IN ENGLAND.

In England the railroads have what is called a "clearing-house," which is an incorporated association formed by all the railroads, or nearly all the railroads of England. In that clearing-house they deal with the same questions that we do, under different rules and organizations. The English clearing-house makes the money settlements between the different roads, instead of each link in the chain of routes settling with the other; they settle through the clearing-house. The clearing-house is incorporated by the government, and it has worked for the last twenty or thirty years very satisfactorily.

RAILROAD PROGRESS LIES IN CONSOLIDATED MANAGEMENT.

I have shown the necessity and the benefits to be derived from the railroad companies working together in this way. In fact, it ought not to require much argument to show the necessity of it. I think the general drift of public opinion has long been that the railroads should all be under one government—and under the National Government—and that arises from the fact of difficulties coming up in the management of so many different railroads which makes it almost impossible to carry on the transportation business in a proper way. The same difficulties were experienced in all countries. In Prussia all the railroads are operated now under state control. Prussia has purchased all the railroads of the state. The reason for that is precisely the same as the reason for our associating together, and trying to work the different railroads as one railroad. The experience of the whole world is in the direction of uniform and consolidated management—at least of the commercial part of railroads.

* * * * * * * *

The rates of transportation are not in the power of the railroad companies to fix arbitrarily. They are regulated by so many conditions and influences that there is no danger that the railroads can exact unreasonable compensation. The danger, I think, is rather the other way. The question is whether the railroad companies can carry on business at such low rates as are forced upon them. Not only the water ways, as I have explained, control the rates almost completely—limiting them, at any rate, within very narrow limits—but the competition of the markets for the products that are to be carried is another great factor in fixing railroad transportation rates. The price of grain, for example, is not fixed by railroad companies, but is fixed in the markets of the world. That price is generally regulated now by the Liverpool market, and if railroads want to carry any grain they have to carry it at a price that will enable the producers to compete in the Liverpool market with the markets of the world. The East India wheat and Black Sea wheat have even become factors in making railroad rates from Chicago to New York. There is therefore no danger whatsoever of any excessive charge being made. The object of this association, as I have said before, is to fix upon a uniform rate. The limit of the rate generally is very closely fixed. This is the case with every commodity. Take, for example, sugar. That article is now being carried for 25 cents per hundred pounds from New York to Chicago. That is a quarter of a cent a pound, which is a very small charge upon that article for its transportation over such a distance, nearly 1,000 miles. The reason for this low rate is that sugar is carried to the West by the Mississippi River. New Orleans is a great sugar market, and if the railroads of the East want to compete with this market the rates must be fixed so low as to meet that competition. There are other articles that require very low rates in order to be transported at all. For example, coal and iron, and all like heavy and cheap articles. The tariff is fixed by the market price for the products in different places in the country. The railroad transportation charges can never be more than the difference between the market value of the articles in different markets—that determines for the railroad companies their charges in a great measure. And therefore this cry about the railroad companies or a railroad combination exacting arbitrarily from the people unjust compensation for their services is all gotten up for other purposes than to tell the truth.

RELATIVE IMPORTANCE OF LOCAL AND THROUGH BUSINESS.

Q. I wish to ask you a question now, which, if it interferes with your continuous answer, you may let pass for the present and take it up later. I want to learn from you in which way the country pays most to the railroads, whether in the form of rates or charges such as are arranged through your association, or for local rates or charges? That is, which is the greater source of income to the roads of this country, as a whole, the through business or the local business?

A. That is very different on different roads.

Q. But, I say, take the country as a whole. Do people pay more as local charges, or as through charges?

A. You mean in the aggregate?

Q. The aggregate.

A. I could not tell you that without looking further into the matter.

Q. Could you tell what it probably is over the roads that are in your association—which is most important to them, in other words—the through business or the local business?

A. The local business is the most important.

LOCAL CHARGES AFFECTED BY THROUGH CHARGES.

The local charges are, in a great measure, affected or regulated by the through. In the case of a railroad war, where the roads lose money on the through business, they would of course try to make it up on the local business; and the local charges would in comparison with through charges be much higher and unjustly discriminating. Hence, the operation of the association is to maintain a paying through rate, as high as it can be got (which is never very high), and in that way they can rather lower the local rates and properly adjust them to the through rates. The principle that is adopted by most railroads is, that when a proper, a reasonable, and profitable through rate is established, they graduate their local rates by it.

Q. What is the relation between them?

A. For example, the Pennsylvania Railroad would not charge more to a place fifty or one hundred miles this side of Chicago than to Chicago, and they might charge less—not, perhaps, in full proportion to the mileage, but to some extent so. They would graduate the rates this side of Chicago on the Chicago rate. But, when there is a war of rates—when they charge only 10 cents to Chicago, they can not reduce their local rate in proportion; then rates to the local points are comparatively higher. That constitutes one of the greatest objections that people have to railroad tariffs when rates are comparatively so much lower to competitive points than to local points. This can all be done away with. When the through rates are maintained reasonably high, then they can adjust their local rates accordingly, and keep the local tariffs in line with the through tariffs so that there will be no unjust discrimination—so that a man twenty miles this side of Chicago will not have to pay more than a man at Chicago, which he would have to do in case of a railroad war. In a properly regulated tariff that does not occur. That is the reason why through rates should be maintained. It protects the local shipper. It does not make so much difference to shippers what the absolute rates are; the comparative rates are of more importance.

GRANGER LAWS.

The low rates at competitive points, compared with high rates at local points, gave rise, I think, some years ago to the granger legislation in portions of the West. In the State of Illinois, for example, the roads were crossing each other at every ten or twelve miles, and wherever two roads crossed they went into a fight with each other, and put the rates down to almost nothing, while on each side of the competing stations they kept them up; and that led to a great dissatisfaction among the people, and justly so. The railroad managers have learned something by that experience, and are trying to keep up the through rates and adjust local rates in proportion. This unjust discrimination formerly practiced has now, in a great measure, been done away with. That is one of the advantages of these associations, regulating the competitive tariffs. Whenever a tariff is fixed from one point—for example, from Chicago—those to other points are adjusted accordingly and kept in harmony with each other; this prevents unjust discrimination.

RELATION OF RATES ON LONG AND SHORT HAULS.

Q. Are there instances where more is charged for the shorter haul than for the longer one? For instance, more charged for drawing freight from Philadelphia to some point between Philadelphia and Chicago than from Philadelphia to Chicago?

A. No; they are not when through tariffs are maintained. But there are instances where a rate to an intermediate point may be higher than a rate for a longer distance. For instance, from here to New Orleans the rate may be 40 or 50 cents per hundred pounds, and to Atlanta perhaps a dollar; but this is not unjust discrimination, and does not operate against Atlanta. Points that are not on water courses have to pay more than points that are; that is in the nature of things, and railroads, of course, have to conform to the settled state of affairs. Railroads do sometimes engage in carrying business from here to New Orleans for 50 cents in order to compete with the steamship lines, while they charge a dollar or more to Atlanta, an intermediate point.

Q. What is your view of it? Ought not these railroads to leave the business to the water routes?

A. They will not do that, and it is better for the public that they should not. They keep the steamship lines in order. This sort of competition is constantly going on.

TENDENCY OF RAILROAD CHARGES TO A REDUCTION.

Q. What has been the effect on the course of transportation charges since the organization of this association of yours?

A. As I said before, all these railroad charges are entirely independent of these associations. It can be shown from the experience of these associations that the tendency of rates is to go down constantly if not arrested by them. When the Southern Railway Association was first formed the rate from New York to Atlanta was $1.60 on first-class goods. Now it is $1.25; and I think that in a very short time it will be $1. These rates are always regulated by other factors than by the association. The association simply conforms to the conditions under which the rates must be made; but if you would go through these statistics you would find that the tendency of rates is constantly to be lowered. The rates, for example, to-day, on grain are much less than they were three or four years ago, but can never be as high again.

* * * * * * *

TOTAL ANNUAL RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES OF AMERICAN RAILROADS.

The gross receipts of all the railroads in the country were then only $500,000,000. Of course, out of that about three or four hundred millions were paid out for working expenses.

Q. Have you in your mind at present what the gross receipts are now?

A. Yes; last year the gross receipts were about, in round figures, $700,000,000 for both passenger and freight business. The freight receipts were about $500,000,000 last year—that is, on the 112,000 miles of railroads which reported their earnings.

Q. What are the net receipts; have you any idea?

A. The net receipts were about $300,000,000, the gross receipts being about $700,000,000. The dividends and the interest on the bonds had to be paid out of about $300,000,000. I think the stockholders got about $100,000,000 of that. It is about 3 per cent. on the stock.

Q. On the capitalization?

A. No; on the stock. And the bondholders get about 5 per cent. The whole railroad capitalization is $7,000,000,000, and about half of that is stock and half bonds.

Q. You mean that there are $7,000,000,000 invested in railroads?

A. Yes. Of which about half is represented by bonds and the other half is represented by stock.

Q. And the whole amount of dividend on the bonds is 5 per cent.?

A. Yes; and on the stock 3 per cent.

* * * * * * *

Q. The bond is the prior claim, and that is entitled to its interest, and if there is anything remaining of the net profits it is distributed in the form of a dividend to the stockholders?

A. Yes; and that dividend is 3 per cent. A great many roads do not pay any dividend, but the average dividend paid is about 3 per cent. on all the roads.

He goes on to show the difference in the cost of railroads in this country and in Europe. The average cost per mile of railroads in this country, including the value of the rolling-stock, the whole equipment, is about $60,000 a mile. In England it is $200,000 a mile, and in the other European states it is $100,000 a mile. They have monumental stations, and the cost of the right of way is much greater than it is in this country. Including rolling-stock and all, in his estimates he makes it about $60,000 a mile. The operating expenses of the railroads is about 50 per cent. of the earnings. Mr. Fink says that if the railroads were destroyed to-day, just in the condition they are in now, they could not be restored for less than $60,000 a mile, including everything, the whole equipment.

He also shows another fact which I shall state without troubling the Senate to listen to his lengthy statement. He shows that the cost of railroad transportation in this country is 100 per cent. less than it is in any state in Europe. The cost of railroad transportation has been reduced in the last decade 100 per cent., and it is more to-day in England, Germany, and France by 100 per cent. than it is on our railroads in this country. For the laboring man there seems to be much sympathy everywhere, and I share it largely myself. There is not a workingman in this country who pays for the transportation of what he consumes and wears in an entire year more than what he gets for one day's labor. Mr. Fink takes up each item of cost in clothing and food, and he says that the cost of transportation from the West to New York does not reach $2 per annum on all the laborer consumes; so that the laborer gets the transportation of his clothing and his food for a whole year at the cost of one day's work. He makes it that the laborer pays the railroad company $1.90 for cost of transportation, and he makes that for a day's work.

There is no item in the cost of what a workingman consumes in this country which is as little as the railroad charges. It costs him more to get a barrel of flour from the depot at New York to where he consumes it than it does to ship it a thousand miles from Chicago to New York. Mr. Fink says there is no country in the world where the cost of shipping is as little by 100 per cent. as it is in this country. I do not mean what the railroad and the equipment that brings the barrel of flour will cost, but I mean what it cost him to bring his barrel of flour from where it is shipped to where he gets it. I have troubled the Senate by reading a great deal from the testimony of Mr. Fink, and now——

Mr. BECK. Before the Senator passes from that point——

Mr. PUGH. I beg pardon; there is more of his testimony here that I wish to read.

Mr. BECK. I have some of his testimony before me, and I may make some reference to it hereafter.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator will understand that I announced in the beginning that I am reading the testimony of a man who has been associated all his life with railroad management, and whose education is practical. Ours is theoretical, speculative. Whether we agree with him, or whether the information we have differs from what he gives here, I do not say anything upon. Whether his reasoning is sound or unsound I have nothing to say upon, because I do not know what to say, and I do not believe any other Senator does who is not familiar with the practical operation of the railroad system.

I wish to show something more to the Senate. I do not suppose that it is worth much, because Mr. Fink is a railroad man, but then I want to hear what they all have to say.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question before he goes to another point?

Mr. PUGH. Certainly.

Mr. BECK. It is charged that the railroads carry a long haul—say from Chicago to New York—for less than they can afford, but they make it up by charging double and treble for a haul along the line. That is the charge, whether it is true or not. The Senator himself examined the witness, I believe, at this point, and the question asked is this:

Q. Could you tell what it probably is over the roads that are in your association—which is most important to them, in other words—the through business or the local business?

The answer was:

A. The local business is the most important. The through business is a mere incident of the business of a road.

If they are charging below cost for what is a mere incident, and doubling and quadrupling what is the main portion of the road's business to make up for the long haul, is that just? That is what I want to get at.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. Fink does not state that as a fact. He says that the tendency is where there is no organization to enforce their rules and their tariff, to make up what they lose on the through line by reason of competing roads by local charges along the line. He states further that all that can be remedied if their agreements for uniform tariffs to prevent that result could be enforced through the authority of the Federal Government.

Mr. BECK. I wish to call attention to one other point.

Mr. PUGH. I wish to state first that Mr. Fink says the railroads of this country were all made to carry local freights. They are State roads. They have been made trunk-lines under the act of 1866 to carry through freight, interstate commerce, but the roads were built to carry local freights. There is where the inducement lies for investment—is the profit arising from local freight in the absence of competition such as exists between railroad and water lines from one point to another, like Chicago and New York. That is a perfectly indisputable fact. It is a physical fact; and what is the use of ignoring its existence in legislating upon this subject and endeavoring to enforce an iron rule in this regard?

Mr. BECK. I would not trouble the Senator but for the fact that

I have studied this testimony very carefully, and the Senator himself conducted a good deal of the examination, and it was a very careful one on the part of the committee. There is one point on which I wish an explanation in connection with the bill. When the Senator from Alabama asked this witness whether railroad people were not constantly cheating and violating their agreements and making secret arrangements, the witness said:

I know the object of your inquiry. It is one of the objects of the railroads in coming together to establish rates; but another object which they have in view, and a much more difficult one to carry out, is to have all the railroads maintain the rate so established. The practice of railroad companies has been that after agreeing upon rates with other roads, one or more, or all of them, make lower rates secretly; and after a while it is found out that every road has its own rate and every shipper has his own rate; so that one shipper does not know what the other shipper is paying, and the agreed tariffs are not maintained. Now, for the purpose of maintaining rates, there are certain means adopted by railroads which are the only means that can be adopted at present, or until the Government gives some help in the matter—and that is what is called the system of pooling.

I know all about the condition of facts; and when Mr. Fink is asking that his authority shall be made legal, because he has no power now, and he wants to have it, over competing roads so as to enforce it, why is it not better that under a general system the authority of the United States should be brought to bear against such secret discriminations as were exhibited in the case of the Standard Oil Company? Why should not the rates be made public, so that there could be no cheating, as the bill proposes, and why should not honest competition be had, and men punished if they do not compete fairly, as they profess to do, instead of giving to Mr. Albert Fink or any other man, however able, the authority to enforce such regulations? That is what I desire to find out.

Mr. PUGH. That is a repetition of the evils we all know are existing broadcast everywhere, and they are the evils we are endeavoring to correct. I do not propose to correct them by giving all the power to Mr. Fink that he wants, and I do not propose to correct them by the enactment of iron statutory rules to be enforced alone by a court without any reference to local conditions, local facts, local relations, made exceptional by trade, by the unavoidable laws of supply and demand, the condition of business, and the condition of transportation—those natural laws over which Congress has no control and the effects of which we can not avoid or regulate. I want a system to have some reference to the existence of those local laws and to adapt the power to local conditions, local necessities, local evils, such as those of which the Senator from Kentucky complains.

Mr. Fink says that while he agrees as to all the Senator states as to the fact heretofore, that condition of things is being greatly remedied and is disappearing largely, although it still exists, no doubt, to a very unjust and ruinous extent.

Mr. BECK. One other question and then I am done. I know how hard it is to be interrupted——

Mr. PUGH. Especially to a modest man like myself. However, I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BECK. Does not Mr. Fink also say, and is it not the Senator's own opinion, that the fact that the constitutions of States in some cases and in other cases the laws of States have created a commission appointed by the States to give further information, has aided very much in making the evils less than they would have been?

Mr. PUGH. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BECK. Would not a general law not defining what should be any State rate, but making a penalty, still further help to get clear of these troubles? I want to do exactly what the Senator does, I think.

Mr. PUGH. That is exactly what I propose to discuss hereafter briefly.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon. I wish to hear it discussed.

Mr. PUGH. It often comes out to be the fact that if a man had kept quiet, perhaps he would have been answered his question.

Mr. BECK. I shall not interrupt the Senator any more.

Mr. PUGH. I have no objection on earth to the interruption. I think I am about as familiar with this subject as any other Senator, but I plead ignorance. I claim no knowledge that I want in force as a statutory law. I am in the dark. I want to get light by experience and trial. I want to go into this field with caution and prudence and hesitation and get the surroundings from all the sources and suggestions I can treat as reliable; and when I inform myself in this particular I am prepared to act safely and wisely. I do not want to make a leap in the dark. I am just as anxious to correct these evils as the Senator from Kentucky or any other Senator. I will show why I think the Senate bill is a better one, while it is imperfect, than the bill which came from the House. I shall come to that and get through very briefly after I finish reading from Mr. Fink. I asked him this question:

In your judgment, how has the supervision of State boards of commissioners acted upon the railroad interests and the rates of transportation? That is a broad question, but I want to get your judgment as to the wisdom of supervision of railroads by State boards of commissioners, so far as a judgment may be formed by experience of the operation of that control.

The granger pressure in the West forced State laws to be passed, iron rules for the regulation of State freight. It was found that those laws could not be executed so as to be a benefit to the shipper and to the road; and to-day in Iowa, Minpesota, and other Western States those rigid iron rules have been repealed and the whole thing modified and put under the control of commissions, which are working the whole system judiciously, wisely, and safely. To my question this was the answer:

A. There are different commissions in the different States, with different powers, and I would have to speak, perhaps, separately of each. As a rule the commissions are only advisory, and I think that is a most excellent feature and a very good thing to have these commissions, because you can explain to commissioners a great many things that you can not explain to the people at large. It is desirable that the people should have some tribunal to which they could go and make complaints and get them investigated. They make their complaints to these commissioners, and the commissioners confer with the railroad companies. That is a very excellent plan; and if the commissioners are the proper sort of men they will do a great deal of good. The defect of that system, however, is that its work can never reach very far beyond their own State. A great many of the railroad questions are national. Railroad operations are not confined within State lines; and these commissioners, having jurisdiction only within the State, their operations are very much limited and very much hampered, because most of the questions that arise are of broader scope. Still, when the commissioners are fair men they do a great deal of good. For example, the Massachusetts commission has done a great deal of good, and I think the New York commission is composed of good men. They have been getting along very well so far.

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PUGH. Certainly.

Mr. COKE. I ask the Senator if he thinks it possible that a single national commission can arrange, supervise, and look after the railroads covering this entire country from one end to the other as a State commission can a State system of railroads?

Mr. PUGH. I have been pondering on that question, and I will make an answer to it before I conclude, in logical connection. The Senator only calls up the answer prematurely out of the arrangement of my argument. However imperfectly I may answer it, I shall endeavor hereafter to give the Senator the same answer that I would do now. I wish Mr. Fink to speak on the Reagan bill. I interrogated him on that matter, and he answered thus:

THE REAGAN RAILROAD BILL CRITICISED.

Q. I suppose you have heard of the Reagan railroad bill?

A. Yes.

Q. I would be glad if you would give the committee the benefit of your criticisms on that bill; what you think would be the effect of it on railroad charges and prices of commodities.

A. I think it is so impracticable a measure that it could not be carried out for one day. It is one of the most impracticable measures that has ever been proposed. Mr. REAGAN evidently does not understand the practical working of the transportation business. His intention and the principles upon which the bill is based are all right; there is no difference between us about that; but the carrying out of these principles as he proposes is utterly impracticable. It would simply impede the whole transportation business of the country. The leading idea of his plan is that each railroad should make a fixed charge for the transportation of any commodity, and that should be the charge under any and all circumstances. For example, if you were to carry lumber over the New York Central Railroad, from Buffalo to New York, and make a certain charge for it, that charge should be for all other lumber, no matter where it came from. The effect of it would be that it would exclude the New York Central from competing for business west of the terminus. When the lumber comes from other places than Buffalo, there are now made different rates from different shipping points, according to the distance and length of other competing roads from the same point of competition.

Just as many competing points as there are, just so many different rates would there be from Buffalo, and the New York Central has to take a prorate of the total rate beyond that point. For example, lumber comes from Louisville and goes to New York. Now, according to the Reagan bill, the rate that the New York Central can charge for lumber coming from Louisville to New York would be the same as lumber that comes from Buffalo. The Louisville route to New York is a great deal shorter via the Pennsylvania road than the New York Central route, and if the New York Central wants to do any of the Louisville business, it must carry it for the same total rate as the Pennsylvania Railroad, and this can only be at a less charge per ton per mile than it makes from Buffalo. If it does not make as low a rate as the Pennsylvania road, the Pennsylvania Railroad will carry all the lumber to New York, instead of the New York Central carrying a portion of it.

Mr. GEORGE. Had Mr. Fink read the Reagan bill?

Mr. PUGH. I presume he had.

Mr. GEORGE. Does it contain that provision?

Mr. PUGH. There is a through charge. It provides that there shall not be any more charged for a local rate than for a through rate. I shall speak of the Reagan bill if the Senator will be patient.

Mr. COKE. If the Senator from Alabama will permit me, I will state that the testimony from which he has been reading was taken nearly two years ago. The Reagan bill has been under discussion in the other House for several years and has been changed from the shape it was then in.

Mr. PUGH. The Reagan bill was in incubation for ten years, I am informed, and all the intellect of the country has been employed in making it perfect. The leading features of it to which Mr. Fink refers were the first incorporated in the bill. The changes that were made were made on the passage of the bill while it was up for consideration at this session.

Mr. COKE. I speak of the bill as it came from the House, not as it was two years ago.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. Fink continues:

THE RATES FOR LONGER AND SHORTER HAULS.

Q. There is another feature in the bill which I desire to mention. It provides that no road shall charge more for the shorter haul than for the longer.

A. Yes.

Q. How would that operate?

I asked him. He answered:

That is a very correct principle—

Is it possible that this railroad man makes that admission?

That is a very correct principle, but there are many cases where it could not be carried out advantageously to the people and the railroads. You will find that in this transportation business you can not pass a law that will apply universally to all cases. There are so many exceptions that they would be more than the rule.

Mr. KENNA. That proposition would exclude all law and all regulation, either by commission or otherwise.

Mr. PUGH. I suppose if there was any power anywhere to modify the law to suit this case that ought to be treated as an exceptional one, and the evil would be corrected in the case of the exception.

Mr. KENNA. I ask the Senator to reread what he has read from Mr. Fink's testimony, and to state whether under his proposition any form of law could be framed.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. Fink says explicitly there are cases where the principle, being generally correct, could not be applied, because everybody knows that in railroad transportation the exceptional cases are made up out of local facts, local conditions, local circumstances and relations on account of the laws of supply and demand, productions, and markets, the cost of transportation, the facilities for transportation, the competition between water ways and railways. All these local conditions make the cases exceptional from the general rule which Mr. Fink says should be met and supplied through the agency of an elastic commission.

Mr. KENNA. Will my friend the Senator from Alabama object to reading again what he has just read in connection with what he now says? If he does so, he will find that no elasticity of any commission or any law can fit Mr. Fink's proposition.

Mr. PUGH. I will reread it. Mr. Fink says:

But there are many cases where it could not be carried out advantageously to the people and the railroads. You will find that in this transportation business you can not pass a law that will apply universally to all cases. There are so many exceptions that they would be more than the rule.

I stand on that statement.

Mr. KENNA. If there are so many exceptions that they would be more than the rule, will my friend inform the Senate how any rule operating either directly or through a commission can be made to control the railroad system of the country?

Mr. PUGH. I propose to answer that question when I get more information on the subject, and when I have more experience from the operation of a law, whatever it may be, through a commission or otherwise. When I am more enlightened by experience and trial, I shall be able to answer that question for myself, and I think it would be more satisfactory to the Senator.

Mr. KENNA. If Mr. Fink would do likewise, his proposition would be more satisfactory.

Mr. PUGH. It seems to be the general belief that Mr. Fink is regulating this thing. He is simply the witness upon the stand speaking of matters with which he is familiar, being a man of integrity, being a man of education, a man of large experience, trusted in the highest position to manage millions and to govern the great system of transportation all over the country with all of its complications. I say I wish to see what Mr. Fink has to say on that subject, and I wish to see if he can enlighten me when I come to frame a law in the dark, as I am. I want light from some quarter, and I want to get some light from him or anybody else in discharging my great duty here as a Senator in remedying the evils which we all admit to exist, but I do not want to do it by adopting a system that will multiply the evils and produce more mischief than it will regulate.

We are now brought in full view of the provisions of each bill before the Senate and prepared for their more intelligent consideration. That there shall be no misunderstanding of the provisions and character of each bill, I have arranged a synopsis of them which is presented in parallel columns, as follows:

REAGAN OR HOUSE BILL.	CULLOM OR SENATE BILL.
Section 1. Unlawful directly, or indirectly, to charge or receive any greater or less rate or amount of freight than is charged to or received from any other person for like and contemporaneous service. All charges for such services shall be reasonable. And any person who pays the required fare shall receive the same treatment and be afforded equal facilities and accommodations without discrimination, but separate accommodations may be provided. There must be no discrimination on account of race or color; and furnishing separate cars with equal accommodations and facilities at same charges not discrimination. Not more than 3 cents per mile to be charged any passenger. Railroad companies must furnish, without discrimination, the same facilities for carriage of freight with equal expedition. No break, stoppage, or interruption allowed.	Section 3. To charge or receive more than a reasonable rate of compensation declared to be extortion and a misdemeanor.
Section 2. Rebates and drawbacks prohibited.	Section 4. To directly or indirectly, by any rebate, drawback, or other device, charge or receive more from one person than another under substantially similar circumstances and conditions for contemporaneous service, or to neglect or refuse to furnish the same facilities for freight carriage to all persons under substantially similar circumstances, declared to be unjust discrimination and a misdemeanor. The misdemeanors of unjust discrimination and extortion punished by fine of not more than $1,000. Any violation or obstruction of the act a misdemeanor, punishable by fine of not more than $1,000.
Section 3. Combinations or contracts to prevent continuous carriage unlawful. Pooling freights prohibited.
Section 4. No more to be charged for short than long hauls.
Section 5. Freight charges to be posted, and unlawful to charge or receive more or less than specified in schedule.
Section 7. Commission of any act prohibited punished by payment of three times the amount of damage to the complainant, to be recovered in any State or Federal court having jurisdiction; and if found by the court to have been willful, cost and lawyers' fees allowed. Any such action made the subject of equity jurisdiction for discovery and relief.
Section 8. Violation of act, misdemeanor, punished by fine of not more than $2,000.
Section 1. An interstate-commerce commission created, composed of nine members, with the powers and duties defined in the act.	1. They shall consider and investigate all the various questions relating to commerce between the States, especially in the matter of transportation, so far as may be necessary to the establishment of a just system of regulations.
Section 5. Complaint may be made to commission of extortion or unjust discrimination, which shall be forwarded by commission to railroad company and demand made to satisfy the complaint or to answer the same in writing within a reasonable given time. If reparation be made and the complaint withdrawn, case to be dismissed. If complaint not satisfied in the time specified, nor answer made, or if either party demand a hearing, and there is reasonable ground for investigating complaint, the commission shall do so, and determine all questions of fact at issue, record its finding, and furnish a copy to both parties. If the company is found guilty of extortion or unjust discrimination, as charged, the commission shall notify the company to discontinue the practice forthwith, and to pay the complainant, within a reasonable given time, the damages assessed by the commission. If the damages are paid and the practices discontinued, no other penalty inflicted. If the company neglects or refuses to pay the damages and cease the practices, the commission shall certify same with the facts to the district attorney, who shall, at the request of the complainant, forthwith commence proceedings to recover the damages and compel compliance with the provisions of the act.
Commission required to call on railroad companies for annual reports, and if not made, or if the company shall neglect or refuse to answer any question or to produce any book, paper, contract, or other document, or certified abstract thereof, deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and fined not exceeding $1,000 for each offense.
In making investigations required by the act the commission shall have power to summon witnesses, administer oaths, and require the production of books, papers, contracts, or documents, or certified abstracts thereof, relating to the matters under investigation and necessary for the information of the commission.
The commission is authorized to require annual reports from all transportation companies, and to require specific answers to all questions upon which the commission may need information. The annual reports shall show in detail the amount of capital stock issued and the amounts paid therefor; the dividends paid; the number of stockholders; the funded and floating debts, and the interest paid thereon; the cost and value of the company's property, franchises, and equipment, with a complete description of the same; the number of employés and the salaries paid each class; the amounts expended for improvements each year, and how expended; the monthly earnings and receipts from each branch of business and from all sources; the monthly operating and other expenses; the balances of profit and loss, and a complete exhibit of the financial operations of the company each year; and the reports shall also contain such information in relation to rates or regulations concerning fares or freights, or agreements, arrangements, or contracts with other companies, as the commission may require.
The commission shall report on or before December in each year to the Secretary of the Interior such information and data collected as may be considered of value in the determination of questions connected with the regulation of commerce between the States, with recommendations as to additional legislation. The reports of the commission shall embrace the subjects of establishing a system of both maximum and minimum charges for transportation; and for the preservation of free competition within the limits so fixed; for the prohibition of discriminations of any kind whatever, either in favor of or against cities, towns, or other localities, whether the same be competing or non-competing points, and for applying the same principle to transportation for individuals, firms, associations, or corporations in all matters relating to commerce among the States; for the preservation and enforcement of the right of shippers to select the lines and parts of lines over which their shipments shall pass, to the end that said commerce may avail itself of the all-rail or part rail and part water routes; for the prevention of such pooling arrangements and agreements to refrain from just competition as may tend to impose unreasonable burdens upon said commerce, and for the protection of said commerce against unjust exactions based on a class of securities known as "watered stock;" the commission to be governed in its examinations by such rules of action as will be fair, just, and equitable toward all interests involved in commerce among the States.

It shall be unlawful for any transportation company to enter into any combination, contract, or agreement, expressed or implied, to prevent, by change of time schedule, carriage in different cars, or by other means or devices the carriage of the interstate freight from being continuous, whether carried on one or several railroads. And no break of bulk, stoppage, or interruption shall prevent the carriage of such freight from being continuous unless made in good faith for some necessary purpose without intent to evade any of the provisions of this act.

No Senator has more respect for the ability, honesty, and earnest devotion to public duty of the distinguished author of the House bill than myself, but I feel constrained to oppose the bill which has associated his name forever with Congressional legislation on interstate commerce and railroad transportation.

In the evils denounced, and the wrongs that ought to be remedied, I challenge the specification of any material substantial difference between the Reagan, or House bill, and the Cullom or Senate bill. If there is any difference in their scope and in their specification of the wrongs to be remedied, it is manifestly in favor of the Senate bill. It is wider in its range and a far more comprehensive, effective, operative, capable, expeditious, and inexpensive agency than that provided in the Reagan bill. Take the two bills section by section, and you will not find in the House bill a single wrong denounced that is not specifically and unmistakably condemned and prohibited in the Senate bill. The only real practical difference between the two bills is in the machinery organized to make the prevention of the wrongs most adequate, certain, and complete.

Mr. COKE. May I ask the Senator whether there is any provision in the Senate bill against pooling?

Mr. PUGH. Yes, sir.

Mr. COKE. I have not seen it.

Mr. PUGH. You have not scrutinized it. You read it through glasses that were not well rubbed. You will find there that pooling and drawbacks are all condemned in the most unmistakable manner. It is impossible to exclude them from the meaning of the words employed in the Senate bill.

The Reagan bill leaps in the dark, because the men who favored it had no experience upon which they could make a law. All their knowledge was speculative, theoretical, as to the effect of any law on this subject. The Reagan bill leaps in the dark, and engages the State and Federal courts primarily in a struggle with railroad corporations as public enemies to be subjected to regulation by the force of general, prohibitory, penal, and criminal statutes, without any regard to differences or changes in the conditions, relations, or surroundings of the twelve hundred railroads running all over thirty-eight States a distance of 125,000 miles. There is no power anywhere in the bill to suspend, modify, relax, or vary in any way the operation of rigid, inflexible statutes, so as to meet inevitable and unavoidable results that are being constantly produced by the natural laws of supply and demand, varying conditions of trade and productions, and other elements that business principles require to be considered in the wise adjustment of such a far-reaching and complicated system of interstate transportation.

It prohibits all roads under all circumstances and conditions from charging any more in any case for a short than a long haul of freight. It may be that the road is making a long haul between remote points in competition with water ways at a rate below the cost of transportation, or below what the common law would enforce as a reasonable rate, and yet no more can be charged for the short haul where there is no competition, although the charge made for the short haul is reasonable. Without regard to the principles of the common law of which it is "a codification" as stated by my friend the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], the price for the short haul can in no case, whether reasonable or not, be more than for the long haul. And again, whether the price for the long haul is reasonable or not for the short haul, the short haul may be compelled to pay as much as the long haul. The section allowing as much for short as long hauls is inconsistent and irreconcilable with the provision that the freight rates shall be reasonable.

Then, again, the bill provides that the posted schedule rates shall be fixed and unalterable, except on five days' notice and the posting of new schedules, and that while the posted rates are operative no more nor less shall be charged for freight than the schedule price. It may be that the maximum and minimum schedule rates on some roads may become unreasonable—too much or too little; and yet the schedule rates may stand in the discretion of the corporation until altered on five days' notice and new schedules posted. There is nothing in the bill making it compulsory on the corporation to give the five days' notice and post new schedules, and it is not likely that any change will be made in the rates where the maximum and minimum charges are too high under changed conditions and circumstances. What power has Congress to prohibit a common carrier and to make it a penalty and a criminal offense for a common carrier to charge less for all freight hauled by him under similar circumstances than the minimum rate in the schedule? The power of Congress to limit maximum rates is doubted, and where is our authority under the Constitution to prohibit and make unlawful and criminal a contract of the carrier with all the shippers to haul their freight at less rates than the schedule rates while the schedule rates are operative?

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. PUGH. Under the rules of the Senate the Senator can get the floor when he pleases and occupy as much time as he pleases.

Mr. COKE. I simply want to make one statement. I stated just now that there was no prohibition in the Senate bill upon pooling. The Senator from Alabama says there is. I now say after a close examination of the bill that there is not, and that the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. PUGH. Now we will let Senators read the two bills and answer that question for themselves. I say that the language of the Senate bill clearly includes pooling, drawbacks, and everything resulting in unjust discrimination and unequal rates and charges. Is pooling or is a drawback an unjust discrimination? It is the very essence of pooling; it is the very object of drawback. If it is not unjust discrimination, if it is not unequal rates, if it is not charging one shipper more than another, all of which is prohibited in the Senate bill and made a misdemeanor subject to a fine of not less than $1,000, I am very much mistaken.

And, again, the bill clearly recognizes the power of Congress to prohibit and punish railroad corporations for discriminating between passengers on account of race or color; and while it provides that furnishing separate and equal facilities and accommodations for passengers shall not be considered such discrimination, yet the recognition of the power to make laws to prevent discrimination on account of race or color stands conspicuously admitted. Under what clause of the Constitution is the power granted to Congress to legislate in any way for any purpose as to the race or color of the passengers? Is the power embraced in the grant to regulate commerce between the States? What has the race or color of passengers to do with interstate commerce or transportation? The common law secures to every passenger who pays the same fare the right to equal facilities and accommodations.

But there is nothing in the common law which requires that passengers of different races and colors shall ride together in the same car. Is the power derived from the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution? The Supreme Court of the United States has decided in the memorable civil-rights cases that "the fourteenth amendment is prohibitory in its character, and prohibitory upon the States." It declares that "no State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States." The Supreme Court says: "It is State action of a particular character that is prohibited. Individual invasion (or invasion by a corporation) of individual rights is not the subject-matter of the amendment." "Congress is invested with power to enforce the prohibition—to adopt appropriate legislation for correcting the effects of such prohibited State laws" (not railroad acts separating the two races and giving them equal accommodations in different cars). "This is the legislative power conferred upon Congress, and this is the whole of it." The Reagan bill is an enlargement of the power of Congress as limited by the decision of the Supreme Court, and to that extent is unconstitutional, dangerous, and mischievous.

The bill is also clearly inconsistent with itself in requiring that no more than 3 cents a mile shall be charged passengers on any road.

The whole passenger and freight problem is solved by answering the question in every case, What is a reasonable rate? Is it possible that a rate that is reasonable in one case is reasonable in all cases, whatever may be the differences in supply and demand, productions and trade, cost of road, price of labor, and other elements entering more or less into the question of what are reasonable rates? Every case ought to stand on its own facts and circumstances, and should be decided by a tribunal that has the power to discover and apply the facts so as to do justice according to the common law arising on the facts in each case.

I am now brought to a brief consideration of the Cullom or Senate bill. I do not claim that this bill is perfect. No doubt time and trial would show many imperfections. It will take long time and trial and intelligent experience to crystallize a wise, safe, and efficient system of railway interstate transportation.

Everything we can do now is experimental. The Senate bill goes far enough for a beginning in an experiment. It is safer to experiment with a commission having elastic and flexible powers to discover facts in every case, and examine conditions, relations, and surroundings, to learn if there is anything exceptional that ought to qualify the application of common-law principles or the rules of equity. The Senate bill has been called a sham and a pretext to delay action and mislead the people. I deny it, and call for the proof. I am answered with speculation and declamation as to what is to be its operation. The commission is to be composed of men selected by a Democratic President and a Republican Senate, and the board will be as well qualified and as incorruptible as the judges of our highest courts. It will have power to explore the whole field and gather all the information so much needed by Congress to enable it to deal with this difficult and dangerous problem with its eyes open and in full view of information indispensable to wise, safe, and efficient legislation.

Shall we try the comparatively more expeditious, less expensive, more practicable, and less dangerous agency of a commission, with its powers of adaptation to local or special or qualifying facts and conditions, to afford relief in each case and improve the general system of transportation, or will we take the House bill and drive complainants into courts with inflexible jurisdiction to enforce inflexible statutes on subjects full of unavoidable changes and variety? In my humble judgment the House bill is incapable of beneficial execution. And when the evils attending an effort to enforce it are made manifest the railroad corporations will have verified their predictions that Congress would prove incapable of framing wise and safe laws for the regulation of interstate transportation. By resorting to extreme and impracticable measures to satisfy the necessity for some remedial legislation we may increase popular discontent by the failure of our remedies and leave railroad corporations to manage their affairs as common carriers in their own way restrained only by self-interest and the fear of mob violence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty-four minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CULLOM. I move to reconsider the vote agreeing to the motion that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 27, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Bayard,	Dolph,	Jackson,	Pendleton,
Beck,	Garland,	Jonas,	Pugh,
Butler,	George,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,
Call,	Gibson,	Kenna,	Saulsbury,
Cameron of Pa.,	Groome,	Lamar,	Vance,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	McPherson,	Vest.
Colquitt,	Harris,	Manderson,

NAYS—27.

Allison,	Edmunds,	McMillan,	Palmer,
Bowen,	Frye,	Mahone,	Pike,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harrison,	Maxey,	Platt,
Coke,	Hawley,	Miller of Cal.,	Riddleberger,
Conger,	Hoar,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sherman,
Cullom,	Jones of Nevada,	Morgan,	Wilson.
Dawes,	Lapham,	Morrill,

ABSENT—22.

Aldrich,	Farley,	Mitchell,	Van Wyck,
Blair,	Gorman,	Plumb,	Voorhees,
Brown,	Hale,	Sabin,	Walker,
Camden,	Hill,	Sawyer,	Williams.
Chace,	Ingalls,	Sewell,
Fair,	Logan,	Slater

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The question recurring on agreeing to the motion of Mr. CULLOM to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to adjourn until Monday next, the yeas were 26, and the nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Allison,	Edmunds,	McMillan,	Pike,
Bowen,	Frye,	Mahone,	Platt,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harrison,	Maxey,	Riddleberger,
Coke,	Hawley,	Miller of Cal.,	Sherman,
Conger,	Hoar,	Morgan,	Wilson.
Cullom,	Jones of Nevada,	Morrill,
Dawes,	Lapham,	Palmer,

NAYS—29.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Jonas,	Pugh,
Bayard,	Garland,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,
Beck,	George,	Kenna,	Saulsbury,
Butler,	Gibson,	Lamar,	Vance,
Call,	Groome,	McPherson,	Vest.
Cameron of Pa.,	Hampton,	Manderson,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Miller of N. Y.,
Colquitt,	Jackson,	Pendleton,

ABSENT—21.

Blair,	Gorman,	Plumb,	Voorhees,
Brown,	Hale,	Sabin,	Walker,
Camden,	Hill,	Sawyer,	Williams.
Chace,	Ingalls,	Sewell,
Fair,	Logan,	Slater,
Farley,	Mitchell,	Van Wyck,

So the motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. Now I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday next.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 30, 1885.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by Hon. J. B. CLARK, Jr., Clerk of the House, who said: The Speaker being absent it is the duty of the Clerk to call the House to order. A communication from the Speaker will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, January 30, 1885.

Hon. J. B. CLARK, Clerk of the House:

I hereby designate Hon. J. C. S. BLACKBURN to preside as Speaker pro tempore of the House during this legislative day.

J. G. CARLISLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BLACKBURN then took the chair as Speaker pro tempore; and after prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D., the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair asks permission of the House to submit several executive communications.

There was no objection.

CONGO CONFERENCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

In response to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 5th of January, 1885, calling for information as to the Congo conference at Berlin, I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State of the 28th instant in relation to the subject.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 29, 1885.

Mr. BELMONT. I move that this message, with the accompanying documents, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed.

The motion of Mr. BELMONT was agreed to.

RETURN OF A BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives (which was concurred in by the Senate) of January 28, 1885, I return herewith the bill (H. R. 1017) relative to the Inspector-General's Department of the Army.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 29, 1885.

HOMESTEAD SETTLEMENT IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of the 27th instant, with inclosures, from the Secretary of the Interior, in relation to objections on the part of the Creek Nation of Indians to pending legislation providing for the opening up to homestead settlement of certain lands in the Indian Territory. The matter is presented to the consideration of Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 29, 1885.

SINKING OF THE STEAMER TALLAPOOSA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, in response to a resolution of the House of January 29, 1885, making inquiry concerning the recent collision of the United States steamer Tallapoosa.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I ask that this communication be read.

Mr. BEACH. Does that require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is the privilege of any member to have the communication read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the following:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 30, 1885.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a resolution, introduced by Mr. G. D. WISE and adopted by the House January 29, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to report to this House, at the earliest possible date, the order or orders under which the United States steamer Tallapoosa was cruising at the time she was sunk by a collision with another vessel, at what date she left the city of Washington, and the several ports at which she entered or places visited up to the time of said collision, and what was her destination; also a list of the officers, crew, and passengers on said vessel, and what special duties, if any, were assigned to said officers and crew."

The Tallapoosa left Washington July 15, 1884, on her customary freighting cruise to the navy-yards and stations, under orders to proceed "to Norfolk, New York, Newport, and Portsmouth, N. H., receiving and discharging such freight as may be placed on board for the several stations mentioned." She arrived at Norfolk July 16 and at New York the 17th. On the 19th she left New York and reached the torpedo station at Newport the next day. While in Narraganset Bay she went to Bristol to inspect the works of the Herreshoff Manufacturing Company and to witness the trials of the steam-yacht Yosemite over the measured mile established by this Department between Bristol and Newport. On the 23d she went to the Fish Commission station at Wood's Holl, and on the 24th reached Portsmouth, where was assembled the North Atlantic squadron, and from which port, while awaiting the arrival of the Greely relief ships, she went down the coast of Maine and returned, touching at Bar Harbor. After the Greely reception ceremonies of August 1 and 4 she went, on the 5th, to Gloucester, Mass., and returned to Portsmouth. I joined the Tallapoosa at New York, August 19, with my family, and left her at Portsmouth after the Greely reception.

At Portsmouth the Tallapoosa took freight on board, consisting principally of 18,864 pounds of copper and 17,275 pounds of lead for Washington, and on August 18, without special orders from the Department, sailed for Boston, arriving the next day, and there taking on board compasses and other nautical instruments valued at $2,488, for Washington, a quantity of lumber and cordage for the training station at Newport, and a large amount of cordage valued at $11,931.62 for New York, she left Boston August 21, her immediate destination being Newport, and in the evening of that day was sunk in Vineyard Sound by collision with the schooner James S. Lowell. She has been raised and taken to the New York navy-yard, where she is now undergoing repairs.

A list of the officers and crew on the vessel at the time she sunk is hereto annexed. There were no passengers. It is not known that any special or unusual duties were assigned to said officers and crew.

As full details of all events transpiring upon or in connection with the Tallapoosa during the foregoing period as the House may deem it wise to seek it will give me pleasure to narrate.

Occasion is taken in this communication to state the service in which the Tallapoosa has been usually engaged. She is an unarmed side-wheel steamer, which has been ordinarily used for the transportation of freight between the navy-yards and of seamen recruits to vessels and stations, which work it is essential that some ship owned by the Government shall do. Having a large upper saloon and hurricane deck, she is well adapted not only for her transportation business, but also to take part in naval ceremonials in which any public officials may be called upon to participate, or to enable the Secretary of the Navy to visit the naval stations and vessels, or the President to inspect the ships or squadrons. She has therefore been appropriately used whenever needed for these purposes. I may be allowed to say that, in my judgment, such visits, whether by the Secretary or President, or both, are always productive of good, tending as they do to arouse among officers and seamen increased interest in their work and to improve and elevate the character of the naval service. The Secretary of the Navy, taken from civil life as he must be, can make no wiser disposition of a portion of his time than in visiting the officers, seamen, and ships of the Navy when at sea. In no other way can he come to fully understand the character of the establishment with which he has to deal and to fully qualify himself for the peculiar duty he has to perform. My only regret is that I have not been able during my brief period of service to see more than I have of the excellent work which has been done by the North Atlantic squadron during the last three years, with which the country may well be satisfied, and from which there may have been developed just such capacity and confidence as that which made so successful the Greely relief expedition. My efforts in the administration of the Navy Department, whether wisely or unwisely directed, have been largely influenced by facts learned and opinions formed as the result of observations of the ships in actual service afloat.

The Despatch and Tallapoosa, while reasonably serving the purposes indicated, are not the most suitable vessels, and should be replaced by other and better ships whenever the reconstruction of the Navy in accordance with modern requirements has sufficiently progressed. The practice of other naval powers may afford a proper guide to our actions. All maintain as a part of their navy not only transports, dispatch steamers, and tenders, but also vessels used by high naval officers and government officials on inspections and reviews of ships and squadrons.

Very respectfully,

WM. E. CHANDLER,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Before the reading was concluded,

Mr. REED, of Maine. If that can be printed in the RECORD it will answer.

Mr. COX, of New York. I object to its being printed in the RECORD. It will be printed in the ordinary way.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I object. It is very good reading, and I should like to hear it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It will not take long.

Mr. MILLS. I would like to inquire of the Speaker whether it is too late to object to the laying of those things before the House by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair asked unanimous consent to present these executive communications to the House and no objection was made. The gentleman from Maine asked for the reading of this communication from the Secretary of the Navy in reference to the Tallapoosa.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we all want to see this communication from the Secretary of the Navy, and I hope there will be no objection to it being printed in the RECORD. It is a matter attracting general attention.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TALBOTT. I withdraw the objection I made.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will withdraw my objection in order to save time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the letter of the Secretary being printed in the RECORD?

Mr. RANDALL. What is it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request is to have printed in the RECORD a communication from the Secretary of the Navy in reference to the sinking of the Tallapoosa.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The letter was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SCAJACANADA CREEK, NEW YORK.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War transmitting a report from the Chief of Engineers of survey and preliminary examination of Scajacanada Creek, at Buffalo, N. Y.; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS, FORT WAYNE, IND.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, inclosing a letter from the Supervising Architect, and recommending an increase in the limit of cost of the public building at Fort Wayne, Ind.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HAMPTON INSTITUTE, VIRGINIA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of the Interior of the reappropriation from certain unexpended balances for the Hampton Institute, Virginia; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

RANCHO DE TAOS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting tracing of private land claim 109 of Rancho de Taos, Territory of New Mexico, Francisco de Antonio de Gijosa, claimant; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

SANTISSIMA TRINIDAD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, inclosing a tracing of the Santissima Trinidad, or Rancho de Galvan, private land claim No. 123, New Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

COLUMBIA INSTITUTION FOR DEAF AND DUMB.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a letter from the president of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, submitting a report of receipts and disbursements for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

Mr. VALENTINE, for one week, on account of important business.

Mr. MCCORMICK, for to-day, on account of sickness.

FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

On motion of Mr. HOLMAN, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Appropriations was discharged from the further consideration of the message of the President, with accompanying papers, relating to the French spoliation claims; and the same was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

WAYS AND MEANS.

Mr. MILLS. I am instructed unanimously by the Committee on Ways and Means to ask that a day be set apart for the disposition of bills other than general revenue bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the resolution, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, the 7th day of February next, after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, except general revenue bills and bills relating to treaties.

Mr. THOMAS. I object.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. PHELPS. I rise to a privileged question, Mr. Speaker, in behalf of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT], who is detained from the House by illness. He is recorded as having voted in the negative on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] to go to the business upon the Speaker's table for the purpose of taking up the Mexican treaty bill. Mr. HITT was absent from the House and paired, and therefore his vote in the negative should be erased.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made accordingly.

FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

Mr. COX, of New York. I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution as a matter of mere clerkly convenience.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to have taken from the files of the House all petitions and other papers in reference to the French spoliation claims and send the same to the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RANDALL. Does any committee report that resolution?

Mr. COX, of New York. It is suggested by the Clerk of the House as a matter of convenience.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk of the House stated that these papers were in an insecure condition, in no one's custody, and open to the inspection of everybody.

Mr. RANDALL. Has any committee reported it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No committee has acted on it. Is there objection to the introduction of the resolution?

There was no objection, and the resolution was adopted.

Mr. COX, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be so noted.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I demand the regular order of business.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KEIFER. On Wednesday last my colleague from Ohio [Mr. PAIGE] offered a preamble, with a resolution attached, relating to the seat of my late colleague, Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio. That preamble recited that Mr. ROBINSON, late a member of this House, had been elected to the office of secretary of state of Ohio, and had entered upon the duties of that position.

The preamble also recited that Mr. ROBINSON was borne upon the rolls of this House as a member, and the resolution, which was adopted by the House, directed the Committee on Elections to inquire into the relations of Mr. ROBINSON to the House. Now, I desire to have read, sir, from the Clerk's desk the following telegram relating to this subject.

Mr. CONVERSE. I rise to a question of order. I would like to have it stated by the Chair by what authority this question comes before the House at this time as a matter of privilege after having been presented and referred to the Committee on Elections.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio rose without having previously notified the Chair of his object, and stated that he rose to a question of privilege, which the Chair presumes the gentleman proposes to present to the House.

Mr. CONVERSE. I make the point of order that the gentleman has not stated any subject or question of privilege. The subject to which he referred is a subject which has been referred to the Committee on Elections of this House. It is not a question of privilege, therefore, as far as that question is concerned, because it has passed beyond the control of the House, for the present at least.

Mr. KEIFER. The House, Mr. Speaker, is the only avenue through which I can get a matter referred to the committee. I have, therefore, to lay it before the House in this form in order to reach the committee at all.

Mr. CONVERSE. I object, unless the gentleman will state his question of privilege and have it ruled on by the Chair, to the reading of any such paper as he proposes to have read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not know and can not know what is the purpose of the gentleman from Ohio, who states that he rises to a question of privilege. The Chair supposes the gentleman desires to submit some resolution or other matter which he proposes to refer to the committee to which the subject referred to has already gone by the previous order of the House.

Mr. KEIFER. This, I will state, relates to a question of the highest privilege.

Mr. CONVERSE. I submit that the gentleman should state his question of privilege before he can have the right to occupy the floor in debate or with the reading of any paper. There is nothing before the House which indicates that the gentleman has any such right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio has made no motion in reference to the matter.

Mr. KEIFER. I have stated that the subject-matter was with reference to the right of a member to a seat in this House. I am now proceeding to have a telegram read which I desire and expect to have referred to the Committee on Elections. This telegram relates to the subject-matter which is of the highest privilege.

Mr. CONVERSE. I shall object to the reading of it until we understand what the question of privilege is.

Mr. KEIFER. If the Speaker will have the telegram returned to me I will read it as a part of my remarks.

Mr. CONVERSE. I object to the gentleman's proceeding in that manner until it has first been determined to be a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has had no opportunity, either from an examination of the paper referred to by the gentleman from Ohio or from any remarks which he has submitted to determine whether the gentleman raises a question of privilege or not. The gentleman will read or send the paper to the desk to be read by the Clerk.

Mr. CONVERSE. I object to the reading of any paper until it be shown that there is a question of privilege presented.

Mr. KEIFER. I will make that perfectly clear to the satisfaction of the Chair and to the House as soon as I shall have read this telegram. That resolution to which I have referred was introduced, as I have said, with a preamble and was adopted, referring the matter of the right of the seat of my late colleague, Mr. ROBINSON, to the Committee on Elections.

Mr. CONVERSE. I object to the gentleman proceeding in this way. By what right does the gentleman proceed to make an argument?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio on the left claims that he raises a question of privilege, and the Chair presumes that he is about to state it.

Mr. KEIFER. I know gentlemen are very sensitive, but I am proceeding to show why I have the right to have this telegram read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the Chair does not think the gentleman from Ohio has the right to call up here for debate a matter which has been already passed upon by the House, even though it involves a question of the highest privilege. The subject has gone into the hands of a committee of the House and that committee has not as yet made a report upon it.

Mr. KEIFER. I have no right whatever to go before the committee with the matter. If I had an ordinary petition, or anything that states a fact, a paper reciting the resignation, if you please, of a member, I must submit it through the House. I am not intending to debate or argue the subject, but simply to have this question referred to the committee, which will settle the whole question as a matter of fact. In order that they may intelligently act upon it I desire to submit this paper.

Mr. CONVERSE. I insist on the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio on the right of the Chair objects to the gentleman on the left proceeding to debate the question.

Mr. KEIFER. I was only going to ask the Clerk to read the telegram which I desire to have referred to the committee.

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentleman says he wants to refer this matter to the committee. Why does he not put it in that box? He says he can not reach the committee. He can reach the committee through the petition-box, but he has no right to read his petition.

Mr. CONVERSE. If it is a petition it can go through the petition-box.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has the right, of course, to send any petition he chooses to a committee through the petition-box under the rules of the House, but the Chair does not understand the gentleman to present a petition.

Mr. KEIFER. This is a telegram from an officer I think connected with the state department of Ohio. It is directed to me and reads as follows:

Members of Congress are State officers——

Mr. CONVERSE. I insist upon the objection I have made that the gentleman can not read this paper until he recites his question of privilege.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand the Chair to decide that I might proceed to read it myself or send it to the Clerk to be read.

Mr. CONVERSE. Let the gentleman state his question of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection the Chair would have permitted the reading of the paper. The Chair did not know whether it was matter competent to be sent to the committee in the shape of evidence.

Mr. KEIFER. I will read the telegram and then the Chair will be better able to determine.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] objects to the reading of the telegram.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to read it for the purpose of showing that I took the floor on a question of the highest privilege, one that was decided the day before yesterday by the Speaker to be a question of the highest privilege because it related to the right to a member's seat. That question it is true has been referred to the Committee on Elections, but desiring to possess that committee with the facts in relation to this matter rather than to suppress them I propose to send matter there that will enable them to dispose of the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair would have preferred that this matter had come up while the permanent Speaker was here, as the question was originally brought up while the permanent Speaker was in the chair. It was then brought up as a matter of the highest privilege and was so treated. It has been temporarily disposed of by being referred to one of the committees of the House, and the Chair does not understand it is the right of any member to bring that matter back to the House for consideration as a question of privilege until that committee shall have reported.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not ask to bring it back. I do not ask to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the question, as I might under the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion would be in order.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not propose to do anything of the kind.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I suggest to the gentleman that he move to discharge the committee, and he can then read that paper as a part of his remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] was not recognized for that purpose.

Mr. BLOUNT. I call for the regular order. I understand the Chair has ruled twice on this question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has ruled that the gentleman from Ohio has not in the judgment of the Chair stated a question of personal privilege.

Mr. KEIFER. I have not asked to state a question of personal privilege. If the Chair will turn to the RECORD, page 1038, he will find this was brought up as a matter of the highest privilege, because, as the Speaker stated, it related to the question of the right to a member's seat. The question was simply referred to the committee to report on that subject and I am seeking to get the facts before the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think the gentleman has the right to debate the question in the House after it has been referred to a committee.

Mr. KEIFER. I was not proposing to debate the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio has not yet stated a question of privilege.

Mr. KEIFER. Allow me then to state my question of privilege and let it be ruled on. I wish to say the preamble and resolution on page 1038 of the RECORD were adopted and referred to the Committee on Elections, no doubt under a misapprehension on the part of the House to which it was led by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PAIGE]. The preamble stated in effect that Mr. ROBINSON had not resigned his seat, whereas I wish to show that by an official message from the governor's office that the gentleman from Ohio who presented that resolution had himself a certified copy of the resignation of Mr. ROBINSON at the time he had the subject referred to the Committee on Elections for investigation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not understand that this is a question of privilege.

Mr. KEIFER. The only purpose I have——

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The Chair does not think the gentleman from Ohio has stated a question of privilege.

Mr. KEIFER. I have not been permitted to state it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has certainly given the gentleman every opportunity.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand the sensitiveness of my colleagues from Ohio on this subject, because, as the telegram will show, they perfectly well know Mr. ROBINSON resigned on the 12th day of last month to the governor of Ohio.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio is not in order. The Chair has more than once ruled that he has not presented a question of privilege.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COX, of New York. What is the regular order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the morning hour for the call of committees for reports on private bills.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to dispense with the morning hour and with all further private business for the day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Texas propose to make two motions at once?

Mr. REAGAN. I make the motion to dispense with the morning hour, and that the consideration of private business be dispensed with for the day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Texas that the two motions had better be separated.

Mr. REAGAN. Then I move to dispense with the morning hour.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 24, noes 111.

So (further count not being called for) the motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The morning hour begins at five minutes before 1 o'clock.

MERCHANTS' BANK OF LITTLE ROCK.

Mr. CANDLER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7973) to change the name of the National Bank of Little Rock to the First National Bank of Little Rock; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FORBES'S HISTORICAL ART COLLECTION.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back the bill (H. R. 6339) providing for the purchase of Forbes's historical art collection. The committee ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, that the report be printed, and that the bill and report be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the Committee on Military Affairs will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on referring the bill to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. STEELE. I object to the bill going to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MAGINNIS. It does not depend on the gentleman's objection. I have a right to report the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs and to move its reference to the Committee on Appropriations. I make that motion.

Mr. STEELE. I move to amend the gentleman's motion so that the bill shall be referred to the Committee on the Library.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 30, noes 70.

Mr. STEELE. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. STEELE, and the gentleman from Montana, Mr. MAGINNIS.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 71.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the demand for a further count, but I would like to have the report read.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I object.

Mr. STEELE. I want to hear it only so far as it states the action of the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection being made, the Chair thinks it is too late for the gentleman to demand the reading as a matter of right.

Mr. STEELE. I withdraw the demand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana withdraws his demand for the reading of the report, and the question is upon the motion made by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MAGINNIS], that this bill reported from the Committee on Military Affairs be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and that it be printed, with the accompanying report.

The motion was agreed to; and it was so ordered.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. LOVERING, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4280) to increase the pension of Mrs. Martha C. Breese, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

WILLIAM S. SPRATT.

Mr. LE FEVRE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported, as a substitute for the bill H. R. 4222, a bill (H. R. 8139) granting a pension to William S. Spratt; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

GEORGE S. HAWLEY.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back with a recommendation that it do pass the bill (H. R. 8104) granting an increase of pension to George S. Hawley; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

D. B. DAWNING.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with an amendment and with a recommendation that it do pass the bill (H. R. 2173) for the benefit of D. B. Dawning; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM KENDALL.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a recommendation that it do pass the bill (H. R. 3986) for the relief of the legal representatives of Maj. William Kendall; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1286) for the relief of Henrietta M. Sands, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

WATER SUPPLY OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8140) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. RICHARDSON.

Mr. HEPBURN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8141) granting a pension to Mrs. Richardson, of Allerton, Iowa, widow of Milton J. Richardson, late of Company F, Seventeenth Iowa Infantry; which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. LUCY PARR.

Mr. HEPBURN, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. 8142) granting a pension to Mrs. Lucy Parr, of Allerton, Iowa, widow of Samuel B. Parr, late of Company I, Fourth Regiment Iowa Infantry; which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] moves that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, which is equivalent to a demand for the regular order.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that if the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] is voted down I am instructed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to press the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. I believe that whether this motion be agreed to or not, a two-thirds vote will be necessary to dispense with private business to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is right.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand the motion now before the House is that of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar. I repeat, that if this motion be voted down I will, under instructions of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, endeavor to have the House go on with the river and harbor bill.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BLAND, it was agreed to, there being—ayes 119, noes 51.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House (Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, in the chair), and proceeded to the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

HIRAM JOHNSON.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1477) to pay Hiram Johnson and other persons therein named the several sums of money therein specified, being the surplus of a military assessment paid by them and accounted for to the United States in excess of the amount required for the indemnity for which it was levied and collected.

Mr. McMILLIN. That bill has been heretofore considered, and an understanding reached that it should retain its place on the Calendar to await the report of the committee, the bill having been recommitted. I ask, therefore, that the bill be passed over informally.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, that order will be made. The Chair hears none.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIM IN NEW MEXICO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 130) to confirm a certain private land claim in the Territory of New Mexico.

Mr. HALSELL. I ask that that bill be laid aside informally, not to lose its place on the Calendar.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McMILLIN. It has been the custom of the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar during its last three sittings to pass over informally all bills down to and including the seventh bill on the Calendar, a bill (H. R. 75) for the relief of Edward Byrne. The Committee of the Whole had reached the consideration of the next business on the Calendar, the petition of Bishop E. Fitzgerald. I ask, therefore, that all business on the Calendar down to the case I have just mentioned be passed over informally. I believe those who are interested in the cases to be passed over have consented to this heretofore.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN]? The Chair hears none, and it is ordered accordingly.

BISHOP E. FITZGERALD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the petition of Bishop E. Fitzgerald, reported adversely from the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I desire to move that this matter be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have no objection to that. I know nothing about the claim.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] moves that this petition be reported to the House with the recommendation that its further consideration be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

FENDALL CARPENTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4686) for the relief of Fendall Carpenter.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $4,400 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Fendall Carpenter for twenty-five bales of cotton seized and sold by the United States military authorities during the late war, and the proceeds thereof appropriated to the use of the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army.

The report (by Mr. JONES, of Wisconsin) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the claim of Fendall Carpenter, of Fayette County, Tennessee, beg leave to submit the following report:

The claimant resided in Fayette County, Tennessee, during the late war of rebellion, cultivating his farm, having on hand twenty-eight bales cotton, while the confederate troops were scouring the country for contributions, willing or unwilling, from citizens qwning cotton. Claimant, in the early part of 1862, concealed his cotton, where it remained until the coming of the Federal military forces in August, 1862. The latter, learning of the cotton, seized twenty-five bales thereof. As this cotton was seized in 1862, several months prior to the act of March 12, 1863, requiring all such property to be turned over to agents of the Treasury specially appointed for that purpose, it was sold by the military authorities, realizing upon the same $4,400 gold, which money was appropriated to payment of vouchers and receipt rolls in the Army, and consequently was not paid into the "captured and abandoned fund" in the Treasury.

The claimant applied to the Department to be refunded said proceeds, and the matter coming to the attention of President Lincoln, he, on the 23d December, 1863, indorsed upon the application:

"Will the Judge-Advocate-General please examine this case and report upon it to the Secretary of War.

"A. LINCOLN."

The Judge-Advocate-General, Mr. Holt, made his report on the following day, and as his report embraces succinctly the facts and conclusions of law, in both of which your committee concur, it is hereby adopted as part of this report, as follows:

JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, December 24, 1863.

To Hon. E. M. STANTON,
Secretary of War:

In the case of Fendall Carpenter, a citizen of Fayette County, Tennessee, referred to me by the President under his indorsement of the 23d instant, with the request that I report upon the same to the Secretary of War, I have the honor to submit as follows:

On the 25th of August last a detachment of United States troops penetrated to the vicinity of Carpenter's residence, seized twenty-eight bales of cotton belonging to him, of which three bales were burned, and the remaining twenty-five bales were carried away. For the latter he was furnished with a receipt (which is filed with the papers in the case), certifying that this cotton had been taken "for the use of the United States," and signed by Lieut. Thomas Purcell, quartermaster Sixteenth Iowa Volunteers.

This cotton was delivered to C. C. Williams, acting assistant quartermaster of the military post of Bolivar, Tenn., and was, by order of Brigadier-General Ross, commanding district, advertised for sale on August 27, and thereupon sold for about $4,400. The cotton was treated throughout as captured property, and is described in the advertisement "as taken from the enemy." Carpenter now claims that this amount shall be paid over to him as the proceeds of property of which he has been unjustly deprived. His claim, if established, must be based either upon his loyalty as a Union citizen previous to the seizure, or upon the fact that his case is within the President's proclamation of 25th July, 1862.

The evidence as to the loyalty of Carpenter is presented by the affidavits of two of his fellow-citizens, who state that at the election in February, 1861, he voted against secession; that he opposed the rebellion until it became dangerous for him to do so any longer, when he withdrew himself from public matters and remained as quiet as possible; that he is a man of property, but has never contributed anything to the support of the rebellion; further, that in the spring of 1862 he concealed this very cotton to prevent its being destroyed by the rebel authorities. It is understood, also, that Hon. Horatio King and Hon. Thomas R. Smith, of Tennessee, vouch for the loyalty of Carpenter and of the parties whose affidavits have been quoted.

If, however, the fact that Carpenter for a certain period before the seizure took no part in assisting the rebellion be held to evince on his part an acquiescence therein, or be deemed evidence of his having lent aid or countenance thereto, his case will, it is believed, be found to come within the protection of the proclamation and act of July 17, 1862, which authorized it. The sixth section of this act imposes a forfeiture of all their property and estate upon all persons engaged in armed rebellion, or in aiding and abetting such rebellion, who shall not within sixty days after a proclamation to that effect, to be made by the President, cease to be so engaged, &c., and return to their allegiance to the United States. And thereupon the proclamation of July 25, in pursuance of this act, warns all persons to comply with its provisions on pain of the forfeitures and seizures therein prescribed. On August 25, 1862, the same day with the seizure in question, but whether before or after it does not appear (nor is it material), Carpenter subscribed before a United States provost-marshal a comprehensive and stringent oath of allegiance, in which he engaged to support the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, to render all due allegiance to the Federal authorities, and to use his best endeavors to put down armed rebellion against the same, to protect the property and preserve the peace in his neighborhood, and to refrain from ever taking up arms or serving in any way against the Government of the United States.

This oath is filed with the papers in the case. It is stated in Carpenter's behalf that this was the first opportunity which had been afforded him of entering into a formal and solemn engagement of this character, and that he embraced it at once by subscribing the oath which has been recited. Thus it will be seen that Carpenter, within the time specified by the proclamation, did formally "return to" and make a public profession of his allegiance to the United States, and there is no proof that he has departed therefrom in any particular, or demeaned himself otherwise since than as a loyal citizen.

It is a just implication from the act of July, 1862, that all persons complying with its conditions within the time limited shall be protected in the enjoyment of their property. Under the circumstances, therefore, which have been detailed, it is concluded that the appropriation of the cotton of Carpenter by the United States authorities was unauthorized, and that he is entitled to claim the proceeds of the sale.

The question now passed upon has already been considered in the case of E. P. McNeal, a citizen of Tennessee, and from a report made therein from this office of November 6, 1862, the sum of $10,000, proceeds of his cotton, seized about the same time as that of Carpenter, was ordered to be restored to him by order of the Secretary of War. McNeal, like Carpenter, had subscribed an oath of allegiance within the period prescribed by the proclamation, but his record as to previous loyalty was by no means so satisfactory as that of the latter, nor was his claim so meritorious. As was remarked in the case of McNeal, an important consideration of public policy is involved in cases of this character. The good faith of the Government has been pledged to all those who, heeding the warning of the President's announcement of amnesty, have accepted the terms which it offered, and conformed their behavior to the solemn engagement into which they then entered. To such the Government on its part owes protection and security for themselves and their property, and should ever stand ready to make good to them, where practicable, the pecuniary losses which they have incurred in consequence of unauthorized or ill-advised seizures by officers of our Army.

It is recommended, therefore, that the sum of about $4,400, which resulted from the sale of Carpenter's cotton, be at once paid over to him by Brigadier-General Ross; provided, as is believed, this sum has not yet been deposited in the Treasury. If, however, this amount has passed out of the hands or control of this officer, he should be required to report what disposition has been made of it, so that if possible it may be reached in specie and paid to the claimant.

J. HOLT,
Judge-Advocate-General.

The proceeds of the cotton were, however, never refunded to claimant by the Secretary of War for supposed want of authority so to do.

Inasmuch, therefore, as the Government has applied the money received from the sale of claimant's property to the payment of legitimate expenses of the Army, your committee think he is clearly entitled to be refunded such proceeds, and submit the accompanying bill and recommend its passage.

Mr. STORM. I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are two questions which I wish to put to the gentleman in charge of this bill. First, I would like to know whether there is any evidence that the proceeds of this cotton went into the Treasury. That is not shown in the report. Secondly, I wish to inquire how it happened that this claimant, whose claim is well presented by the Judge-Advocate-General, never availed himself of the opportunity during the period such opportunity was afforded with reference to this class of claims to take his claim into the Court of Claims for adjudication. The Judge-Advocate-General says:

It is recommended, therefore, that the sum of about $4,400, which resulted from the sale of Carpenter's cotton, be at once paid over to him by Brigadier-General Ross; provided, as is believed, this sum has not yet been deposited in the Treasury. If, however, this amount has passed out of the hands or control of this officer, he should be required to report what disposition has been made of it, so that if possible it may be reached in specie and paid to the claimant.

Now, I find no statement in this report as to whether this money was found in the possession of General Ross, or what disposition was made of it—whether it was paid into the Treasury or not; and there is no explanation as to the reason the claimant did not go into the Court of Claims, as he had the right to do under the law.

Mr. STORM. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JONES] who made the report in this case I do not see in the House. I know that gentleman is careful in all his reports, and that this was carefully considered by him. It was also considered in the whole committee, and I know that it was the unanimous report of the committee. If the gentleman from Wisconsin were here he would be able to answer the question of the gentleman from Indiana fully.

Mr. GEDDES. Mr. Chairman, I have a distinct recollection of what occurred while this report was submitted to the committee, and it agrees with the views as set forth in this report. I think that on careful examination there will be found in it a full and complete answer to the questions submitted by the gentleman from Indiana. If he will refer to the early part of the report he will find that it is there disclosed that this money was not exactly turned into the Treasury of the United States. It was, however, used by the officers of the Army in the payment of legitimate expenses of the Army and was accounted for by them to the War Department, and so found by Judge-Advocate-General Holt in the investigation he gave to it. It is there stated in the early part of the report, to which I invite the attention of the gentleman from Indiana, that "it was sold by the military authorities, realizing upon the same $4,400 gold, which money was appropriated to payment of vouchers and receipt rolls in the Army, and consequently was not paid into the 'captured and abandoned fund' in the Treasury."

The proof seems clear and abundant that the Government had the benefit of the property and of the fund.

Mr. HOLMAN. From the connection between the paragraph read by the gentleman from Ohio and the closing paragraph of Judge-Advocate-General Holt's report the statement is clear so far as the report goes. It states:

As this cotton was seized in 1862, several months prior to the act of March 12, 1863, requiring all such property to be turned over to agents of the Treasury specially appointed for that purpose, it was sold by the military authorities, realizing upon the same $4,400 gold, which money was appropriated to payment of vouchers and receipt rolls in the Army, and consequently was not paid into the "captured and abandoned fund" in the Treasury.

That is as my friend from Ohio has read it; but he overlooks the fact that Judge-Advocate-General Holt, to whom this subject was referred by a special order of the President, speaks as follows:

If, however, this amount has passed out of the hands or control of this officer, he should be required to report what disposition has been made of it, so that if possible it may be reached in specie and paid to the claimant.

I had the honor to serve with my friend from Ohio on the Committee on War Claims, and I take it for granted the fact was ascertained from the War Department what disposition had been made of this money. My friend will bear in mind that under the law allowing these claimants to go to the Court of Claims a fund was accumulated in the Treasury for their benefit—regarded as a fund held in trust for the benefit of loyal claimants—it will be remembered, I say, that no instance had occurred where there was deliberation on the subject where money has been paid out of this fund unless by proof the fact had been established that the money had been legitimately used for the use of the Army. General Holt naturally suggests that if this money was used for some legitimate purpose it is the same as if paid into the Treasury in trust for these claimants, and if used for a legitimate purpose that fact can be shown. But I find that this report unhappily and entirely evades that question as to whether the proceeds of the sale of this cotton were ever accounted for.

Now my friend will remember also that the committee of which he is chairman at the last session of Congress decided where a party had a right to go into court and establish his claim and failed to do so, that after having an opportunity to have his day in court he could not come before Congress. How did it happen that this claimant, who if the money went into the Treasury or was properly used for Government purposes and he is clearly entitled to it—how does it happen he did not go into the Court of Claims?

Mr. YOUNG. I can answer that question.

Mr. GEDDES. A moment's reflection will satisfy the gentleman from Indiana that he is falling into an error in the investigation of this report. He must notice that the investigation of Judge-Advocate-General Holt was December 24, 1863, and the members of the committee making this report embodied in full this report of Judge-Advocate-General Holt, which concludes as has been correctly read by the gentleman from Indiana. But it must also be remembered that now, in 1881, twenty-one years thereafter, this investigation is made by the committee based not only upon the report of Judge-Advocate-General Holt, but by other proof in the War Department bearing on this question; and in view of the proof, it is said, it is now found, twenty long years after the investigation of Judge-Advocate-General Holt—it is now known that this money was used in the legitimate expenses of the Army as the reason for not turning it into the Treasury.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the turning point of the claim. Was the money accounted for? If it were accounted for the official document will show the fact, and that official document is among these papers. And that would make this in the nature of a trust fund, to be held by the Government for the benefit of the party, and an obligation which the Government ought to pay. But the question is, do the papers in this case show that it was accounted for to the Government by these officers, or was it an act of spoliation committed for their own private benefit? That is the point.

Mr. STORM. The returns to the Quartermaster's Department show the use that was made of it.

Mr. GEDDES. I understand the gentleman from Indiana, and agree with him fully in reference to the general principle involved. I would require the proof to come up to the standard he suggests. But I understand this report made to our committee by the subcommittee does meet the very question, and evades or seeks to evade it in no way whatever. It meets the question in a distinct and unequivocal manner.

Again, I repeat from the report that—

In 1884 it is found that this money was used in the payment of vouchers and of receipt-rolls in the Army, and consequently was not turned into the Treasury.

Now if the proofs show that the money was thus applied to the benefit of the Government directly, as this report to the subcommittee and adopted by the full committee declares, then I think we are abundantly justified in submitting the report and asking its adoption by this committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now as to the other point. Why did not the party go into the Court of Claims?

Mr. GEDDES. I am not prepared now to answer that question.

Mr. YOUNG. I can give the gentleman the information.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend will remember very distinctly that the last Committee on War Claims made it a rule of that committee that where a party had a right to go to the Court of Claims under the law and failed to do so the excuse should be abundantly set forth.

Mr. GEDDES. That is a rule of the committee now.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, I know the gentleman, the claimant in this case, very well. He lives in one of the counties of my district, some twenty-five or thirty miles from my home, in an interior county. He is a gentleman of high standing and character where he lives, not very well acquainted with public affairs or public laws, and at the time that the law was enacted permitting him and claimants of this character to prefer their claims before the Southern Claims Commission there was not, perhaps, one man in a hundred in the locality where he lived that ever heard of the law or was aware of its existence. Outside of the city of Memphis, the newspaper center of the district, I undertake to say that for five years after the termination of the war there were not one hundred men living in that district who were fully acquainted with their legal rights or who ever heard of the existence of the Southern Claims Commission.

This bill was presented to Congress, I believe, more than twelve years ago, and this applicant has been knocking at the doors of Congress ever since in utter ignorance, I have no doubt, that he had any other remedy than to present the claim here and obtain action upon it through the legislative branch of the Government.

In answer to some other objections urged by the gentleman from Indiana I desire to say a word. I wish to submit to him as a lawyer that he would lay down the proposition that this man is to be deprived of his clear legal rights because he is not able to prove when, how, and exactly the manner and time in which this money was paid into the Treasury of the United States. The gentleman from Indiana would submit that principle for our guidance; and I ask him upon what principle of right or justice or upon what legal grounds he could deprive this man of his right because it was not in his power to direct how the Government of the United States should dispose of the proceeds of his property? It is shown by the proof set up in the report made by the Committee on Claims that his property was disposed of by an officer of the Government of the United States, that its proceeds were applied to the use and benefit of the Government, and now is he to be deprived of the proceeds of his property because it was not paid by that officer into the Treasury of the United States, instead of being legitimately and properly used for the benefit of the Government in another way?

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee allow me?

Mr. YOUNG. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am conceding, the gentleman will perceive, that this class of claims rests entirely upon the assumption that the Government of the United States is the trustee for the fund that went into the Treasury, and I concede also that if the Government, through its legitimate officers, applied the money to a legitimate purpose of the Government—if, indeed, it was an appropriation of private property to a public use, instead of an act of military spoliation—that then the Government would properly be liable to refund the money, although it had not been turned into the Treasury and accounted for in the usual way. But here we find set forth at length, and very properly, in the report of this committee, the report of Judge Holt on the same subject. Now, the other fact that this money was used for another purpose appears with some degree of certainty; but I ask the committee where is the proof on which they base their findings? There must be vouchers or papers somewhere to show for it.

Mr. YOUNG. I ask the gentleman from Indiana if he expects the committees of this House—the Committee on Claims, or any other committee—to publish all the proof upon which they base their conclusions? Is not a committee of this House to be trusted when it asserts in its reports that from all the testimony in the case it has reached such and such conclusions?

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not the gentleman know that the determination of this class of cases has always turned upon the question whether they were acts of spoliation appropriated to the use of the officer committing the act or the seizure of private property for the use of the Government?

Mr. YOUNG. The gentleman stated that he was acquainted with the position of the gentleman from Ohio, the chairman of the Committee on Claims, upon that question; that he had decided at the last Congress that if it was an act of spoliation or robbery, that this Government was not responsible for it. Now, the gentleman from Ohio comes in here with a report of the chairman of the committee and defends that report, which shows that the claim is a just one and ought to be paid.

Now, I think the question as to whether or not this was an act of spoliation or an act of lawful warfare is set at rest by the report of this committee and the indorsement by its distinguished chairman. This committee could not be expected to set out in detail all the testimony on which they base the conclusion embraced in their report. For aught we know, and the presumption is that way from the high character of the gentlemen who compose the committee, from its distinguished chairman down, the presumption is a fair and reasonable one that all the testimony necessary to establish the justice and legality of this claim was before that committee and they acted upon that testimony. And I confess I can see nothing in the objections of the gentleman from Indiana to influence the judgment of this House against declaring this claim a just and valid one, which ought to be paid.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not disposed to prolong this discussion, and regret exceedingly the gentleman who made the report [Mr. JONES, of Wisconsin] is not present.

Mr. STORM. He is here now.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend from Wisconsin, then, will be able to explain the two questions I have asked: First, by what evidence does it appear that the proceeds of this cotton were applied to the use of the Government? And, secondly, how is it explained that while this claimant was clearly entitled, on Judge Holt's statement, to go into the Court of Claims and have this money paid out of the fund which had accumulated, how does it happen he did not go there?

Mr. JONES, of Wisconsin. This report was made early in the last session. Since that time in the multiplicity of other bills and reports which have been before us I confess some of the facts of this claim are not now fresh in my mind. I did not suppose it was to be brought up to-day, or I would have re-examined the evidence. I am certain, however, of the main facts which influenced our action. There is no doubt but that the property was taken by the Federal troops. It was sold at auction and paid for in cash. The money received was paid over to one of the Army quartermasters, and by him used in the necessary expenses of the Army.

The claimant promptly laid his claim before the authorities for compensation. I believe this was in 1863. He has diligently pressed it from that day to this. It obtained at that time the sanction of Judge-Advocate Holt, who examined the facts and recommended its payment. The claim was sent from one Department to another. Although favorably recommended by the War Department, it was not allowed, for the reason, as claimant was notified, that no appropriation had been made from which it could be paid even if allowed.

The claim remained before the Departments, War and Treasury, for several years. It was never rejected on the merits. The Secretary of the Treasury decided when it came to that Department that he had not jurisdiction under the statute providing for the payment of captured property.

The claim remained before the Departments until it could no longer be pressed there owing to the act of 1867, which suspended further action upon such claims.

After the claimant was notified by the Treasury and War Departments that he could only find relief in Congress, he brought his claim here, and has ever since been seeking redress.

The loyalty of the claimant was clearly proved.

The taking of the property was beyond all doubt. Our committee were of the opinion that the claimant is clearly entitled to the relief he seeks.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this claim be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House, as the gentlemen having charge of the measure think it proper that that should be done; but if on examination of these papers again by my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. JONES]—and it requires some experience to be familiar with all the legislation touching this class of claims—if upon further examination of the papers there is found to be a lack of sufficient evidence showing this property went to the use of the Government instead of being a spoliation on the part of an officer, for which we are not to assume responsibility, that in that event the case be opened up again and recommitted to the committee.

Mr. JONES, of Wisconsin. I am satisfied with that.

Mr. HOLMAN. With that understanding I have no objection to the bill being laid aside to be reported favorably.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have been requested by the gentleman making the report in the next case [Mr. ROGERS, of New York] to ask that it be passed over informally.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 2204) to provide for the payment of the claim of Joseph R. Shannon, reported with an adverse recommendation by the Committee on War Claims, was passed over informally.

A. GATES LEE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4687) for the relief of A. Gates Lee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be investigated by the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army the alleged use, occupation, and damage by the United States authorities, for the use of the United States troops, during the late war, of a certain mill property situated in McCracken County, in the State of Kentucky, alleged to have been the property of A. Gates Lee; such investigation to extend to the title of the property, the status of the owner, whether loyal or not, the value of the property destroyed, the actual rental value of the property for the time it was occupied by the United States troops, the amount of damage arising from the appropriation of material to the use of the Army; and when such investigation shall be completed the Secretary of War shall report the result thereof, with his recommendation thereon, to Congress for action in the premises.

Mr. ROWELL. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think this class of claims should go to the Court of Claims under the Bowman act.

Mr. ROWELL. Will the gentleman from Indiana let the report be read?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to that. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. ROWELL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 640) for the relief of A. Gates Lee, of McCracken County, Kentucky, have had the same under consideration, and report as follows:

The evidence in the case shows that claimant and his brother, B. P. Lee, were in 1861 partners and owners of a large flouring-mill at Paducah, Ky.; that they were both loyal to the Government of the United States, and suffered pecuniary loss for their loyalty; that B. P. Lee died in 1864, leaving A. Gates Lee his surviving partner.

In September, 1861, the military authorities of the United States took possession of their mill, and used it for officers' quarters, quartermasters' stores, and for barracks for soldiers; that the property was occupied by various regiments most of the time for something over two years.

The evidence further shows that in addition to its use the property was badly damaged, not only by having its machinery torn out and destroyed, but by having the weather-boarding torn off and floors taken up, so that at the time it ceased to be occupied it was of very little value as a flouring-mill.

Lieutenant Wilson appointed a commission of citizens of Paducah to appraise the damage to this property, and this commission returned an estimate of $11,875, this covering not the rental value, but the damage to the mill property.

The claim was presented to the Quartermaster's Department and rejected, because there was no legal authority to pay this kind of claim. An offer of $25 per month was made as rent, the claimant being advised that his remedy was an appeal to Congress. The claim was also presented to the claims commission of the War Department, but was never acted upon.

Your committee are of opinion that it would be a bad precedent to pay for wanton destruction of property by soldiers without orders from competent authority, and, while the case under consideration is one of great hardship, we are not prepared to recommend its payment. We are, however, of opinion that the matter ought to be investigated by the War Department, with a view to ascertain the actual rental value of the property for the time it was occupied, and also the amount of damage arising from the appropriation of material to the use of the Army under proper orders, and not attributable to mere wantonness. We therefore present the accompanying bill as a substitute for the bill under consideration and recommend its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to the gentleman making this report that this claim ought not to go to the War Department for examination, for the reason that, conceding, as of course I do from what is set forth in the report, the loyalty of the claimant, the other facts presented are expressly excluded from consideration by the terms of our legislation. Where it is alleged that there has been a wanton destruction of property at the seat of war, or even that at the seat of war property was injured while occupied by Federal troops, a reference to the War Department is the most expensive method of determining cases of that kind that can be adopted. Where the claim is referred to the Court of Claims the claimant prepares his own proof and submits it. But where you refer it to the War Department, of course it goes to the Quartermaster-General, and an agent has to be sent to visit the region of country where the claim arose for the purpose of making an examination and taking proof, and if my friend from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] will look and see the large sums of money that we have paid out every year for the examination of claims already referred, I think he will hesitate to send any claim to the War Department unless it be one in which a military examination would be peculiarly proper and necessary. This does not appear to be such a case. It seems to be simply one of the large classes of claims which are arising all the time and of which great numbers have already been referred to the Court of Claims. I have no sort of objection to its reference to the Court of Claims, because that will not necessitate any material expense, but, as I have said, a reference to the War Department is always very expensive, and upon the face of the report this does not seem to be a case to justify such a reference.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will examine the Bowman act, which authorizes certain classes of cases to go to the Court of Claims, he will find that this case would go there simply to come back without any adjudication, because it belongs to a class of cases that can not be sent to the Court of Claims under that act. This bill provides certain limitations to avoid any investigation as to damages growing out of the wantonness of the soldiers.

This mill property was situated at Paducah, Ky., and was owned by men of intense loyalty—men who for their loyalty suffered not only the loss of fortune, but also a great deal of persecution. They owned this large flouring-mill at Paducah. It was taken possession of by the Government and was occupied as a barrack for the space of two years by officers and soldiers of the United States. The owners were offered a certain rental, which they refused to take. Subsequently they have been pressing their claim constantly; or at least the living representave of the firm has been pressing the claim, both before the Departments of the Government and in Congress.

This bill provides that the War Department shall investigate the question of occupancy, the length of that occupancy, the rental value of the property, and the value of any material taken by the Government for the use of the Army, but excludes from the investigation and computation any damages. Now, the larger part of the injury for which Mr. Lee claims compensation, under the proof submitted to our committee, is for damage, wanton damage as I take it—at least of that kind that ought to be investigated by the agent of the War Department—and it is not a case of the kind that can be properly investigated by the Court of Claims. It seems to be a meritorious case for investigation and ascertainment of the facts, and for that reason we presented this bill instead of attempting to make the investigation ourselves.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. Suppose the War Department makes this investigation and reports that this property was damaged to the extent of $11,000, or any other sum, by the wanton acts of the soldiers, does the gentleman say that Congress is to appropriate money to pay those damages?

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, I certainly do not say anything of the kind; and this bill does not authorize the Department to report anything of that kind. It expressly excludes all compensation for wanton damage.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then what does it include?

Mr. ROWELL. It includes the rental value of the mill property for the time it was occupied by the United States forces and the value of such property as was legitimately or properly taken for the use of the Army.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now will my friend allow me this further question: Does he think the Government can enter upon the policy of paying rent for property used at the seat of war? If that is to be the policy, a field unexampled in its magnitude is opened up. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on War Claims [Mr. GEDDES] to this question, whether such claims for rent of property used by the United States at the seat of war should be brought within the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims? If the Government is to be responsible for all property occupied on its behalf at the scene of hostilities during the late war, the rule should be of universal application. There should not be a bill here and there taken up and compensation made only in particular cases; all the people of that section of the country should be treated alike. Yet you have not done so up to this time.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not know of any rule of justice which would authorize the Government of the United States to take possession of and occupy the property of a loyal citizen without making compensation to him; and I do not care whether claims of this character are few or many. Ordinarily during the first years of the war, when property was taken possession of in Kentucky, at Paducah and Louisville, and later in Tennessee, if such property was owned by loyal citizens, rent was paid for it by the Quartermaster's Department. There are here and there cases where rent was not paid. In this case the Quartermaster's Department offered to pay rent for this very property; but because of the damage resulting from the use of the property, because of the ruin of this mill, the owner was not willing to take as rental the amount which the Quartermaster's Department determined the property was worth for barracks. He insisted upon a rental value for the property as a mill.

This is one of the cases where a loyal man lost the use of his property and the Government enjoyed its use. All through that country from 1861 to 1865 such men did receive rent for their property. This man did not; and I do not care whether there be one such claim or a thousand, if the case presents the incidents of loyalty on the part of the owner of the property and occupancy of it by the Government, it is simple robbery if the Government does pay such claims when properly proven.

Mr. HOLMAN. Would my friend modify this provision of the Bowman act?

The jurisdiction of said court shall not extend to or include any claim against the United States growing out of the destruction or damage to property by the Army or Navy during the war for the suppression of the rebellion, or for the use and occupation of real estate by any part of the military or naval forces of the United States in the operation of said forces during the said war at the seat of war.

Would my friend modify that provision?

Mr. ROWELL. But a little while ago the gentleman from Indiana was insisting that he was perfectly willing claims of this character might be referred to the Court of Claims under the Bowman act, knowing that in this very act was a prohibition against the Court of Claims considering such cases; so that the submission of the matter to that court under the Bowman act would be a useless proceeding. In answer to the gentleman, I say I would be willing to modify in this respect the Bowman act; but, inasmuch as it has not been modified, I am in favor all the time of reporting such meritorious cases as this for action by Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, Mr. Chairman, this question is now before us in an unusually clear light. The provisions of the act of the last Congress expressly exclude this class of claims from consideration by the Court of Claims; and I now submit to the chairman of the Committee on War Claims, as representing this large body of claims, whether it should be the policy of Congress or of that committee to abandon that limitation, and open up this class of claims for consideration by that court. If so, I submit to him that this restriction upon the Court of Claims should be repealed; and all the people of the section of the country where these claims have arisen should be put upon one common basis. There are hundreds of thousands of cases of this kind which have arisen all over the South—tens of thousands, no doubt, in the single State of Kentucky. There is scarcely a county in that State where cases of this kind did not occur.

Now, if investigations of this kind are to be had, the investigation must amount to something; something must result; it can not be that a report of the facts should be called for, if, when reported, however strongly, the facts are not to justify an appropriation of public money. If the purpose is to change the rule heretofore adopted, I think it ought to be changed as to all cases of this class; we should not take up a single case here and there and make it an exception to the general policy.

There does not appear to be anything in this claim which should distinguish it from countless other cases which have occurred all over that section of the country which was the seat of the late war. For one, I regret to see the expenses of the Quartermaster's Department constantly swollen by references of these matters to it, when another tribunal, the Court of Claims, has been invested with the very limit of the jurisdiction which Congress has been willing to confer in regard to the adjustment of these claims.

My friend from Illinois is right in saying that under the Bowman act this claim can not even be considered by that court, because up to this time the policy has not been to allow adjudications by that tribunal where either spoliations or rents at the seat of war are to be taken into account.

Mr. GEDDES. Mr. Chairman, as the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] were largely addressed directly to me, I ought perhaps to express my own conviction in regard to this class of claims. Personally, I would not consent to enlarge the provisions of the Bowman act; I am disposed to adhere to those provisions. But there will arise exceptional cases where the occupancy of real estate at the seat of war is not temporary, where the occupancy is of a nature to give rise to an implied contract for payment for the use and occupation of the property. Where a citizen admittedly loyal has his real estate taken possession of and used for a considerable period of time by the Government, I think a distinction may be occasionally made in such a case from occupancy, temporary in its nature, at the seat of war and in the progress of hostilities.

The spirit and purpose of the act referred to is to exclude that class of claims, and I am willing to adhere to the letter and spirit of the law.

Mr. HOLMAN. Pernfit me to inquire of my friend, does he not recollect the Memphis claim and numerous other claims, that of Judge Eyres and others, where the question has been alone presented, the loyalty of the man being admitted—the question has alone been presented whether or not even occupation for years at the seat of war would justify Congress in appropriating money for the occupation of property or not? Were not the cases of Judge Eyres and others considered before this committee for a number of years?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us have a vote on the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

BARRINGTON BEHYMER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1265) for the relief of Barrington Behymer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to Barrington Behymer, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $547.90, with 6 per cent. interest thereon from October 27, 1874, to date of payment, being the difference between the pay and allowances of a sergeant-major of cavalry and the pay and allowances of a second lieutenant of cavalry, from March 10, 1864, to October 10, 1864, he having been commissioned and served and performed the duties as second lieutenant in the Fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry during that period, but not having been mustered as such second lieutenant.

The report (by Mr. ROWELL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1265) for the relief of Barrington Behymer, have had the same under advisement, and make the following report:

The claim in this case is stated at $547.90, being for the difference between the pay of sergeant-major and second lieutenant of cavalry from March 10, 1864, to October 10, 1864. Claimant was, on March 1, 1864, commissioned by the governor of Ohio a second lieutenant in the Fifth Ohio Cavalry. The captain of Company L was, at the same time, commissioned major, the first lieutenant commissioned captain, making the vacancy to which claimant was commissioned. At the time these commissions were issued, the Fifth Cavalry was not entitled to the majorship to which the captain of Company L was commissioned, owing to the numbers of the regiment; consequently there was no vacancy of a second lieutenancy, to which claimant was commissioned, and he was refused muster, and thereafter continued to draw pay as sergeant-major till the expiration of his term of service. He was assigned to duty as second lieutenant, as were the other officers above named to the rank to which they were commissioned, and all continued to do duty in the rank as assigned.

Your committee are of opinion that it would be a bad precedent to commence paying this kind of claims. In 1864, owing to their diminished numbers, a large number of regiments were in the same position as the Fifth Ohio Cavalry—not entitled to a full complement of officers. A commission by the governor of a State, under such circumstances, should not give a party any right to pay from the General Government.

As regards the duty in a higher rank, it is not uncommon in the Army for an officer to discharge the duties of a higher rank, and if we were now to commence paying every officer according to the position held at different times, it would take a very large sum of money to liquidate all the claims that would be presented.

The usages of the Army and Army Regulations are against the allowance of such claims, and we therefore recommend that the bill do not pass.

Mr. ROWELL. I move that the enacting clause of the bill be stricken out.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM CLIFT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4688) for the relief of William Clift.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William Clift, of Hamilton County, Tennessee, the sum of $3,000, for wood taken and used by the Army of the United States during the late war.

The report (by Mr. STORM) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the petition of William Clift, of Hamilton County, Tennessee, asking for compensation for timber and wood, stated at $19,645, makes the following report:

The facts in the case are as follows: In 1863 the claimant and one William Stringer were the owners in common of certain lands lying on the north side of the Tennessee River, in Hamilton County, Tennessee, containing about 5,000 acres. It was covered with timber, principally oak, when, in the fall of 1863, the United States Army advanced and took possession of this section of the country. From that time until the close of the war details were almost constantly employed on the land cutting the timber and hauling it away for the several uses of the Army. The Government erected a saw-mill near this land, and a great deal of the timber was sawed on that mill. The timber was used in the construction of bridges, storehouses, and other Army buildings. The greater part, however, was taken for fuel for the use of the Army. Some tracts were entirely cut off, some culled, and some untouched.

The claim was investigated by Lieut. Col. J. A. Ekin, chief of quartermaster's department of the South, through his agents, Dougherty and Woodburn, who took a large amount of testimony, and made a very full report. Army officers, as well as private citizens, testified to the intense loyalty of the claimant. He suffered greatly in his person and property on account of his devotion to the cause of the Union. There is no doubt but the timber was taken by the United States Army and used by it. United States officers testify to this. The value of the timber was the only thing in dispute.

These agents, after much time spent in investigating this claim, recommended paying claimant for 12,030 cords of wood, at 75 cents per cord, amounting to $9,022.50. Colonel Ekin, in making his return of the claim in November, 1875, also recommended the payment of the same amount. In August, 1876, the Quartermaster-General gave direction to report this and six other cases, mainly for timber taken from lands in the vicinity of Chattanooga, Tenn., on the basis of the settlement made in the Abner C. Carroll cases, referred to the Treasurer March 6, 1871. In that case the timber was considered as constituting one-half of the value of the land. On that basis claimant's demand was reduced to $3,435.23.

The Quartermaster-General's Department was not satisfied with this. Joseph Livsey was appointed agent by the Quartermaster's Department, and in October, 1876, commenced taking depositions to show the value from the assessment of lands in that county, and by showing its value before and after the war.

The witnesses differed greatly in value, some swearing the assessment was no criterion of value, that lands were assessed sometimes at only one-half, and sometimes one-fourth their actual value; that this tract was only valuable for its timber, the land being what is termed "ridge land."

On looking over all the testimony in the case, the committee believe that the claimant should be allowed the sum of $3,000, which is $435.23 less than any of the Government agents found. The only reason given by the War Department for its rejection was that the claimant made his demand so high ($19,545) that it was fraudulent on its face. This might be a good rule to follow in some cases in order to discourage the presentment of dishonest claims, as, for instance, where a man claimed for four horses taken and used by the Government when he had only two. He must have known his claim was fraudulent.

But the claim in this case rested purely on the opinion of witnesses, and widely different results would be attained according to the basis upon which the estimate was made. When the number of cords was the basis (and who will say that was fraudulent?) a much larger result was reached. When the assessment was taken as a basis and a comparison with other tracts similarly located a smaller amount was found to be due, and when we consider that these statements are usually prepared by lawyers or claim agents, who always insert the largest amounts, knowing always that they can recover less than they claim but can never recover more, the claimant should not in this case be regarded as presenting a fraudulent claim.

He is now about eighty-five years of age, has suffered much for his country, and the sum now allowed ($3,000) ought to be paid, and the committee report favorably that sum, and recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me inquire whether this claim, admitting the loyalty of the claimant, was not cognizable before the Southern Claims Commission? If so, I should like to ask whether this claimant appeared before that commission; if he did not, what explanation has the gentleman from Pennsylvania to give why he did not? I understood the rule of the Committee on War Claims to be that if a party had a tribunal open to him and failed to avail himself of it he could not come afterward to Congress for relief. I wish therefore my friend could explain why it happened that he did not go before that commission, and also whether the position taken by the War Department is not a sound one.

Mr. STORM. Mr. Chairman, the War Claims Committee, of which I have the honor to be a member, has adopted a rule that where a tribunal was invested with the power of hearing cases before it their judgment should be final. Now the proper tribunal for this case was not the Claims Commission, but the Quartermaster-General's Department. The claim was for fuel taken for the use of the Army, and consequently that department of the Government had jurisdiction of it and investigated it.

I desire to say here now for the benefit of the gentleman from Indiana, who generally complains that these claims come here supported by an ex parte affidavit of the claimant and such witnesses as he may call to support his claim, that this was investigated by the Quartermaster-General's Department through agents sent out there for the purpose of examining witnesses. All the testimony in this case was taken by Colonel Ekin through agents sent there by the Quartermaster-General's Department for the purpose of investigating the claim to the very bottom.

Mr. HOLMAN. Special agents?

Mr. STORM. Yes; by special agents. They investigated the claim and examined such witnesses as they chose to call, not calling them with a view to supporting the claim, but with a view to defeating it. And the Quartermaster's Department took the strangest position ever heard of in a case of this kind. They disallowed an admitted portion of an honest claim because the claimant made his demand for a larger sum than the investigation showed he was entitled to. That is the ground upon which the Quartermaster-General's Department, having jurisdiction of this claim, rejected it. I will admit, as the report states, that if a man having a certain number of horses and cattle, knowing how many he had—say he had four, and must have known he had four—should have presented a claim for eight, it would have been so notoriously a fraud, that if he should lose the claim for four horses, the number he honestly lost, it would have been serving him right for having presented a claim for double the number when he knew he did not have them. But what is the disparity in this case due to? From what did it arise? It arose from the different bases upon which the parties estimated the value of this wood.

There was no dispute as to the fact that this man was the owner of a tract of 5,000 acres of land; that the Army was encamped in the neighborhood of that property for the period of a year or more; that they built a saw-mill and manufactured lumber and built bridges and storehouses and that they used it for fuel for the Army, and that this was continued for a year or two. All of these facts are admitted. That this wood was taken has been proven by the testimony of twenty-five or thirty witnesses, all of whom testify that it was taken from this tract of land, and Colonel Ekin found through his agents that 12,030 cords of wood had been used in this manner, which at an estimate of 75 cents a cord reached a total sum of $9,022.50.

The Quartermaster's Department was, however, dissatisfied with this adjudication and said it was not correct. They sent it back and directed another investigation upon the basis of the settlement made in the case of Abner C. Carroll. That was done in March, 1871, and upon that basis, which ignored entirely the value of the property as cordwood, they found the sum due to this claimant to be $3,435.25. There is no dispute about that. The Quartermaster's Department was still dissatisfied with this award, and then had another investigation for the purpose of ascertaining the value of this cordwood upon the basis of the assessed value of certain tracts of land in that part of the county; and even that investigation resulted in a larger amount in favor of the claimant than what the committee recommended in the bill which is now pending before this committee.

Now, all these investigations were carried on by the Quartermaster's Department of the Government, which was seeking to defeat this man's recovery of any sum; and we have allowed a sum lower than any of the investigations that department set on foot to ascertain the amount or value of the property. The committee have recommended a bill for this man's relief awarding a specific amount in full of the claim. It has been in existence for some twenty-five years, and we have allowed no interest on the claim, but have reported, in order that it may be set at rest forever, that the claimant be allowed the sum of $3,000 in full.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. How much is that a cord for the wood?

Mr. STORM. It is less than 25 cents a cord for it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not see any reason why the Departments of this Government and their integrity should be necessarily assailed in almost all of the claims that come before Congress. Now, the Quartermaster's Department of this Government under the control of General Meigs was certainly as safe a tribunal for the adjudication of claims growing out of quartermasters' supplies as the Congress of the United States. It is a tribunal which approaches much more nearly a court than Congress can. The agents who investigated this matter for the Quartermaster's Department, under the control of Colonel Ekin, went to the ground, and investigated the claim on the spot and took testimony as to its character. We have not been honored with any portion of the report made by those agents. I have no doubt, however, that it was voluminous and could not have been very well incorporated into the report of the committee.

Mr. STORM. It is quite voluminous.

Mr. HOLMAN. But after this thorough investigation, made a second time, and the claim is rejected by the Department, it comes to Congress for its consideration.

Mr. LONG. Rejected on what grounds?

Mr. STORM. On the ground that it was fraudulent.

Mr. DIBRELL. It was rejected by the Department on the ground that the wood was charged at too high a rate. This claim was made out immediately after the war, and the Department was charged for the wood at the war prices then prevailing. Now the committee have brought in their report and allow less than one-sixth of the amount asked for, which amount was the value of the property at the time it was taken. The claim was made out immediately after the war, and the wood was charged for at the rate of $1.50 a cord, while the committee have brought in their bill, which reduces the amount to less than 25 cents a cord.

Mr. HOLMAN. When was this claim first presented to the War Department?

Mr. STORM. Shortly after the war. The price was then fixed at $1.50 per cord, being the prevailing price, and the Quartermaster-General was dissatisfied with it and said that it was a fraud upon its face. Afterward upon investigation the price was fixed at 75 cents a cord by his own agents, and still they say that is too much. Now the committee recommend as a final settlement of the claim the sum of $3,000, which, as has been said, is less than 25 cents a cord.

Mr. HOLMAN. In reference to the adjudication of claims by the Quartermaster's Department it is proper to say that here is as near a court of justice as the Government can provide for the adjudication of this class of claims, unless they are permitted to go into the courts. Now, what possible motive could this public officer have had for defeating this claim as alleged?

Mr. DIBRELL. The agents of the Quartermaster's Department have all recommended the payment, but the Quartermaster-General refused, for the reason that the wood was charged for at what he regarded as a fraudulent price, being the price prevailing at the time it was taken.

Mr. HOLMAN. That was General Meigs?

Mr. DIBRELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not recall any one of the officers of this Government whose integrity and impartiality has been more thoroughly recognized through his long career in that very important department, especially during the war, than General Meigs; and he certainly understood this matter and the investigation that has been made.

Mr. DIBRELL. There was not a man of stronger prejudices in the Army.

Mr. HOLMAN. And certainly General Meigs and his department were as competent for the consideration of this claim as Congress or the committees of Congress, which, from the necessities of the case, must act hastily, and with brief time, for that full and competent consideration of claims which would give to the investigation a judicial character.

Mr. STORM. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me continue for a moment.

And again, the committee of which the gentleman is an honored member has heretofore adopted, as I have understood, the rule that when the claim had been submitted to a proper tribunal, a court or any other tribunal competent to adjudicate it, the party having had his day in court, it was more reasonable certainly that justice was done than would be the result if Congress took the matter up without any regard to the action of the proper tribunal, and acted upon it itself on the spur of the moment.

A person with no means, no resources to prosecute the claim, submits to the adverse decision, and there is an end to it. But a party with proper influence keeps the matter before Congress from time to time until in the course of years the decision of the proper tribunal is overruled in this hasty manner almost without consideration, because it is well known we can not give these matters much consideration.

Mr. STORM. We have all the testimony before us that the Quartermaster had. We have the full report of Colonel Ekin, who took the testimony for several days, and it is quite voluminous. We have his conclusion, which is simply this: This claimant made a claim for $19,000. The agents said, "We find $3,425 to be due;" and the Quartermaster says, "I will not allow that, because you made your claim for $19,000." Does the gentleman from Indiana think that was just? If it should be the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States, would it be right? That is the question. I agree in the compliment he pays to the high character of the Quartermaster. But here we have facts to act upon on our own consciences and oaths. We have the fact undisputed that the Government got this man's wood to the full amount he claims. But the Quartermaster says, "I will not allow what is reported by the agents who investigated the claim, because you made your claim for $1.50 per cord and the agents only allow 25 cents." All the objection to the man's claim is that in the first instance he made it too high.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would rather rely as to justice both to the Government and to the claimant upon the deliberate decision of an officer who for years had been engaged in investigating this class of claims, an officer who has not only shown himself to be impartial but who is known to be thoroughly competent—I would rather rely upon his judgment deliberately formed than on my own hastily formed.

Mr. STORM. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

PATRICK COOK.

The next business on the Private Calender was the bill (H. R. 1739) for the relief of Patrick Cook.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Patrick Cook, a resident of the District of Columbia, the sum of $1,500, such sum being the amount awarded him by the late board of audit for and on account of damages to his real estate in the city of Washington. That one-half of said sum shall be chargeable to the revenue derived from taxation within the District of Columbia

The report (by Mr. GUENTHER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the petition of Patrick Cook for relief for damages to property as assessed by experts of board of audit, District of Columbia, submit the following report:

The committee, after examination, find that on the 20th of January, 1875, Patrick Cook filed before the board of audit a claim for damages to certain lots belonging to him in the city of Washington, in square No. 24, said damages occasioned by public improvements in excavating Twenty-fourth street northwest, between M and N streets; and on the 3d of August, 1875, the board of audit, after inspection, awarded to said Patrick Cook the sum of $1,500, that sum being the one-half of the amount claimed by him in his said petition. The said sum of $1,500 was, however, not paid to the said Patrick Cook, for the reason that the board of audit was legislated out of existence before they had prepared and issued to him the necessary certificate; and thus the claim now stands. Your committee think that he should be paid the $1,500 adjudged by the board of audit as due to him, and to that end report the accompanying bill, with recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BAGLEY took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, returned to the House of Representatives, in accordance with its request, the bill (H. R. 691) for the relief of William M. Thomas.

The message further announced that the Senate agreed to the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives directing the Clerk of the House of Representatives, in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 1017) relative to the Inspector General's Department of the Army, to change the word "hereafter" in said bill to the word "thereafter."

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the House with regard to the count of the electoral vote for President and Vice-President, with an amendment; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

WILLIAM FRANKLIN GROUNDS.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The next business on the Private Calender was the bill (H. R. 1672) for the relief of William Franklin Grounds; reported with an amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to William Franklin Grounds, of Arizona Territory, the sum of $19,157, in payment in full for three hundred and fifty-six beef cattle, one hundred and six cows, and seven horses taken from him by the Hualapai Indians, and used by them for their subsistence, while temporarily absent from their reservation between the 1st day of February, 1874, and the 31st day of March, 1874.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out "$19,157" and insert in lieu thereof "$13,129."

The Clerk read in part the report (by Mr. NELSON), which in full is as follows:

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted the following report (to accompany bill H. R. 1672):

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1672) for the relief William Franklin Grounds, have duly considered the same, and submit the following report:

From the proofs and official records it appears that the Hualapai tribe of Indians, numbering about six hundred, between the 1st day of February and the 1st day of April of the year 1874, left their reservation in Mohave County, Arizona Territory, and wrongfully strayed off into the region where Mr. Grounds had his cattle ranch, and while there and in the vicinity they killed, ran off, and destroyed one hundred and six cows, two hundred and fifty head of other cattle, and seven head of horses, the property of said William F. Grounds.

These cows were at that time worth not less than $35 per head. Of the other cattle there were ninety-two head two-year old steers, of the average weight of five hundred pounds per head; also twenty-nine head three-year-olds, of the average weight of eight hundred pounds per head, and one hundred and twenty-nine head of other cattle, of the average weight of 1,000 pounds per head; that these cattle were at that time of the value of 4½ cents per pound; that the horses referred to were of the aggregate value of $500.

That this stock, when killed, was lawfully in the possession of said Grounds, and was kept by him at a place where he had the lawful right to keep the same, and that it was the moral and equitable duty of the Government to protect him in the possession and enjoyment of the same.

That said stock was killed, run off, or otherwise destroyed by said Indians without the fault or negligence of said Grounds and under such circumstances as would equitably entitle said Grounds to indemnity from the Government.

A bill similar to the one under consideration was before the Committee on Indian Affairs of this House in the Forty-seventh Congress, and was reported upon favorably by said committee, which report, for the more full and specific information of the House, is hereto attached and made part hereof.

Your committee do therefore recommend that the bill under consideration be amended by striking out in lines 6 and 7 of the printed bill the words "nineteen thousand one hundred and forty-seven" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "thirteen thousand one hundred and twenty-nine," and that the bill as so amended do pass.

"[House Report No. 633, Forty-seventh Congress, first session.]

"Mr. Mason, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted the following report (to accompany bill H. R. 2824):

"The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2824) for the relief of William Franklin Grounds, have duly considered the same, and submit the following report:

"The testimony of eleven witnesses and the official reports of Indian agents and officers of the Army show substantially the following state of facts:

"On the last of January, 1874, and for a long time prior thereto, the Hualapai Indians, a tribe in amity with the United States, were occupying the Camp Beale Spring reservation in Mohave County, Arizona Territory. They were, during their occupancy of that reservation, subsisted and cared for by the United States Government; were under the immediate charge of an agent of the Indian Bureau, and in close proximity to the United States troops stationed at the same reservation. In consequence of the high price of subsistence in that part of the Territory, and on account of the many new settlements and mining camps springing up in the vicinity (report Commissioner Indian Affairs, 1873, page 285), the Secretary of the Interior directed that these Indians should be removed to the 'Colorado River reservation,' one hundred and eighty miles south, and at that time occupied by other tribes. Under the fear of this removal, the Hualapai Indians, numbering six hundred, after receiving their issue of Government rations, quietly left their reservation at Camp Beale Spring about February 1, 1874, and did not return until about April 1, 1874.

"Forty miles from this reservation, at Truxton Spring, is the cattle ranch of the claimant, William Franklin Grounds, and not far from the ranch is the Hualapai range of mountains. In the valleys, cañons, and ravines of these mountains these Indians took refuge, from which they made frequent forays, killing and stealing the cattle and horses of Mr. Grounds, upon which they subsisted during the entire period of their absence from the reservation. It appears that every effort was employed and every precaution used by claimant to lawfully protect his property and avoid a conflict with the Indians which could be expected from a prudent man and a good citizen. As soon as he discovered these Indians stealing his cattle and anticipated the danger attending the protection of his property he made application to the commanding officer at Camp Beale Spring, and also to General Crook, commanding the Department of Arizona, for a detail of troops. These they were unable to send him, and not receiving protection for himself and property from the Government, he employed, at his own expense, four additional herders, one of whom was severely wounded by these Indians while trying to prevent them stealing the cattle of his employer.

"These depredations upon the cattle and horses of Mr. Grounds continued until about the 1st of April, 1874, when the Indians returned to their reservation at Camp Beale Spring, where they remained, and again received subsistence from the Government. On being interrogated by the commanding officer of the post, and by the Indian agent in charge, the Indians admitted killing and stealing the cattle of Mr. Grounds, and stated that they were willing that the number of cattle stolen should be deducted from the rations to be issued to them.

"Mr. Grounds, whose good character and strict integrity are testified to by reliable citizens of the Territory and certified to by the officers and agents of the Government, places the number of cattle stolen from him by the Hualapai Indians between February 5, 1874, and the last of March, 1874, at three hundred and fifty-six, and the number of horses at seven. He is, in the material part of this testimony, corroborated by experienced stockmen in the Territory, who saw his herd just before and examined it just after and during the depredation, and also by the testimony of his herders. The Indian agent, W. E. Morford, who was directed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to investigate this case, and who re-examined the claimant, his witnesses, and the Indians, states in his report, under date of August 22, 1876, that the captains of the different bands of Hualapai Indians admitted the depredations charged by Mr. Grounds, and gave the number of his cattle killed by their people at about five hundred. There are no persons so likely to know and as able to state the number of cattle stolen and killed as the Indians who slaughtered and ate them, and Mr. Grounds, who owned, guarded, and frequently counted them. His honesty and fairness of statement are made more apparent in placing the number stolen at a less number than that estimated by the stockmen and herders and that stated by the Indians.

"Your committee are therefore of the opinion that the number of cattle stolen is as accurately stated as it would be just and reasonable to require under the circumstances of their taking. Had the cattle been delivered under a contract such an exaction would have been eminently proper, but having been stealthily or forcibly driven off to the mountains or killed by a band of hungry and desperate Indians, it would be unjust to demand, and impossible for him to supply, testimony that each steer or horse was counted when taken.

"The superior quality and the estimated weight and value of these cattle, and the market price of the horses and cows, are testified to by seven competent witnesses. From this testimony it appears that these cattle were far above the average of Texas cattle. Mr. Grounds swears that he paid $7 per head more than the market price for the privilege of selecting his cattle from the herd when he purchased them in Texas. He states the number and age and average weight of the 250 cattle as follows:

		Pounds.
129	beef-cattle, 650 pounds net each (1,074½ pounds per head)	83,850
29	beef-cattle, 3 years old, 500 pounds net each (826⅔ pounds per head)	14,500
67	beef-cattle, 2 years old, 375 pounds net each (619⅝ pounds per head)	25,125
25	beef-cattle, 2 years old, 300 pounds net each (496 pounds per head)	7,500
250	Total	130,975

"He also states that the price of beef at that time at Mineral Park, near his ranch, was 10 and 11 cents per pound net. The one hundred and six cows stolen he valued at $40 per head.

"Thomas Shipp, a ranchman and cattle-raiser near Mineral Park, Ariz., testifies that he considers Mr. Grounds's herd the best in the Territory; that he saw the butcher at Mineral Park weigh some of the cattle he bought from Mr. Grounds, and they weighed 1,425 pounds gross; that he sold his cattle in the spring of 1874 from 9½ cents to 11 cents per pound net.

"Benjamin Spear, a merchant at Mineral Park, states that beef in the spring of 1874 was worth 10 cents per pound and that Mr. Grounds received 11 cents per pound net for what he sold. James W. Cureton, James Calvin Cureton, and William H. Leahy, cattle-herders, say the cattle of Mr. Grounds were fatter and larger than the average Texas cattle, and considered them the best Texas cattle they had seen in the Territory, being all selected. All these witnesses, with Joel McKee, a farmer and stock-breeder, who has been dealing in horses and cattle since 1847, and all of whom frequently saw these cattle, estimate the average weight of each kind the same as Mr. Grounds has done, as heretofore shown.

"Mr. Morford, the Indian agent, says, in his report upon this subject, that after examining all the witnesses he had private conversations with citizens and neighbors of Mr. Grounds, and found that he had taken great care in the selection of his stock and had already acquired an enviable reputation for the quality of his cattle and for his straightforwardness in all his dealings.

"Both the officers of the Army and the Indian agents who were present and investigated this case say that it is a just claim, and Mr. W. E. Morford, the Indian agent, who made the last and fullest investigation of the claim, in his report thereon, says:

"'I feel perfectly assured that $40,000 would not remunerate Mr. Grounds for his losses when we take into consideration the natural increase of his stock. * * * I do not hesitate to say that I think the total sum claimed by Mr. Grounds, namely, $19,147.25, is a just and honest claim, and that he should be reimbursed by the Government at as early a date as possible.'

"All the witnesses heretofore named state that the cows were cheap at $40 per head, and after describing the horses stolen, and giving the brands, fix the market value of the seven at $500.

"The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in an official communication, reports that the contract price paid by the Government for beef at the Colorado River reservation, Arizona, for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1873, and ending June 30, 1874, was from $4 to $5 per hundred gross, which at $5, is equivalent to over $10 per 100 pounds net, as will be seen from the following rule and example: '$\frac{11}{16}$ of the live weight is a near approximation to the net weight. For example, a living ox weighs 1,272 pounds; its net weight is 762.56 pounds." (Tracy's Commercial and Mechanical Arithmetic, p. 33.)

"Upon the testimony and official data the committee find that the average weight of the two hundred and fifty beef-cattle was five hundred and twenty-four pounds each, and estimating them at the contract price paid at that time in that locality by the Government and at the lowest instead of the highest price fixed by the witnesses, the average price per head would be $52.40, and

For the two hundred and fifty head a total of	$13,100
One hundred and six cows, at $40 per head	4,240
Seven horses	500
Total	17,840

"The committee believe that these prices fixed by reliable witnesses and the contract price of the Government was the fair market value at that time and at that place. Truxton Spring, and Mineral Park its market, are in the northwest corner of the Territory, remote from lines of transportation, and the time just at the close of the Apache war, when cattle were comparatively scarce and high in the Territory.

"It appears from the evidence, and partly from the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 1881, that the Hualapai Indians have always been friendly to the Government, and that one hundred of their warriors were supplied with arms and served under General Crook in his campaign against the hostile Apaches. A. A. Spear, who was a scout for General Crook in the Apache campaign, and who lived at Camp Beale Spring at the time these Indians left the reservation, says that at the close of the Apache campaign all except forty of these hundred warriors gave up the arms which had been issued to them. These forty were permitted to retain their Government arms and remain in service at Camp Beale Spring. Among those who deserted the reservation were these forty warriors, armed with Government rifles, and acting as an auxiliary force in case of a fresh outbreak by the Apaches. The Government was therefore under some obligations to these Indians. It was at the same time bound to protect its citizens against the acts of its allies, whom it had armed and thereby rendered capable of committing these depredations.

"These acts, from the admissions of the Indians, were not committed through any enmity for Mr. Grounds, nor for the purpose of gratifying malice or seeking revenge. It was for the sole purpose of subsisting themselves in the mountains during a period which the Government should and would have fed them had they remained at the reservation.

"If we commute the per diem ration for each Indian on the basis given by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in his report for 1878 (page xiii), we shall find that the Government, during the period these Indians were absent and subsisting on the horses and cattle of Mr. Grounds, saved in subsistence stores about $8,000.

"Your committee are satisfied that the claim of Mr. Grounds is a just one, and that the Government is under obligations to compensate him for these losses. In arriving at these conclusions, your committee are guided by numerous legislative precedents in cases similar to this, and by the principles declared by eminent publicists. They believe that it would be in violation of the spirit of our institutions to impose on one citizen the burdens which should be borne by all, and that the citizen who pays taxes, bears arms, serves on juries, and bears his just proportion of the burdens of Government, and complies with all its exactions, is entitled to security in person and property, and to the prompt fulfillment by the Government of all the obligations it is under to him as a citizen.

"The Committee on Indian Affairs of the United States Senate, first session Thirty-fourth Congress, to whom was referred a bill authorizing the payment of certain claims for Indian depredations, and in which the equities were not as clear and strong as those which exist in this case, say:

"'The spoliations for which redress is now sought were caused by predatory expeditions, undertaken without lawful authority and without cause, as likewise without the usual formalities, and solely with the view to plunder, and is therefore excepted by Vattel and all the approved publicists from the principle under which redress is here sought to be derived, and brings it within the principle under which, by the practice of all civilized nations, the citizen or subject has been held entitled to indemnity, and under which this Government has uniformly extended redress.' (Senate Report, No. 244, first session Thirty-fourth Congress, vol. 2.)

"These great principles of government have been recognized, and passed into a compact between this Government and the citizen in the several 'trade and intercourse laws' enacted by Congress in 1802, 1834, and 1859. Since then it has repeatedly, in the hundreds of private acts for relief, recognized its obligations to pay the citizen out of the Treasury of the United States for losses sustained by Indian depredations. It has gone even further, and paid friendly Indians for losses sustained at the hands of hostiles of the same tribe when they, the hostiles, failed to make restitution of the property stolen as stipulated in the articles of capitulation. The Committee on Indian Affairs of the United States Senate, to whom was referred the memorial of the heirs of Robert McConnel, in connection with the above case, in their report recommending the passage of the bill for their relief, say:

"'The Government has indemnified the friendly Creek Indians by a large appropriation for the non-performance of the article of capitulation, and, your committee think, rightfully. The same principle demands the same indemnity for the petitioners, unless it be held that the Government is under higher obligations to cause justice to be done the Indians than to her own citizens.' (Senate Report 243, first session Thirty-fourth Congress, volume 2.)

"In November, 1873, Mr. Grounds, who had been in Texas since the spring of 1872, returned to his ranch in Arizona, driving his herd of cattle on receipt of the notice sent out by General Crook, commanding the Department of Arizona, that the hostile Apaches were subdued, and that citizens might return to the Territory without fear of harm to person or property. 'On the faith of this notice, and, as we are bound to presume, on the faith of the promise implied in the acts of February 28, 1859, and July 15, 1870 (2156 and 2098 Revised Statutes), and the faith of legislative precedents in granting relief in such cases heretofore, the claimant risked his property in the Territory, bore his just share of the burdens and expense of government, and, as the testimony shows, fulfilled all the requirements of the law and the rules of the Department.

"The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in forwarding the report of the Indian agent, W. E. Morford, to the Secretary of the Interior, and by him transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives under date of January 11, 1882, admits that the depredation is fully proven, and says: 'I now recommend that Congress be requested to act upon the case on its merits as disclosed in the papers.'

"Your committee are satisfied from the testimony that the number of beef-cattle stolen from William Franklin Grounds by the Hualapai Indians was not less than two hundred and fifty, that the number of cows was one hundred and six, and the number of horses seven.

"They are also satisfied from the testimony and official data that the value fixed by the witnesses and the contract price of the Government was the fair market value in that section at that time, and in taking the lowest estimate have discriminated in favor of the Government.

"Believing, as your committee do, that the Government should be as prompt in fulfilling its obligations to the citizen as the citizen is required to be in the performance of his duty to it, and that it should not set the example of evasion of duty or repudiation of just debts, we recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words 'three hundred and fifty-six,' in lines 7 and 8, and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'two hundred and fifty,' and also by striking out the words 'nineteen thousand one hundred and forty-seven,' in lines 6 and 7, and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'seventeen thousand eight hundred and forty;' and as thus amended we recommend the passage of the bill."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill presents a somewhat novel proposition. It is that the Government is responsible for all the acts of spoliation by the Indian tribes. We have passed during the present session a number of claims of this class; but we have charged the amount on the sums due the tribes of Indians by whom the spoliation was committed. I did not notice what gentleman made the report; but I should like to hear the proposition discussed and the arguments in favor of it that this Government is morally bound to pay for all the acts of depredation committed either by the Indians or anybody else. I can not consent without further explanation than is given us in that report that a claim like this should pass the committee.

Mr. LONG. The report is made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be laid on the table.

Mr. NELSON. I call for the reading of the remainder of the report.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Has not the report been read except some exhibits?

Mr. NELSON. The main part of the report has not been read.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the report.

Before the reading was concluded,

Mr. NELSON said: I think so much of this report as relates to the material facts of the case has now been read. The balance of it relates to the value, in respect to which this committee differs from a former committee, having cut down the amount one-third. I move the adoption of the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] must observe that the question is not whether this property was destroyed by these Indians. The question is whether or no the Government of the United States is liable to pay for all the acts of spoliation committed by the Indian tribes.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, my answer to that is, that the Government of the United States is as much liable in this case as in all the other depredation cases in which claims have been allowed by this Congress. A large number of bills, perhaps more than twenty, founded on no stronger basis than this bill, have been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, incorporated into the Indian appropriation bill, and passed by this House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; but my friend misapprehends the state of the case. Those were not claims of this character at all. Those were claims resting upon treaties with the Indian tribes, by which the Indians have agreed that in case they destroy property the facts shall be ascertained by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the amount of the damage or spoliation committed shall be deducted from the sums due them under treaty stipulations. But here the case is entirely different. All the appropriations made by this Congress to meet the claims referred to by the gentleman from Minnesota have been simply appropriations to provide for carrying out treaty stipulations with the Indian tribes and the payment of money out of the funds of the Indians. This bill is based upon an entirely different proposition.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is injecting a speech into mine. I supposed I had the floor, and that the gentleman rose merely to ask a question. I wish now to call his attention to the fact that, while there is an apparent distinction between the two classes of cases, there is none in reality. In the case of the Indians referred to in this bill, while there was no treaty between them and the United States, the fact is that they were under the special care and guardianship of the United States, and were guarded and furnished with supplies by the Army; and pending that care and control of them an order was issued for their removal. At that the Indians became frightened, and strayed away into the mountains where this cattle ranche of Mr. Grounds was, and destroyed his stock. In other words, these Indians have no funds, no property, and never have had any. In that section of the country there are no treaty Indians. The Government has simply assumed control of them, as it did, in the first instance, of all the Indians. The Government took charge of these Indians, furnished them with supplies, and paid them annuities; not under treaties, but under its general obligation to take care of them. It had a military force to guard them, and while they were under the care and control of that military force, and under the guardianship of the United States, the Government allowed them to stray off and destroy this property.

I take it that this Government, having established the principle that whenever these Indians commit depredations we have no remedy against them, because they are mere minors or wards of the nation, the Government is bound, upon broad principles of natural equity, to pay for any depredations committed by its wards. Either that, or else it should leave us with some kind of remedy against the Indians themselves. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WELLBORN].

Mr. WELLBORN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that an impartial and careful investigation into the peculiar relation that the Government of the United States sustains to Indian tribes of America must inevitably lead to the conclusion that it is the duty of the Government of the United States to protect its citizens against the irruptions and incursions of these hostile tribes, and that in the event of the failure of the Government to extend that protection to its citizens, then the Government is bound to indemnify the citizen for whatever injury or damage he may sustain in consequence of the Government's failure to protect him.

But, sir, it is not my purpose in taking the floor at this time to discuss the general principle underlying claims for damages growing out of Indian depredations. There are three peculiar circumstances in this case which make it necessary to engage in such discussion, and I invite the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to the statements I am about to make. I say there are three circumstances connected with this case which make it unnecessary for the claimant to rest his claim on the general principle which makes the Government liable for Indian depredations. What are the three circumstances to which I refer? The report shows first that, indirectly at least, it was through the agency, through the instrumentality of the Government of the United States that these depredations were caused. This tribe of Indians had been placed upon a particular reservation by the authority of the Government. For the reasons stated in the report, the Government determined to change them from the reservation on which they were originally placed and send them to another some one hundred and eighty miles distant from the first. The order was issued by the Secretary of the Interior directing their removal. As has been stated by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], the Indians became frightened at the prospect of removal and wandered off into the mountains contiguous to the ranch owned by the claimant, and while there committed these depredations upon his property. Therefore I say, sir, that the cause, the indirect cause, of these depredations was the action of the Government of the United States through one of its highest officers, the Secretary of the Interior.

But there is another fact which raises an unquestioned equity, to say the least of it, against the Government. Not only was it through the agency of the Government that these Indians were placed in a position to commit the depredations which they did commit upon this claimant, but, sir, the very arms, the very munitions that they used in destroying his cattle were arms and munitions supplied to them by the Government of the United States. About one hundred warriors of this tribe had been in the employ of the Government. While so employed they were armed by the Government. A short time before these Indians left their reservation the authorities of the Government required them to surrender most of their guns, leaving, however, guns in the possession of forty warriors of the tribe; and the report shows that it was with these guns the cattle were slain. So that the Government is not only indirectly responsible for the Indians being in a position where they could destroy the claimant's property, but further, the Government actually supplied the arms with which the depredations were committed.

But there is still another consideration which gives increased strength to this claim, and, as it does seem to me, removes it from the field of controversy. Not only did the Government furnish these Indians the motive for the depredation; not only did the Government supply the agencies, the arms with which this motive could be executed, but during the two months that these Indians were living upon the cattle of this claimant the Government was saved the expense of providing for them. As the report shows, the ordinary rations issued by the Government to this tribe of Indians would have amounted during that time to $8,000. Eight thousand dollars. This amount was saved to the Government of the United States during the time that these Indians were living upon the property of the claimant.

Now, I submit that these three circumstances constitute an equitable and valid claim against the Government, without reference to the principle, which in my judgment would make the Government responsible to the claimant even though these circumstances did not exist. This is all I desire to submit in reference to the case. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment submitted by the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I can hardly believe that this Committee of the Whole will hastily adopt so remarkable a rule as that involved in this bill. Gentlemen who have discussed the subject do not even favor us with precedent; yet it is almost impossible to find any class of private claims in reference to which our legislation does not furnish some precedent; as the rule of Congress, whatever it may be upon any given subject, is liable to countless modifications.

Here the naked question is presented whether the Government of the United States is under a moral obligation to protect all the property of the Western country from spoliation by Indian tribes. If the Government is thus liable, then in those instances where we have made treaties with the Indians providing that out of the treaty funds damages resulting from Indian depredations should be paid we have done an unjust thing; for if the obligation rests upon the Government to pay for all damages committed by the Indian tribes, it would seem to be hardly proper that in specific cases we should compel particular tribes of Indians to pay such damages and relieve the Government from the necessity of payment.

My friend from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] called attention to the fact that in a number of instances during the present Congress and during every preceding Congress for the last fifty years we have paid such claims out of Indian funds by virtue of treaty stipulations. But I do not concede that a case can be found where the Government has held itself liable to make such payment out of the public Treasury. If the Government is liable on the principle of moral obligation to preserve the peace everywhere, to prevent damage to property everywhere, and there is no liability whatever to the Government, then the idea of paternal government is carried beyond anything that has been heretofore suggested.

The three points made by my friend from Texas [Mr. WELLBORN] do not vary the rule at all. The object of government is protection to all the people within its jurisdiction and to all their property. As well might you say that because during the late war a raid was perpetrated by those in arms against the Government into a loyal State and property destroyed the Government is liable for that destruction as to say that in a case like this the Government is bound to pay for all losses suffered by reason of the depredations of a marauding band of Indians.

These Indians wandered away, and my friend from Texas thinks the Government ought not to have permitted them to wander. The Government has assumed no higher obligation in regard to the Indian tribes than with reference to any other people, except so far as concerns the general direction of affairs affecting them in their peculiar condition.

The gentleman from Texas says that these Indians were armed. Why, sir, all Indian tribes are armed more or less.

Mr. WELLBORN. Are all armed by the Government as warriors to fight for the Government?

Mr. HOLMAN. Then the fact of arming Indians is to make the Government liable! The Government is forbidden to deprive its people of the right to bear arms; and because the people have this right, the Government is to be liable for all depredations everywhere.

Mr. OURY. Does the Government permit the people in the Territories to defend themselves against the Indians? Have they that right under the law?

Mr. HOLMAN. The people of the Territories have done so time and again. They have been doing so all the time.

Mr. OURY. We have been driven into it often; but does the Government permit the people of a Territory to defend themselves against incursions of Indians?

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend remembers it is being done all the time. Whenever a band of Indians has wandered from the reservation and committed depredations, the people have arisen en masse, as they have the right to do——

Mr. MAGINNIS. Will the gentleman insist that the sheriffs, the marshals, and other ordinary officers of the law have the right to follow those Indians onto an Indian reservation?

Mr. HOLMAN. Not onto a reservation, I concede.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Then it is a city of refuge set up by the Government for these men.

Mr. HOLMAN. If you follow them what do you accomplish? Now, when the Government does the best it can to protect the person and property of all its citizens——

Mr. MAGINNIS. But it does not.

Mr. HOLMAN. When the Government does the best it can to protect the person and property of its citizens everywhere, does it follow when wrongs are committed the Government must make reparation? The Government is under obligation to preserve peace between the gentleman and myself, and no higher obligation rests upon it anywhere than right there. It can not enter into payment of damages for an invasion of every right.

Besides all that, Mr. Chairman, here is a herder ten years ago on the plains or mountains of Arizona and a band of wandering Indians destroys his property, and you say the Government must pay for it. Now the great cattle-kings have invaded that whole region within these ten years, and the mountains and the prairies and the valleys are all covered with countless herds of cattle. Does the gentleman assume because a roving band of Indians makes a descent upon one of these herds of cattle and destroys it that the Government of the United States is bound to pay the damage? Why, sir, it is a new doctrine in this House. It is one that can not be sustained. The very fact that in all your treaties with the Indians having property you carefully provide that every claim shall be scrutinized and ascertained repels the idea that the Government ever assumed any such moral obligation as this bill seems to present.

Mr. CASSIDY. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him, I will say that this is not so much a claim for damages as a claim for subsistence. It comes in on that ground.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not see that any such claim as that can be maintained.

Mr. MAGINNIS. It is a depredation claim.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is entitled to the floor and will proceed unless he yields for interruption.

Mr. HOLMAN. These Indians were being supported by the Government as a mode of preserving the public peace on the one hand and as an act of national charity on the other. It is not peculiar to the Indian, for wherever great bodies of people have been in destitution you have provided for them. When the floods overwhelmed the people of the Ohio valley and the people of the Mississippi valley, and they were starving for the food that had been submerged by the relentless flood, they were provided with shelter and food and clothing out of the public Treasury.

Mr. WELLBORN. Did the Government fix them on reservations with metes and bounds?

Mr. HOLMAN. You appropriate money year after year out of the Treasury to provide for these unhappy and unfortunate portions of our population from suffering and starvation. You have done it on the same principle you have extended national charity in countless forms. You have done it in this instance more repeatedly under the safeguards of the Constitution of the country.

But does that impose a liability on the part of the Government because it extended this charity to these unfortunate tribes? Does that impose on the Government the responsibility for all their marauding acts? I think not. Because the Government in protection of the people on the frontier has gathered these Indians into reservations, the fact that the Government has done this to protect the people from spoliation does not impose on the Government the duty of meeting every act of spoliation they shall commit by exactions on the public Treasury. The very acts of the Government to protect the people of the Western country are made arguments in favor of the liability of the Government. As the Government feeds them to preserve the public peace it does but an act of natural charity. It gathers them into reservations where they can be watched, so as to prevent them from committing depredations. If they break away from the Government and commit acts of spoliation, it is said because the Government has put them upon these reservations and done the best it can to protect the persons and property of our citizens upon the border therefore the Government is liable for whatever damages may result from acts of spoliation by these Indians. Why, sir, that is a new doctrine in this House.

Why, even in the case of Indians who by treaty stipulations have agreed that spoliations by members of their tribe shall be paid out of the fund held by the National Government in trust for them—even there you require that the claim shall be submitted to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and that he shall investigate it to the bottom, and that not until that thorough investigation shall have occurred shall he recommend it; and not until then shall the money be taken out of the funds held by the Government for the benefit of the tribe. But it is not here shown even that these Indians had any fund, and I presume they had not; it is not shown that this claim was ever investigated by proper authority. It comes here with no testimony except ex parte testimony. It is not shown that this claimant occupied other relation to the Government than that of the great body of men now occupying the public domain as feeding grounds for their herds. He was in Arizona, and taking advantage of the rich pastures of that country to increase his wealth—just as the cattle-kings do all over the country. You might as well say that thus availing himself of the public resources of the public pastures, which furnished food for countless herds of stock; occupying the domain of the Government, without authority, to promote his wealth, that therefore the Government is to be held responsible for every act of spoliation committed against him. You might as well say that a marauding body of men from Mexico committing depredations would impose the same liability in honor and morals as the marauding act of this Indian tribe.

Mr. GEORGE was recognized.

Mr. HOLMAN. Permit me one moment. I am afraid that in trying to finish a sentence I have been discourteous to my friend from Texas.

Mr. WELLBORN. Not at all.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have said, sir, I believe all I desired to say.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the position assumed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], I desire to call the attention of this committee to the law as it has stood for many years. Congress has recognized its obligation in the past.

In 1796 (1 Statutes, 469) we read:

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That if any Indian or Indians, belonging to any tribe in amity with the United States, shall come over or across the said boundary line into any State or Territory inhabited by citizens of the United States, and there take, steal, or destroy any horse, horses, or other property belonging to any citizen or inhabitant of the United States, or of either of the Territorial districts of the United States, or shall commit any murder, violence, or outrage upon any such citizen or inhabitant, it shall be the duty of such citizen or inhabitant, his representative, attorney, or agent, to make application to the superintendent, or such other person as the President of the United States shall authorize for that purpose; who, upon being furnished with the necessary documents and proofs, shall, under the direction or instruction of the President of the United States, make application to the nation or tribe to which such Indian or Indians shall belong for satisfaction; and if such nation or tribe shall neglect or refuse to make satisfaction in a reasonable time, not exceeding eighteen months, then it shall be the duty of such superintendent, or other person authorized as aforesaid, to make return of his doings to the President of the United States, and forward to him all documents and proofs in the case, that such further steps may be taken as shall be proper to obtain satisfaction for the injury; and in the mean time, in respect to the property taken, stolen, or destroyed, the United States guarantee to the party injured an eventual indemnification: Provided always, That if such injured party, his representative, attorney, or agent, shall in any way violate any of the provisions of this act by seeking or attempting to obtain private satisfaction or revenge, by crossing over the line on any of the Indian lands, he shall forfeit all claim upon the United States for such indemnification: And provided also, That nothing herein contained shall prevent the legal apprehension or arresting, within the limits of any State or district, of any Indian having so offended: And provided further, That it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to deduct such sum or sums as shall be paid for the property taken, stolen, or destroyed by any such Indian out of the annual stipend which the United States are bound to pay to the tribe to which such Indian shall belong.

The essential provisions of this section are that in case of any depredations committed by Indians application shall first be made by the United States to the nation or tribe to whom the depredators belonged. In case no satisfaction is made by the tribe, the proofs of the depredation already obtained are to be transmitted to the President of the United States. The United States guarantees eventual indemnification to the party injured without regard to whether the tribe has annuity funds due them or not; but if annuities are due, the President is authorized to deduct from them the value of the property taken or destroyed.

This section is the first statutory enactment of a policy continued for many years. The acts of March 3, 1799 (1 Statutes, 743, section 14, page 747) and of March 30, 1802 (2 Statutes, 139, section 14, page 143) re-enact this same section.

This law remained upon our statute-books re-enacted in various forms until the year 1834. During said time claims of this character were generally paid out of the annuities due to the Indians. But in 1834 a more general and more comprehensive law was enacted regulating trade intercourse with the Indian tribes, which continued the guarantee of the United States for eventual indemnification in the same language as under the old act, and provided that if no annuity was payable to the Indian the amount claimed should be paid from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does my friend read from the statute?

Mr. GEORGE. And this law continued in force for twenty-five years longer, until 1859.

Mr. HOLMAN. What does the gentleman read from?

Mr. GEORGE. I am making this a part of my remarks, because I have investigated the subject very carefully and know it to be true.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know, but what is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. GEORGE. I am reading from a former statement made by myself on this subject.

In 1859 a law was passed containing this provision:

That so much of the act entitled "An act to regulate trade intercourse with the Indian tribes and to preserve peace on the frontiers," approved June 30, 1834, as provides that the United States shall make indemnification out of the Treasury for property taken or destroyed in certain cases by Indians trespassing upon white men, as described in the said act, be, and the same is hereby, repealed: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to impair or destroy the obligation of the Indian to make indemnities out of the annuities as described in said act.

An authoritative construction and limitation were put upon this act by the joint resolution of June, 1860, which provided that the repeal by the eighth section of the act of Congress, or so much of the act as provides that the United States shall make idemnification out of the Treasury for property taken or destroyed in certain cases by Indians trespassing upon white men, should not be construed to destroy or impair any indemnity which existed at the date of said repeal; so that from and after that time the liability of the United States as fixed by act of Congress was first to pay all depredations committed by Indians prior to the date of its passage. If annuity funds were due, the United States to pay out of these funds; if none were due, then the United States were obliged to pay out of the United States Treasury for all depredations. And as to depredations committed after its passage, the United States took upon itself the obligation of a trustee in all cases where annuities were due the Indians, and continued on itself the obligation to pay over to persons suffering by acts of the Indians the amount of their damages out of these annuities.

The practice of the Government after that time was to pay these depredation claims through the Departments without legislative intervention, which practice continued until 1870, when Congress provided that no money thereafter appropriated under any general act or deficiency bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department should be used to pay annuities due to or to be used or expended for the care and benefit of any tribe or tribes of Indians, or should be applied to the payment of any claim for depredation that may have been or may be committed by such tribe or tribes or any number or numbers thereof; and that no claim for Indian depredation should thereafter be paid until Congress should make special appropriation therefor.

It is quite evident from this recital of past legislation that this Government has recognized its liability to its citizens to see that they are reimbursed for depredation losses which they have sustained. This guaranty results from the soundest principles of law without the aid of any statutes, and therefore could not be affected by any act repealing any particular statute; and I take it that the act of 1870 and the prior acts referred to were in no sense intended as a contrary declaration, but were intended merely to effect the method of obtaining relief. In fact,

Senator Harlan, in reporting this section of the act of 1870 from the Committee on Indian Affairs, expressly stated that it was the purpose of the Committee on Indian Affairs to prevent thereafter the payment of claims for Indian depredations out of general appropriations without requiring them to be submitted for the action of Congress.

The effect of this enactment was to prevent the payment of these claims through the Department as they were allowed and to require the claims to be submitted to a further examination and appropriation by Congress. That such was the intention was evidenced by the act of May 29, 1872, which provided that the Secretary of the Interior should prepare and cause to be published such rules and regulations as he might deem necessary or proper, prescribing the manner of presenting claims arising under existing laws or treaty stipulations for compensation for depredations committed by the Indians, and the degree and character of the evidence necessary to support such claims, and that he should carefully investigate all such claims as may be presented, subject to the rules and regulations prepared by him, and report to Congress at each session thereof the nature, character, and amount of such claims, whether allowed by him or not, and the evidence upon which his action was based, simply providing that no payment on account of such claim should be made without a specific appropriation therefor by Congress. Since that date no general law has been passed making appropriations; but special appropriations have from time to time been made in individual cases by private relief bills, thus continually admitting the doctrine of liability.

Thus it will be seen that the whole spirit and tenor of our laws, the same now that it has ever been, is to treat the property of the citizen taken from him by Indians in treaty relations with the United States as appropriated to public use, entitling the citizen to compensation; and Congress, acting upon this theory, has promptly made compensation till within a few years. Spain and Great Britain allowed the Indians to pay for their depredations and debts in lands. And by the same statute, whereby the United States prohibited the conveyance of lands by the Indians, they guaranteed ultimate indemnification to citizens for losses sustained at their hands.

I have here a list of claims paid by Congress by special acts, which I will not detain the committee to read, but with the permission of the House will publish with my remarks. All told, they amount to $1,599,000, of which sum only about $53,000 was paid from annuity funds.

By act of March 3, 1819, section 5, 3 Statutes, 517, $4,000 is appropriated from the Treasury to satisfy claims of citizens of the United States for property stolen or destroyed by the Osages.

By act of March 2, 1827, 6 Statutes, 361, William Morrison, late contractor for supplies to the Army, is allowed credit for sixty-nine beef-cattle taken from near the military post of Prairie du Chien in July, 1821, by certain predatory tribes of Indians.

By act of March 25, 1830, 6 Statutes, 408, the Secretary of War is directed to pay $6,756 to four persons for property taken by the Osage Indians from 1816 to 1823.

By act of May 31, 1830, 4 Statutes, 428, certain depredation claims are referred to the Third Auditor to be decided according to the provisions of section 14 of the act of March 30, 1802, the money to be paid out of the Treasury.

By act of March 2, 1831, 4 Statutes, 470, $1,300 is appropriated for payment of sundry claims for Indian depredations.

By act of June 26, 1834, 4 Statutes, 705, $7,800 is appropriated to defray the expense of investigating claims against the Seminoles for property stolen or destroyed by them and for liquidating such as may be satisfactorily established.

By act of June 30, 1834, 4 Statutes, 721, payment not exceeding $250,000 is granted out of the Treasury to citizens of Georgia for claims founded upon the capture and detention or destruction of property by Creek Indians prior to the act of March 30, 1802.

By act of June 30, 1834, 6 Statutes, 581, certain claims for Indian depredation are referred to the Secretary of War, who is directed to pay out of the Treasury all which shall be established.

By act of July 1, 1836, 6 Statutes, 659, $403 is appropriated to James Alexander and $575 to Ira Nash for losses sustained and depredations committed by Sac and Fox Indians in 1814.

By act of July 2, 1836, 6 Statutes, 671, the Secretary of War is directed to pay to Joseph Bogy $6,000 for his merchandise and property taken or destroyed by the Choctaw Indians in 1807.

By act of March 3, 1837, 5 Statutes, 158, 162, the President is directed to report to Congress as to depredations committed by the Seminoles and Creeks before and after the recent Indian war.

By act of March 3, 1841, 6 Statutes, 822, the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to pay out of the Treasury to Avery, Saltmarsh & Co., mail contractors, $9,779 for property employed by them in transporting the mail captured and destroyed by the Creek Indians in May, 1836.

By act of June 15, 1844, 6 Statutes, 913, the Secretary of War is directed to pay George Wallis $3,000 out of the Indian annuities for the destruction of cattle belonging to the said Wallis by the Sac and Fox and Iowa Indians.

By act of August 9, 1846, 9 Statutes, 24, private, $1,500 is appropriated from the Indian annuities to pay to the legal representatives of Cyrus Turner for depredations committed by Sioux Indians.

By act of March 2, 1847, 9 Statutes, private, $1,081 is appropriated from the Treasury to pay Elijah White and others for property taken by the Pawnee Indians.

By act of March 3, 1847, 9 Statutes, 55, private, $676.91 is appropriated from the Treasury to pay Joseph E. Primeau and Thomas J. Chapman for depredations committed by Yankton Indians.

By act of March 3, 1875, 18 Statutes, 424, $2,500 each is appropriated to Adelaide German and Julia German, two white children captured in Kansas, the same to be withheld from annuities due the Cheyennes.

By act of March 3, 1877, 19 Statutes, 549, $2,283.92 is appropriated from the Treasury to pay Hans C. Peterson for damages by Sioux Indians in Minnesota in 1862.

By act of March 3, 1879, 20 Statutes, 396, $2,915, with interest at 7 per cent., is appropriated from any treaty funds of the Kiowa Indians to the heirs of Abel S. Lee for property taken and destroyed by the Kiowa Indians in 1872.

By act of March 3, 1879, 20 Statutes, 396, $5,000 is appropriated out of any money hereafter appropriated for the use and benefit of the Cheyenne Indians to Mrs. Celia C. Short.

By act of June 8, 1880, 21 Statutes, 549, $15,867.50 is appropriated to pay Henry Warren for damages sustained by depredations of Indians in 1871, while Warren was a Government contractor, the same to be withheld from the amounts due the Indians.

By act of June 16, 1880, 21 Statutes, 588, $2,000 is appropriated from the annuities due the Cheyenne or Arapaho Indians to Amanda M. Cook, whose mother was killed and herself captured by the Indians in 1865.

By act of March 3, 1881, 21 Statutes, 640, $58,659.46 is appropriated from the Treasury to pay Dodd, Brown & Co., assignees of E. H. Durfee & Co., and others, for depredations committed by various tribes of Indians, the amounts to be deducted from the annuities.

By act of May 17, 1882, 22 Statutes, 86, $9,870.10 is appropriated, from unexpended balances of treaty funds, to pay various claimants for damages caused by a raid of Northern Cheyennes.

By act of March 3, 1883, 22 Statutes, 804, $12,200 is appropriated from moneys due the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians, to Powers & Newman and D. and B. Powers for depredations committed by these Indians.

The history of this country shows that while the gentleman from Indiana is correct as to many instances of claims paid out of annuity funds, yet that the principle had been recognized by our legislation that they should also be paid, when there are no annuity funds, directly from the Treasury of the United States. Depredation claims of this character have been paid out of the Treasury of the United States by this Congress, and that, too, when there were no annuity or treaty funds.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman from Oregon mention a claim of this class which has been passed upon by this Congress or the last either?

Mr. GEORGE. The claim of Mrs. Boddy is one, and I believe it was honored by the support of the gentleman from Indiana himself.

Mr. Chairman, the payment of these claims is a matter of very great interest to a large class of our people, especially in the Northwest, and they are a class whose energy, enterprise, and ability have changed much of the vast West from the domain of the savage to that of civilization.

The claims pending before the Department and Congress amount now to probably $10,000,000. Of these claims the Interior Department has reported about $1,500,000 to Congress with a favorable recommendation. Congress, however, has made no appropriation by general law for a number of years, and these claims have been gradually accumulating. Whenever attempts have been made to secure general appropriations to meet these claims our Representatives from the West have been met by the opposition of the more numerous Representatives of the East. The argument has been made that the Government is under no obligation to pay any of these depredation claims; that when the citizen places himself in the position of risk, as in other cases of damage from riot or invasion from a foreign country, the Government is not responsible, having exercised due diligence and done its duty. The people of the West are told that if they are robbed or murdered by white men the State does not make pecuniary recompense to the sufferers or their heirs, and therefore the question is asked why they should expect it because the depredation is committed by an Indian. It is contended that our case is similar to those of other citizens who suffer from invasion from abroad, who can not recover on grounds of public policy; that the paying of these depredation claims would have a tendency to make less liable their personal efforts for the preservation of property and of our common country.

It has been contended upon our side that the situation is an entirely different one; that the Government treats the Indians neither as foreign nations nor as citizens; that it treats them as wards of the nation; that it assigns them to a territory to occupy, places them in charge of United States officials, whose duty it is to restrain them from plundering settlers on the frontier; that they are placed under the sole care and control of the United States; that the laws of the Commonwealths in which their reservations are situated are not allowed to extend over them; that the processes of the civil courts have no effect inside of their jurisdiction, and that our citizen who is wronged can follow them only to the bounds of their reservation—there he must stop; that the laws of the United States give him no indemnity or no remedy for the wrong done him; that he is restrained from taking the remedy into his own hands; that he is even prohibited under the law from receiving from the Indian any compensation for his injury; and that he may behold the stolen property before his very eyes inside the bounds of the reservation, and he dare not take possession of his own. If he had been wronged by a white man he could to a certain extent remedy his wrong by retaking possession of his property. He could accept satisfaction for the injury done him; the laws of the land would furnish him the courts with all their powerful processes to enforce his rights. He could recover judgment, seize and take the last dollar of the property of the wrongdoer and have him punished at public expense for the crime committed. But if the wrongdoer be an Indian the party wronged is powerless.

Now, it is a well-established principle of law that every citizen who bears his lawful proportion of the burdens of the Government is entitled to protection in his person or property in some form. If the General Government will not allow the white man to enforce his rights against the Indian depredator, and will not permit him to accept a compromise offering from the Indian, and will not allow the common remedies of the courts and the law, it is in duty bound by every principle of justice and good government to remedy the wrong itself. In every proper and just view it is an appropriation of private property to public use. Upon what principle of law or morals can our Government stand back and refuse to pay these claims while withholding from the citizens all remedy in the law and taking and retaining in its own custody and possession all the lands and assets of every description of these people? To do so is an act of perfidy to the frontier settlers and of bad faith such as no court could tolerate between man and man, and in its tendency is demoralizing to the whole nation.

I am tempted to quote the eloquent and forcible words of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MAGINNIS] on a former occasion. He said:

Mr. MAGINNIS. I will call the attention of the committee briefly to the manner in which these Indian depredation claims come to be a subject for Congressional action. We are told that Indian depredation claims have no business here, and that the Government is not rightfully obligated to pay any of them—a proposition which the people of the West and their Representatives contest. We are told that if men place themselves in positions of risk, they must take the consequences; that, as in cases of damage from riot or from war, the Government is not responsible, having exercised due diligence and done its duty. We are told that if people are robbed or murdered by white men the State does not make pecuniary recompense to the sufferers or their heirs, and we are asked why should it do so because the depredation is committed by an Indian.

I will endeavor to explain the difference, and show that depredation claims stand on an entirely different ground.

The Government sets up in the Territories these independent principalities known as reservations. They are occupied by people recognized in a sense as independent nationalities, under the control and protection of the General Government. The laws of the Commonwealths in which they are situated do not cover them. The process of the civil courts can not invade them. They are cities of refuge, and the Government declares to all surrounding people that they shall not disturb its wards, and assumes the position of guardian and arbiter between them and all others. You say that people who trade or settle in such countries should take the risk of their ventures. So they should under the laws. But if a white man burns your house or steals your horse you can follow him anywhere with the law. You can arrest him, punish, and perhaps recover your property. But when these Indians make a raid off their reservations, invade a settlement, and take your horses and cattle and drive them, under your very eyes, to the reservation, what can you do with the law?

Suppose they murder and destroy and then retreat to their own dominions, and your marshals and sheriffs follow them in hot pursuit to the very boundaries of their reservation, what remedy have you? Your law no longer follows the Indians. The process of your court falls dead as soon as your pursuit reaches the line of his reservation, which the Government orders you not to cross, and safe in his city of refuge the depredator laughs at you and is safe from your law officers, and can exhibit your stolen property before your outraged face, and you have no right to reclaim it, and no remedy for your wrong, except through the General Government.

The Government, in pursuance of its settled policy, says that you shall not cross that line, nor shall your courts, or their officers, or your local laws. It says, these people are the wards of the Government, and if you have any cause of complaint you must come to the Government of the United States, and it will arbitrate your differences and settle the measure of your damages.

Having no other recourse, and being forbidden to resort to any, the settler therefore comes to the Government of the United States to right his wrong, and to obtain justice for the acts which have been committed by those whom the Government excludes from the operation of the local law, and for whom, as its own wards, it assumes the responsibility.

Grounded on these principles of justice, and for these reasons, a law was rightfully framed and passed, and for many, very many, years stood on your statute-books, providing that in all cases of depredations committed by Indians, such depredations being duly proved, the Interior Department should award damages to the person trespassed against, and the amounts so awarded should be deducted from the annuities paid by the Government to the Indians committing such depredations.

A man has a herd of cattle or horses, and the Indians come in and kill them or steal them. That man has no remedy, by law or otherwise. What, then, must he do, if you deny him a remedy in court or Congress? He is compelled to fall back upon the right which every man has to defend his property. The result of that may be to bring on a war with the Indians, involving the Government in a tremendous expense. Sir, the time has come when this Congress should look at these facts and deal justly by these people. If men are denied redress, they will take means to redress themselves; this will bring on conflicts and destroy the peace which you are bound to preserve, and which you are spending so many millions to preserve, and it will involve you in an expense far beyond that which is necessary to pay such claims you justly owe the people who have been despoiled by your wards.

To show the state of sentiment in my State on this subject I quote the following from a late message from Governor Thayer, of Oregon. Referring to Oregon Modoc war bonds, he says:

The indebtedness arising out of these claims belongs to the same class as the Modoc war expenses. They were occasioned by depredations of Indians, who, escaping from the control of the United States agents having them in charge, ravaged the settlements. If the Indian tribes that engaged in these hostilities had been independent nations, the State would evidently have no claim to indemnity from the United States; but it is well understood that their status is that of wardship. They are under the care and control of the United States. They have had assigned to them a territory to occupy, and have been placed in charge of United States officials, whose duty to the State, as well as to the United States, is to restrain them from marauding and from plundering and outraging frontier settlers. When they fail to do this, and the State is obliged to call out her citizens to resist such predatory incursions, she is properly entitled to be indemnified for the expense incurred.

Upon every principle of justice and right these claims should be assumed by the United States Government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in view of our past history, I submit that it is unjust now for Representatives from the East, simply because the depredation border is now removed from their immediate vicinity and they no longer have a direct interest in claims of this character, to deny through their more numerous representation the claims of the newer sections. For years they voted money from the Treasury to pay the depredation claims of their own border; and only when they ceased to have a direct interest because the field of trouble is extended westward do they discover any doubt in their minds as to the legality of such payments.

These claims have accumulated, as I have stated, until they now amount probably to the sum of $10,000,000 in the aggregate. The situation is beset, however, with this difficulty: The machinery provided by Congress for the investigation of these claims has not proven suitable, and the Interior Department has availed itself in many cases of the clause which allowed it to transmit the evidence and claim to Congress without recommendation; so that, as I have already stated, of this vast sum of $10,000,000 in the aggregate claims amounting to but $1,500,000 have been allowed. Some of the other claims are disallowed, but the greater part are simply transmitted without departmental adjudication. Again, many claimants are unsatisfied with the amounts allowed by the Department on their claims. In fact, the official machinery of the Interior Department is unfitted for judicial investigation. It is unfair to the Government, as it is principally ex parte, and it is unfair to the claimant in subjecting him to the dangers of unsatisfactory valuation at the caprice of some Department clerk.

It is thus apparent that some additional method must be adopted that will provide for the examination of the claims in detail with better and more adequate facilities than those which the law now furnishes before they can be paid in general.

In the last Congress I introduced a bill providing for the creation of a commission with special power and authority, and with special machinery, for the examination of all this class of claims, using the evidence already on file and such additional as the parties might present. The same bill is before the present Congress, as is also one providing that claimants may be allowed the aid of the Court of Claims if desired, but through press of business and clogged by the rules of this House nothing probably will be done. The Indian question being now practically settled, these claims have probably reached their maximum, and it is to be hoped that legislation will once more resume its original thread.

In the last ten years we have failed to do our duty in that respect, which fact is about the only foundation that I can find for the position assumed by the honorable gentleman from Indiana.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The Committee informally rose; and Mr. BAGLEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

The message further announced that the President had approved bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 7871) to remove the political disabilities of W. H. Ward, of Virginia; and

An act (H. R. 7874) making additional appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes.

WILLIAM FRANKLIN GROUNDS.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. HOLMAN. The claim of Mrs. Boddy, to which the gentleman from Oregon has referred, was allowed. It had none of the earmarks of the present claim, as the gentleman will bear me out in saying when he looks over the report. The gentleman from Oregon is right in saying that every session of Congress a number of such claims are reported by the Indian Bureau to be paid out of the annuities to Indian tribes. But this is not one of those cases. This case is put upon the moral obligation of the Government.

Suppose the Government sold lands and induced settlers to take possession of them there, there might be the pretense of a moral obligation on the part of the Government—remote, I admit. But here there is not a shadow of such a pretense. When the Government sells its lands and invites its people to take possession of them it should be especially vigilant in seeing that those citizens are not exposed to peril and danger. But that is not this case. Here is a man who thinks proper to enter upon the public lands with his stock. Like many other great cattle-owners of the West he enters upon the plains with his herds of cattle to fatten on the public domain, not invited by any idea of the purchase of a home. He is there simply for the purpose of advancing his fortunes, not under the invitation of the Government and without any assurance of Government protection. Bands of Indians, under these circumstances, come down on his property and destroy his herds.

The reason I have strenuously objected to the claim is that it presents in a very bald form the proposition which I do not think Congress can sanction, that the Government of the United States is morally bound for the consequences of every act of spoliation that occurs within its limits. I never have recognized such a liability, and I hope the House will not do so now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment submitted by the committee, which the Clerk will again report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7 strike out "$19,157," and insert in lieu thereof "$13,129."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. WELLBORN. I move that the bill as amended be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have already moved that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be laid on the table.

Mr. WELLBORN. Then I offer my motion as an amendment or a substitute for that of the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. WELLBORN. Does the Chair hold that my motion is not in order? What disposition does the Chair make of it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds the motion submitted by the gentleman from Indiana has precedence.

Mr. WELLBORN. The question I submit to the Chair is whether that motion is not amendable?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do lie on the table?

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 36, noes 49.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. NELSON, and the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN.

Mr. WILLIS. With the permission of the gentlemen who have submitted these motions, I will ask unanimous consent that a yea-and-nay vote be allowed in the House.

Mr. WELLBORN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the Chair thinks proper to submit that proposition to the committee I am agreeable.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] asks unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the understanding that a yea-and-nay vote be taken on it.

Mr. VALENTINE. That it shall be reported favorably?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; unfavorably.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition, as the Chair understands it, is that the bill be reported to the House without recommendation, and with the understanding that a yea-and-nay vote be taken on it.

Mr. KEIFER. That can not be done under the rule. The bill must be reported with some recommendation.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It can be reported without recommendation by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the proposition again. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the bill under consideration may be laid aside and reported to the House without any recommendation, with the understanding that a yea-and-nay vote shall be taken on the bill in the House.

Mr. NELSON. I object unless the yea-and-nay vote shall be taken on the question of the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that under this agreement the bill will be reported without recommendation. The first vote, of course, will be on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose that would naturally be the first vote taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection to the proposition, and it is so ordered.

WIDOWS AND HEIRS OF HENRY LEEF.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 737) for the relief of Juliet Leef, widow, and the heirs of Henry Leef, deceased, owner of the bark Mary Teresa, illegally seized by Alexander H. Tyler, consul of the United States at Bahia, Brazil; reported with an amendment by Mr. MCMILLIN from the Committee on Claims.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $20,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for indemity and compensation to Juliet Leef, widow, and the heirs of Henry Leef, deceased, to be paid to them, or their legal representative, in full for losses and damages sustained by the said Henry Leef, in his lifetime, in consequence of the illegal seizure of the bark Mary Teresa by Alexander H. Tyler, consul of the United States at Bahia, Brazil.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I desire to make a brief statement. This bill has been reported seven times favorably to Congress and has once passed the House of Representatives. It has never been reported adversely. And the amount proposed in the present bill is one-fifth less than that in the bill that heretofore passed the House. I think it is evidently a just claim. I have thoroughly examined it, and hope my motion will be agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have the report before me. I will not insist on its being read.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It can be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 3 strike out "$20,000" and insert "$15,500."

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SONE AND FLEMING MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I am directed by the Committee on Claims to request the consideration of House bill No. 4183, out of its order. It is the bill for the relief of the Sone and Fleming Manufacturing Company (limited) of the city of New York.

Mr. WILLIS. I must ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROWN] to wait for a few minutes, as I have charge of the next bill on the Calendar and wish to proceed to its consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill in order.

JOHN B. DAVIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 653) for the relief of John B. Davis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to pay to John B. Davis, late contractor on mail-route No. 7506, State of Arkansas, the sum of $10,943.16, in full payment for transporting the United States mails between Memphis, Tenn., and the mouth of White River, Arkansas, and from thence to Duvall's Bluff, in Arkansas, in the years 1868, 1869, and 1870; and the payment is hereby authorized and directed to be made out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The report (by Mr. ELLWOOD) was read, as follows:

That the claim of Mr. Davis was before the last Congress, and a favorable report was made in both of its branches. The Senate report clearly sets forth the nature and justice of the claim, which this committee adopts, as follows:

"That in the year 1867 John B. Davis was a contractor with the Post-Office Department for the transportation of the mails by steamers from the mouth of White River to Jacksonport, in Arkansas.

"The mail matter for the central and western portions of the State of Arkansas, and for the northern part of Texas, was chiefly collected and concentrated at Memphis, in the State of Tennessee, carried by a line of steamers to the mouth of White River, and from that point by petitioner's steam vessels to Duvall's Bluff, and thence by rail to Little Rock, and other points west.

"The schedules for arrivals and departures of the vessels were so arranged, and by contract with the Post-Office Department, that the mails from Memphis and the west reached the mouth of White River ten or twelve hours after the petitioner's boats left that point, thus causing three or four days' delay in the entire mail service of all points west of Duvall's Bluff.

"Great complaint was made by the press and people of Arkansas and Texas on account of these delays. In this state of affairs a special agent of the Post-Office Department directed Mr. Davis to extend his service and carry all the Arkansas mails through from Memphis to the mouth of White River. This service was performed once each week from the 1st July, 1867, until the 31st day of the same month, and from the 1st August, 1867, until the 31st March, 1868, twice each week, the petitioner having purchased another steamer to enable him to do this work.

"The Post-Office Department recognized this service, and in the month of May, 1868, paid Mr. Davis for the weekly service at the rate of $5,000 per annum, and for the semi-weekly at the rate of $10,000 per annum.

"Mr. Davis continued to carry these mails semi-weekly from April 1, 1868, to March 21, 1870, but has never been paid therefor.

"In reply to a communication addressed by the committee to the Postmaster-General, asking information as to the nature of the service rendered, and the authority under which Mr. Davis acted, the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, on the 29th May, 1878, stated 'that the certificate of the postmaster at Memphis shows the service to have been performed' from the 1st April, 1868, to the 21st March, 1870, but no payment was made after 31st March, 1868, as no satisfactory evidence of proper authority for the performance of the same was presented to this office until after the time had elapsed within which the appropriation for those years could have been used.

"Since that time the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, in a letter addressed to the attorney for the claimant, states that 'should the contractor be paid for service between Memphis and the mouth of White River at the same rate as paid him for the service within the route under contract, the compensation would be at the rate of $3,837.83 per annum,' and according to his estimate there should be paid to the claimant the sum of $10,943.16.

"The committee are of opinion that the rate of compensation is reasonable, and recommend the passage of the bill."

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, is this a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. MCMILLIN. My memory is that it is a unanimous report.

Mr. WILLIS. The report is unanimous; that is my recollection.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SONE & FLEMING MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I now ask to take up out of its order the bill to which I called attention a few moments ago (H. R. 4183) for the relief of the Sone & Fleming Manufacturing Company.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I object to that bill being taken up out of its order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, two yea-and-nay votes in the House have been already provided for, and possibly a third, and I therefore move that the committee do now rise in order to dispose of the business reported.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar had had under consideration the Private Calendar, and had directed him to report back various bills with sundry recommendations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MCMILLIN. There are several bills to which no objection was made in the Committee of the Whole. We are to have yea-and-nay votes on certain other bills, and I suggest that by unanimous consent we dispose first of those to which no objection was made in the Committee of the Whole and afterward vote upon the other bills.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the committee having agreed that there shall be a yea-and-nay vote on the bill for the relief of William E. Grounds, I ask that it be so ordered.

Mr. MCMILLIN. That was the agreement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that there is no objection to that order.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, is that one of the bills reported to-day?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. BAYNE. There are other bills that have been reported favorably heretofore and which are entitled to precedence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that a yea-and-nay vote is to be had upon the bill referred to by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] when it is reached.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the understanding, by general consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so understands. Is there objection to the proposition made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] that those bills to which no objection was made in the Committee of the Whole shall be first disposed of? The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bills in their order.

BILLS PASSED.

House bills of the following titles, reported favorably from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 2158) for the benefit of John C. Herndon;
A bill (H. R. 4685) for the relief of Robert Tally, colored;
A bill (H. R. 4686) for the relief of Fendall Carpenter;
A bill (H. R. 4687) for the relief of A. Gates Lee;
A bill (H. R. 4688) for the relief of William Clift;
A bill (H. R. 1739) for the relief of Patrick Cook; and
A bill (H. R. 653) for the relief of John B. Davis.

Bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar with amendments, were taken up, the amendments agreed to, and the bills as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 737) for the relief of Juliet Leef, widow, and the heirs of Henry Leef, deceased, owner of the bark Mary Teresa, illegally seized by Alexander H. Tyler, consul of the United States at Bahia, Brazil; and

A bill (H. R. 4382) for the relief of William H. Davis.

Mr. MCMILLIN moved to reconsider the several votes by which bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EDWARD FITZGERALD.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was the petition of Edward Fitzgerald, trustee of the Catholic church at Fort Smith, Ark.; which, in accordance with the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House, was indefinitely postponed.

BARRINGTON BEHYMER.

A bill (H. R. 1265) for the relief of Barrington Behymer was next taken up, and the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar that the enacting clause be stricken out was agreed to.

NICHOLAS J. BIGLEY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The next bills in order are those to which there was objection in the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar. The title of the first bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1347) for the relief of Nicholas J. Bigley.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I move that the House take a recess till 8 o'clock this evening, for the consideration at the evening session of pension business under the standing order of the House.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion of Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky, was not agreed to.

The question recurring on the motion of Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, for a recess till 8 o'clock p. m., it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 35, noes 61.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill the title of which has been read was reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calender on the 9th of January last without recommendation and with an understanding that the yeas and nays should be taken upon the substitute recommended by the minority of the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. HOPKINS. I call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that there will be no further debate, as the yeas and nays have been ordered by the House.

Mr. HOPKINS. The question was fully debated in Committee of the Whole. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the substitute, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the original bill and the substitute be both read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of —— dollars be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of the funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay Capt. Nicholas J. Bigley for the value of the steamer Hercules and tow of coal destroyed at Memphis, Tenn., in the month of February, 1863.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the proposed substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert the following:
"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Nicholas J. Bigley the sum of $21,211.40 for 70,638 bushels of coal lost at Memphis, Tenn., in the month of February, 1863.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the substitute just read, on which the House has ordered the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 106, nays 87, not voting 130; as follows:

Mr. CLARDY with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania.
Mr. HEWITT, of New York, with Mr. BINGHAM.
Mr. POTTER with Mr. WASHBURN.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BOYNE and Mr. HOPKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the substitute was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to recommit the bill with instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is premature, but it will be in order when the question recurs on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. It may be made, according to the rule, either before or after the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

It shall be in order pending the motion before or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to commit, with or without instructions, to a standing or select committee.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HOPKINS demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now submit my motion to recommit with instructions.

The Clerk read as follows:

To recommit to the Committee on War Claims with instructions to refer the claim to the Court of Claims for adjudication and report under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government, approved March 3, 1883."

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the Bowman bill.

Mr. GEDDES. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 111.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 37, noes 111.

So (more than one-fifth of those present having voted in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. We have not time to call the roll before 5 o'clock, and therefore I move that the House take a recess under the special order until 8 o'clock this evening.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the Chair will lay before the House certain messages from the President of the United States.

There was no objection.

ARCTIC STEAMER ALERT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

When the expedition for the relief of Lieutenant Greely and his party was being prepared in the early part of the year 1884, and a search for suitable vessels was being made, the Alert, then the property of Great Britain, and which had been the advance ship of the expedition under Sir George Nares, was found to be peculiarly fitted for the intended service, and this Government immediately offered to purchase that vessel; upon which Her Majesty's Government generously presented her to the United States, refusing to accept any pay whatever for the vessel. The Alert rendered important and timely service in the expedition for the relief of Lieutenant Greely and party, which, in its results, proved so satisfactory to the Government and people of this country.

I am of the opinion that the Alert should now be returned to Her Majesty's Government, with suitable acknowledgments for its generous and graceful act of courtesy for so promptly putting the vessel at the service of the United States, and I therefore recommend that authority be given me by Congress to carry out this purpose.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, D. C., January 30, 1885.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection this communication will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, as a subcommittee of the Naval Committee of this House now have under consideration a bill introduced in this House for the disposition of the three vessels which formed the late Arctic relief squadron, I would suggest that the proper reference of that communication would be to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman make that motion?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I believe this communication has been already referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. That is undoubtedly the proper reference.

Mr. HOLMAN. The motion, as I understand it, of the gentleman from Maine is to refer it to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For the reason assigned by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BOUTELLE. For the reason, as I have said, that a subcommittee of that committee have under consideration the subject-matter embraced in this communication.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the reference suggested by the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Maine as a substitute for the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I understand that the reference has been already made to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair suggested that if there was no objection the reference would be to that committee. The gentleman from Maine moves that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 48, noes 37.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order. If I understand correctly, there is already pending before the House a yea-and-nay vote. I desire to ask the Speaker if that is not the proper order of business?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that unanimous consent was asked by the Chair and obtained of the House to submit certain communications from the President of the United States, which, under the rule, must be disposed of in that manner; and the Chair is endeavoring to aid the House in making that disposition of these communications.

The Chair will order tellers.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina, and Mr. BOUTELLE were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 78, noes 29.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum has voted.

Mr. MCMILLIN. If the gentleman from North Carolina will withdraw the point that no quorum has voted I will move that the House do now take a recess until 8 o'clock, for the consideration of the special order of business fixed for Friday evenings.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion, of course, is not in order after the point is made that no quorum is present.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I am aware of that, and if the gentleman insists upon the point of order I withdraw the motion.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I withdraw the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order being withdrawn, the motion of the gentleman from Maine is agreed to, and the communication will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

IMPRISONMENT OF AN AMERICAN CITIZEN IN ECUADOR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, in response to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 28th of January, 1885, a report by the Secretary of State in relation to the case of Julian R. Santos, an American citizen, imprisoned in Ecuador.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, D. C., January 30, 1885.

UNITED STATES OFFICERS FOR MILITARY INSTRUCTORS, COREA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

I herewith transmit a communication from the Secretary of State in regard to the desire of the Government of Corea to obtain the services of one or more officers of the United States as military instructors in that country, and recommend the adoption of a joint resolution authorizing such officers as may be conveniently spared, and who are selected for that duty, to proceed to Corea for the purpose indicated.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, D. C., January 30, 1885.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. PAYSON, indefinitely.

To Mr. SWOPE, until Tuesday next, on account of important business.

REPRINT OF THE BANKRUPTCY BILL.

On motion of Mr. BAGLEY, by unanimous consent, a reprint was ordered of the bill (S. 1372) known as the bankruptcy bill, for the use of the House.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, by unanimous consent, leave was granted to withdraw from the Committee on War Claims papers in the case of James F. Blount.

PATRICK COOK.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I will detain the House but a moment, if I can have its attention for a brief time. A bill passed the House to-day, known as House bill 1739, for the relief of Patrick Cook, which was evidently a mistake. It was a District of Columbia bill, which had been considered by that committee and had been laid upon the table by them. My request now is that unanimous consent be granted to reconsider the passage of that bill.

Mr. MCMILLIN. That ought to be done, as it appears to have been on the Calendar erroneously; a fact not brought out in the proceedings before the committee.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I think that there ought to be some objection to that.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I hope my colleague will not object.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I shall not object. I only thought that some objection ought to be made. Of course it is an accident if any bill happens to pass this House. [Laughter.]

There being no objection, the House reconsidered the vote by which the bill was passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] will preside to-night as Speaker pro tempore.

Under the previous order of the House, the hour of 5 o'clock having now arrived, the House will take a recess until 8 o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the order under which the session is held this evening.

The Clerk read as follows:

That until the further order of this House, on each Friday the House will take a recess at 5 o'clock until 8 p. m., at which evening sessions bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions shall be considered.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar for the consideration of business under the order just read.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, in the chair.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent that the business of the evening may proceed, so that members present may call up such bills as they wish, the Chair alternating between the two sides of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection that order will be observed. The Chair hears none.

SALLY RODMAN.

Mr. SPOONER. I call up the bill (S. 1111) granting an increased pension to Sally Rodman, widow of General Isaac P. Rodman. This bill was reported yesterday by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING] and he told me he had adopted the Senate report, which I will send to the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Sally Rodman, widow of Isaac P. Rodman, late a brigadier-general of United States volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $50 a month, in lieu of that which she now receives.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I call for the reading of the report.

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions (by Mr. BLAIR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1111) granting an increased pension to Sally Rodman, widow of General Isaac P. Rodman, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to submit the following report:

The claimant is the widow of Isaac P. Rodman, late a brigadier-general of United States volunteers, who was killed at the head of his division in the battle of Antietam.

The evidence shows that since the death of her husband the widow has been enabled to earn her living by taking boarders during the summer months. In this way, with the aid of the pension of $30 per month which she has received, she has supported herself and family, including an imbecile daughter who is dependent upon her.

It is shown that owing to the continued loss of health she is now unable to pursue this method of gaining a livelihood or any other, and is therefore left entirely dependent upon the pension which she now receives, and that the sum is inadequate for the support of herself and dependent family. It may be further said that General Rodman was one of our bravest officers and most distinguished himself by gallant service in the field during the late war.

This case is one of special claim for increase of pension by reason of the absolute dependence of Mrs. Rodman, she being deprived even of the resource of manual or other occupation. In addition to her own claims, which more than justify this increase, should be considered the fact that she is burdened with the support of an adult but imbecile and helpless daughter. Indeed, in our belief there should be some provision made for the support of this child.

We recommend the passage of this bill.

Mr. PRICE. I do not rise to oppose particularly this bill. But I rise again to make a protest against this whole system. I do not make an objection to have the effect of killing this bill, but I want to be understood as opposing this kind of legislation. I am willing to take care of the daughter and to take care of her mother; but I am not willing to do it at the rate of $50 a month to the exclusion of as good women burdened with as adverse circumstances all over our country to whom you give $8 a month. I want to enter my protest, to let you know where I stand. But if you wish to pass this bill I shall not oppose it.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WARD. I call up the bill (H. R. 7386) granting a pension to Eliza M. Byers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that that bill has not been delivered to the Clerk.

Mr. MATSON. I desire to say that the reports made yesterday are possibly still in the hands of the printers.

The CHAIRMAN. The report is here but the bill is not. The Clerk will send for it to the file-room and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana later.

GEORGE W. EAGLES.

Mr. MORRILL. I call up the bill (H. R. 6948) granting a pension to George W. Eagles. It is on the fifty-first page of the Calendar.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. Eagles, late a private in Company D, Eighteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6948) granting a pension to George W. Eagles, submitted the following report:

We find that claimant enlisted August 1, 1862, and was discharged May 23, 1865. His declaration for pension was filed May 20, 1880, alleging disease of lungs on march from Louisville to Perryville, about October 7, 1862, and the disease of heart at battle of Lookout Mountain, in March, 1863. The claim was rejected in the Pension Office on the ground "that there is no record and no medical or other satisfactory evidence in service or at discharge." The records show that he was absent from his company in November and December, 1862, and that on the 26th of December he was left at the hospital in Gallatin, though the cause is not given. Dr. William A. Gordon, whose credibility is reported as good, testifies that he is claimant's family physician; that he was free from heart and lung disease when he enlisted, and that he believes the family was free from any hereditary taint of lung disease.

Charles L. Sanders testifies that he lived near claimant five years before enlistment, and that he never knew of his having any disease of heart or lungs.

Ephraim Rockwell testifies that he was a sergeant, and was in charge of the sick; that claimant contracted disease of the lungs while on march from Louisville to Perryville, about October 21, 1862; that he knows this from personal knowledge of the facts, as he was present and had charge of the sick at that time; that he thinks Dr. Abbott treated him; that the doctor said he had lung fever. The regiment was ordered to Murfreesborough, and claimant was left behind at some place in Tennessee. He heard afterward that he was sick a long time.

Thomas M. Morlin testifies:

"That claimant was taken sick while on march from Louisville to Perryville, about October 8, 1862; was with him in hospital at Munfordsville, Ky., in November and December, 1862, and in hospital at Nashville in July and August, 1863; at the battle of Lookout Mountain he was excused from duty, and was afterward transferred to the Invalid Corps."

John Lamb testifies that claimant has been in very poor health since 1865; that he lives near him and sees him frequently, and has personal knowledge of his physical condition.

Placia Muse says:

"Became acquainted with claimant in fall of 1865; he was then quite feeble and complained of disease of heart and lungs; any continued exertion would bring on fainting spells; he was then almost totally disabled, and has been in the same condition ever since; have lived near him; seen him often, and assisted him and his family to live; he is extremely poor and unable to work."

The postmaster at Leavenworth vouches for the credibility of the witnesses. The examining board of surgeons at Leavenworth, in their report, January 17, 1883, say:

"The cardiac area is much increased; the heart's action is rapid and violent; he has a pinched, anxious look; health not good; disability, total."

The lack of medical evidence caused the rejection of the case in the Pension Office. Dr. Abbott, whom Sergeant Rockwell testifies treated him in service, is dead, and the claimant's extreme poverty is certainly a very good reason for his not employing physicians after his discharge.

Your committee, believing that the soldier is justly entitled to a pension, recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I wish to ask the gentleman who has reported this bill a question. Do the committee find that this applicant contracted a disease which now disables him while in the service?

Mr. MORRILL. The committee find that without a question. If the hospital records had been perfect ten words in those records would have given this man a pension at the Pension Office. The proof is absolute. He was in the hospital, but there is nothing to show what disease he was treated for.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZA M. BYERS.

Mr. WARD. I again call up the bill (H. R. 7386) granting a pension to Eliza M. Byers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Eliza M. Byers, widow of Dr. William J. Byers, late surgeon of the —— Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The following amendment was recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

Strike out the words "late surgeon of the —— Regiment Indiana Volunteers," and insert the words "and pay her the pension of the widow of a surgeon of volunteers."

Mr. MCMILLIN. I wish to ask the gentleman who calls up this bill, or the gentleman who reported it, the reason for the amendment.

Mr. WARD. The bill provides for the payment of a pension to Eliza M. Byers as the widow of a surgeon of a ——— Regiment of Indiana Volunteers. The amendment provides for the payment of a pension to her as the widow of a surgeon of volunteers.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Was he ever in the service as a surgeon? I think the report should be read.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7386) granting a pension to Eliza M. Byers, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to report as follows:

The husband of this claimant was sent to attend the wounded at Shiloh immediately after the battle, in response to the request of the Secretary of War, directed to Governor Morton. He was a physician and surgeon of known ability, and responded with alacrity to the call of the Government for help in its extremity.

The fact of his service as a volunteer surgeon and the value and extent of such service, and the further fact of the incurrence of an incurable disease in the line of duty while serving as such volunteer surgeon and his death therefrom, are shown by the sworn statements of nineteen witnesses, among them General M. D. Manson, now lieutenant-governor of Indiana, Hon. THOMAS B. WARD, a member of this House, William C. Kise, late colonel Tenth Indiana Volunteers, three eminent physicians, and other reputable and well-known citizens of Indiana.

There are numerous precedents for the granting of pensions in such cases, and we recommend the passage of this bill with the following amendment: Strike out of lines 5 and 6 the following words, "late surgeon of the —— Regiment Indiana Volunteers" and insert in lieu thereof the following words, "and pay her the pension of the widow of a surgeon of volunteers."

The amendment was agreed to

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN A. VANDERHOFF.

Mr. FIEDLER. I call up the bill (H. R. 7256) granting a pension to John A. Vanderhoff.

The bill as read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John A. Vanderhoff, late a private in Company A, Eighth Regiment United States Infantry, from which service he was discharged on account of disability April 20, 1840.

Mr. GIBSON. When was this soldier discharged?

Mr. FIEDLER. In 1840.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. JONES, of Texas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7256) granting a pension to John A. Vanderhoff, after duly considering the same, beg leave to report:

It appears that Mr. Vanderhoff enlisted in Company A, Eighth United States Infantry, December 4, 1837, and was discharged April 20, 1840, to quote a letter from the honorable Commissioner of Pensions to the chairman of this committee—

"'On account of the loss of portions of five fingers from frost-bite,' he claims pension for said disability, and alleges that the same was incurred while on a twenty-four-hour leave of absence from the fort at Sacket's Harbor, New York, about January 1, 1840. The claim has been rejected because the soldier was not in the line of duty when the alleged disability was incurred.

"The Surgeon-General United States Army furnishes a record of treatment at the post hospital, Madison Barracks, Sacket's Harbor, New York, January 2, 1840, for 'frost-bite,' but the surgeon of the post, in correspondence with the Surgeon-General, indistinctly recollects that the soldier was intoxicated when the disability was incurred. The soldier denies being intoxicated, and as the evidence on this point is obscure, I am of the opinion that it should not interfere with the soldier's right to pension in view of his long term of service and the time when said service was rendered, and also his present age and disability, and I therefore submit the papers for your consideration."

It being very clear to the committee that Mr. Vanderhoff is entitled to a pension, the bill for his relief is reported back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I think that bill should be amended by striking out all that relates to the discharge of this soldier.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama submit an amendment?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I ask that the latter part of the bill be again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Late a private in Company A, Eighth Regiment United States Infantry, from which service he was discharged on account of disability April 20, 1840.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I move to amend by striking out all after the word "infantry."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GIBSON. I feel compelled to object to the passage of this bill. The object of the pension laws is to place upon the pension-list those soldiers who by service for their country have been disabled.

Now this report shows that in 1840 this soldier, in a city, in the midst of civilization, where he could have no possible chance of frost-bite or suffering unless by his own neglect, while upon leave of absence and in a state of intoxication, was frost-bitten, and the best they can say about it is that the evidence upon that point is obscure. Yet we are asked to put upon the pension-list, among the roll of those whom their country honors for their patriotic services, a man who can show no claim for any service rendered to the country, nor for any disability incurred in the service of the country.

I submit to this House that it is unwise, unjust, to put upon that list men who have thus been disabled; and I submit that it is dragging down the pension-roll into disgrace and arraying the common sense of the country against the whole policy of pensions to put such a man upon the roll. I therefore object to the passage of this bill.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside informally.

Mr. FIEDLER. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall this bill be laid aside and reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass?

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman reporting this bill at what time this applicant first applied for a pension?

Mr. FIEDLER. The gentleman who reported the bill is not present, but I introduced it.

Mr. McMILLIN. Can the gentleman tell us when this applicant first applied to the Pension Office for a pension?

Mr. FIEDLER. I do not know the exact date. This soldier is an old man 70 years of age; ever since 1840 he has been disabled from following any avocation by which he could support himself, and obliged to live in part on the charity of neighbors. From what has been said here gentlemen may have got the impression that he is a common drunkard. That is not the fact. He is a man who was well recommended to me before I took hold of his case. As I have said, he is 70 years old; he has but a few years to live; he asks only for a pension from the date of the passage of this bill, and I think that if gentlemen could have an opportunity to see the man they would not rise here to oppose this bill. If the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] will read the report he will see that even the Commissioner of Pensions recommends the granting of the pension, and I think the judgment of the Commissioner ought to go at least as far as the judgment of any gentleman on this floor, inasmuch as he has greater opportunity for studying these cases carefully than we do or can have.

Mr. McMILLIN. In reply to what the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FIEDLER] has just said, I can only say that if in the judgment of the Pension Office this applicant is so deserving of a pension, the wonder is that the office has not already given him one.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I can answer that objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] yield?

Mr. McMILLIN. With pleasure.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. This is a case that does not fall under the pension laws.

Mr. McMILLIN. Because——

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Because at the time this man was frost-bitten he was on leave of absence for twenty-four hours, and it has been the uniform ruling of the Pension Office that a soldier absent on leave is not in the line of duty, and that if he is wounded, or if he contracts disease while absent on leave, he is not entitled to have a pension therefor. This is one of those cases that are rejected upon what we may term technical grounds, and the only thing that makes against the applicant is that there is a little doubt as to whether or not this soldier had been drinking at the time he was frost-bitten. The soldier himself is an old man, and is said to be a reputable man and a man of good standing in the community in which he resides, and he denies that he had been drinking at the time he was disabled. But that was not the ground on which the application was rejected by the Pension Office, because the Commissioner did not believe the allegation of drunkenness to be well founded. If the Commissioner had believed that this soldier was intoxicated at the time he was frost-bitten he certainly never would have recommended the case to Congress. As gentlemen know, there is an act of Congress which has been many years upon the statute-book, by which, in cases where the rules of the office compel the rejection of a claim that is nevertheless regarded as an equitable one, the Commissioner is required to recommend the case to Congress for the passage of a bill for the special relief of the claimant.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT] sees but one difficulty in the way of this claimant, but I see two. There are two reasons, it seems to me, for hesitating about this bill, and they are backed up by very strong circumstances, which tend to show the correctness of the conclusion at which the Pension Office arrived. One is that this man was clearly not in the line of duty at the time he received this injury. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT] speaks of that as a technical objection. It is an objection so substantial that it has governed the ruling of the Pension Office ever since its organization—a ruling the breaking down of which would close up entirely the chasm which now exists between good and evil service, and which determines the question whether, in any given case, a pension shall be granted or denied.

The next difficulty in the way is the intoxication of the claimant at the time he received the injury, and the circumstances to which I wish to call the attention of the House are these: there is a law which has been on the statute-books for years allowing this man to apply for and receive a pension, if entitled to one at all; yet forty-four years—nearly half a century—after the disability should have accrued, Congress is called upon for the first time to interfere in his behalf, and, for aught that appears here, he never even thought that he was entitled to a pension, or never thought so sufficiently to induce him to apply to the Pension Office until more than a quarter of a century after the disability accrued. Can this committee believe, in view of these circumstances, that this claimant himself believed that he was entitled to a pension? It seems to me not.

I simply desired to make this statement. I know it is said that the claimant is old; but if there is to be no distinction between faithful service and that service which was at least questionable, then the distinction between a good soldier and a bad one vanishes, and glory in the arms of the country is gone.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Though this man, when discharged from the Army, being a young man and able to work, notwithstanding he had been frost-bitten or otherwise injured in the service, saw proper to struggle and try to make a living for himself for a quarter of a century, I do not think that is any good reason, provided he was entitled to a pension, why the Government should not give him a pension in his old age. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] seems to think that because we did not pension this man immediately after his discharge, he ought not to have a pension at all; that this fact is a reason why he should not have a pension.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman misunderstood me if he supposes me to reason in that way. I did say that the fact of the man having waited nearly half a century before applying for a pension was a circumstance tending to show that he himself did not believe he was entitled to a pension.

Mr. FIEDLER. I wish to correct the gentleman on that point. This soldier did not wait for half a century before making his application.

Mr. McMILLIN. How long?

Mr. FIEDLER. I do not know exactly how long.

Mr. McMILLIN. It is nearly half a century since this soldier was discharged.

Mr. FIEDLER. As the gentleman from Alabama has suggested, this man, although partly disabled, was able for some years after his discharge to make a living. He has, however, had an application pending for a pension for some years; but he had no "friends at court" to take care of his application; he did not understand what was the cause of the delay in his case until he came here himself last winter, when the Commissioner of Pensions advised him to have a bill introduced, and stated that he had no doubt Congress would grant the application for a pension, as under the law the Commissioner could not grant it.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Now, Mr. Chairman, the same argument urged by my friend from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] against granting a pension to this old man could be urged against two-thirds of the pension claims presented to Congress. The same argument could be urged against every man who has filed a claim in the Pension Bureau during the last eight or nine years based upon service rendered in the last war, because, unless his injury dates back to that war, to the time he was in the service, he is not entitled to a pension. I repeat that the argument which the gentleman from Tennessee has urged against this bill might be urged against two-thirds of the claims pending to-day in the Pension Bureau and against four-fifths of the claims which are presented to Congress.

But again, the gentleman says that this man is not entitled to a pension because when he incurred the injury he was not in the line of duty. I admit that under the letter of the law as construed by the Pension Bureau he was not entitled to a pension. But for the construction which the Pension Bureau has been giving this law for so long a time this man would have been put upon the pension-roll without the necessity of application to Congress.

I remember very distinctly that in the Forty-fourth or Forty-fifth Congress I reported to this House a bill to pension the widow of a soldier who had served in the late war, the circumstances being substantially these: Having had a furlough for thirty days to return home, the soldier at the expiration of his thirty days, or just before, started to return to his command, and while on his way was accidentally killed. The widow having applied to the Pension Bureau for a pension, the bureau decided she was not entitled to be pensioned because the soldier was not in the line of duty when accidentally killed.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Was not that bill reported upon the theory that while returning to his command the soldier was in the line of duty?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I am speaking of what the decision of the Pension Bureau was upon that case. I think if I had been Commissioner of Pensions and had been called upon to decide that case I would have held that the soldier was in the line of duty, because it was his duty upon the expiration of his leave of absence to return to his command. I reported that bill upon the ground that the soldier was in the line of duty, and his widow was entitled to a pension. That bill was reported in the Forty-fourth or Forty-fifth Congress—I do not remember which; and it passed this House. I think it passed the Senate. If it did not it ought to have passed there.

Mr. GIBSON and Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Before the gentleman from Alabama takes his seat I would like to ask him a question. I wish to inquire whether the Commissioner of Pensions has not recently changed the ruling of the office on that point, so as to admit cases of this kind. Without making any opposition to this case, I merely inquire whether a late ruling of the Commissioner—I do not know that it has yet been published, but I understand such a ruling has been made—would not admit this case, although it would have been, under the previous rulings, rejected. I understand the ruling of the Commissioner now to be that where a soldier was temporarily absent from his command for a day or two on leave, but within the military lines and subject to recall at any hour, he was really in the exercise of his duty, and if injured at such a time, unless it appears by positive testimony that the injury was the result of his own fault, he is entitled to a pension. I think that ruling is correct.

Mr. McMILLIN. If the gentleman from West Virginia will yield to me a moment——

Mr. GIBSON. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does not the gentleman from Ohio know there is an express statute to the contrary of what he says? The rule is——

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I am not aware there is a statute contrary to that. On the other hand, I think there is no such statute, and I am inclined to think the ruling of the Commissioner now is the correct ruling, and is really within the intent and meaning of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia has been recognized.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I have not yielded the floor except for a question to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Yes. The gentleman yielded to me for a question.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I have been on my feet all the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I do not know whether the Department has made the ruling, as suggested by my friend from Ohio, or not. I only have to say if he has not done it, he ought to do it. That is what I think is the law.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I think it is the law, too.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I think this soldier if he was injured by being frost-bitten, on twenty-four hours' leave, was in the line of duty, unless he was drunk or something of that sort.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Subject to call at any minute.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. If he was drunk I do not think he should have a pension. If the testimony specified he was drunk I do not think the Commissioner would have recommended this case to Congress. The decision of the Commissioner was based on the old rule, that being absent on leave he was not in the line of duty, and therefore not entitled to a pension.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, it is not a pleasant matter for me to object to the pensioning of any disabled man. I know what it was to have been a soldier. I know what it is to be crippled and wounded. I think I can appreciate the hardships that soldiers went through. I am glad to be able to say in all my experience as a soldier during the war, and as a man since then, I have had nothing to occur to break my respect for those honest and brave soldiers who followed the flag of their country, who maintained it in time of war, and who have been a credit to it in time of peace. I am here to-night and at any other time in good faith, as far as my oath of office will allow me, to carry out not only the letter but the spirit of the law in pensioning and supporting those who have lost their lives in defense of their country or their ability to maintain themselves.

But, as I said before, Mr. Chairman, the theory of the pension law was based first upon the maintenance of the man who has been deprived of the power to maintain himself, and then upon the theory of honoring those who deserved honor at the hands of the country. Now here comes a man who was in the regular Army, enlisted in time of profound peace, as a matter of occupation and for pay, in 1837. A few years afterward, when there was nothing to call him out from his quarters, nothing to expose him to the inclemency of the weather, he gets leave of absence in a city where they have police authorities, where they have hospitals, where they have all the provisions which civilized people have adopted for the purpose of taking care of the unfortunate—he goes on leave of absence and comes back frost-bitten; and how can anybody say that occurred in the line of duty or in defense of his country?

And not only that, but the report says that the surgeon who attended him said he was frost-bitten while intoxicated.

Mr. FIEDLER. If the gentleman will permit me, I will interrupt him.

Mr. GIBSON. Certainly.

Mr. FIEDLER. If the gentleman will read the report he will see that it states nothing of the kind. There was a charge made which the soldier denied, and there was no proof presented to substantiate that charge. The charge was indistinct.

Mr. GIBSON. Let me go on. The surgeon says the question was raised at the time of the injury, but that the soldier denied he was intoxicated. Now, that was a matter of proof, but there is no proof contradicting that statement that he was intoxicated, and that this injury occurred while he was intoxicated and not in the line of duty.

I wish to say under my obligations as Representative here, under my duty to the honest citizens who have been kept out of their pensions by this sort of claims, I feel called upon to object to this bill, and I notify the gentleman now that he can not pass it here without a quorum.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask that the bill be passed over informally.

Mr. McMILLIN. Before that is done I ask the indulgence of the House to read a section of the Revised Statutes. If we apply the rule of enumeration of one thing, in construction of the law, excluding any other, it seems to me the law is as I insisted when the gentleman from Ohio was on the floor. This class of officers are enumerated among those absent who are entitled to a pension according to section 4700 of the Revised Statutes:

> Officers absent on sick-leave, and enlisted men absent on sick-furlough, or on veteran-furlough with the organization to which they belong, shall be regarded in the administration of the pension laws in the same manner as if they were in the field or hospital.

And they are the only classes I have any memory of who are so regarded as in the line of duty.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside informally.

Mr. FIEDLER. I object.

Mr. PERKINS. Let me make a suggestion that I think will be satisfactory to all parties. I think that we may be able to enter into a stipulation or compromise which it seems to me would be fair to both sides. I would suggest, therefore, that we take a vote in committee, and if the committee report the bill favorably let the previous question be ordered on it in the House with the understanding that it shall not be considered in the House until we have a quorum present. I think the gentleman from West Virginia will consent to that arrangement.

Mr. GIBSON. If it is understood that it is to be considered only in the presence of a quorum I will not object. I am willing, sir, to fight this case entirely upon its merits and take no technical advantages of any kind. I shall not object to that understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WOLFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has just submitted the proposition to the committee that a vote be taken in the committee upon laying this bill aside to be reported to the House, with the understanding that if reported favorably the previous question shall be ordered and the bill disposed of when a quorum is present; to which the Chair understands there was no objection.

Mr. GIBSON. Do I understand the gentleman to propose that the previous question is to be considered as ordered?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. The previous question is ordered but no vote to be taken until a quorum is present.

Mr. GIBSON. I want to ask the Chair a parliamentary question, whether that will cut off debate; or whether if the previous question is ordered it will give an opportunity for the discussion of the bill in the House?

Mr. MORRILL. One hour will be allowed.

Mr. GIBSON. That will be satisfactory to me.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLFORD. Mr. Chairman, a single word on this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing before the committee now but to take a vote on the proposition, which has been assented to on all sides.

Mr. WOLFORD. I suppose before a vote is taken it will be in order to discuss the bill. I want to say a few words on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that a discussion is not now in order, as unanimous consent has been given to close the debate and come to a vote upon the bill on the terms suggested.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY C. AXLINE.

Mr. McCOID. Mr. Chairman, I ask consent now to call up the bill (H. R. 6653) granting a pension to Mary C. Axline and put it upon its passage.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place the name of Mary C. Axline, widow of Jacob Axline, late a private in Capt. Hickman Mills's company of Missouri Enrolled Militia, on the roll of pensioners of the United States, at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. HOLMES) was read, as follows:

That claimant is the widow of Jacob Axline, who was a first lieutenant of the "Hickman's Mills" Enrolled Missouri Militia, who was enrolled April 5, 1862, and was killed by "bushwhackers" June 1, 1864.

The application of the widow was rejected by the Pension Office November 2, 1875, on the ground "that the person on whose account pension is claimed was a member of the Enrolled Missouri Militia, and that the claim was not prosecuted to a successful issue within the time prescribed by law."

It is disclosed by the evidence in the case that the officer, who had been commissioned first lieutenant of the company after enlistment was passing from Hickman's Mills, where his company was stationed with a part of the Second Colorado Cavalry, to Westport, Mo., another military station, and was shot and instantly killed by concealed bushwhackers, who made their escape.

It is also in evidence that the widow has never remarried. Your committee think the widow of this officer, who lost his life in defense of his country, should receive a pension, and therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill, amended, however, by striking out the word "private," in line 5, and inserting the words "first lieutenant," and by striking out all after the word "militia," in line 6, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HARRIET A. B. CORTS.

Mr. PATTON. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill H. R. 8038, and ask that it be put upon its passage. It is a bill granting a pension to Harriet A. B. Corts.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Harriet A. B. Corts, widow of George P. Corts, late an assistant adjutant-general of volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month from and after the passage of this act, the same to be in lieu of the pension now received by her.

The report (by Mr. PATTON) was read, as follows:

That the claimant is the widow of George P. Corts, late assistant adjutant-general Second Brigade, Third Division, Second Army Corps, United States volunteers. He entered the service in Pittsburgh, Pa., April 29, 1861, in the Twelfth Pennsylvania Volunteers, deciding to do so the very day that Fort Sumter was fired upon. This was a three months' regiment and upon the expiration of his term of service he returned to Pittsburgh, and in connection with the late General Hays within a few days raised the Sixty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers. He served with that until he was commissioned by President Lincoln an assistant adjutant-general of volunteers "for bravery on the field," and assigned to the staff of General Alexander Hays. He served with him until he fell, May 6, 1864, in the battle of the Wilderness. In that battle the husband of the claimant was shot through the shoulder, and though he recovered sufficiently to do some light court-martial duty, he was mustered out, suffering from his wounds until he died from their effects April 18, 1870.

The nature of the service he gave his country may be understood from the report of General Hays of the battle of Gettysburg:

"Capt. George P. Corts, assistant adjutant-general, and my aid, Lieutenant Shields, of the Sixty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, were constantly by my side, exhibiting, as always heretofore, self-possession and courage of the highest order. Captain Corts lost two horses killed under him."

Immediately after the battle of Bull Run Mrs. Corts came to Washington to attend her brother, who was seriously wounded, and finding the greatest need of laborers in the hospitals, went to work as a nurse. For about one year she was a volunteer nurse in Ward D, Armory Square hospital, and then for two years and over engaged under the auspices of the Michigan Soldiers' Relief Association, visiting over twenty hospitals in and around Washington each week regularly, and supplying stores as the soldiers' needs required, as well as aiding in their collection.

After the death of her husband Mrs. Corts made application and was pensioned at the rate of $20 per month from the death of her husband. She now asks that this be increased on account of her own services. It appears by her petition that her services for over three years were given without any pay whatever, besides several hundred dollars of her own money, which she had earned as a teacher, and paid her own expenses while she worked as a nurse. She was married in 1864, but continued her work as a nurse till the war closed, in 1865.

She has also lost a brother, who died of wounds contracted in the service, and her father is also unable to support himself by reason of disease contracted in the Army, and partially dependent upon her for support. She has a daughter also dependent upon her. Mrs. Corts is also suffering from a broken ankle, and is less able to support herself, or those dependent upon her, and it also entails much additional expense. She has no property, and no one to look to for assistance or support.

The following exhibits are presented in support of her claim:

"In view of all these facts, the gallant services of her husband, and her own long and valuable services as a nurse, given without fee or reward, the death of her brother, and disability of her father, and her own dependent condition, your committee recommend the passage of the bill, with the following amendment: 'Strike out the word 'fifty,' in line 8, and insert 'forty.'"

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I desire to ask the gentleman reporting this bill one or two questions: First, this is an increase of pension based upon the gallant services of the husband of this lady?

Mr. PATTON. No, sir, not altogether; partly that and partly upon her own services as nurse.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. His rank was that of captain?

Mr. PATTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Then you propose to increase the pension to $40. She is drawing a pension now of $20 as the widow of a captain?

Mr. PATTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. And you propose to increase it to $40 because she herself acted in the capacity of a nurse?

Mr. PATTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Therefore you propose to give a double pension. Is that the idea?

Mr. PATTON. If the Clerk will read the appendix or letters in connection with this report I think the gentleman from Alabama will have no objection.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I do not care to have it read. But I did not want the pension to be based upon the idea alone of her being the widow of a gallant officer of the rank of captain, because I did not wish to establish that precedent. But if it is based upon the ground that she acted as a nurse in the service, we having heretofore pensioned nurses from $20 to $25 a month, I do not object.

Mr. BAGLEY. If the gentleman from Alabama will permit me a moment I will say, in reference to this bill, that I remember distinctly when it was considered in the committee it was based upon her services as nurse. She was getting $20 a month as a widow's pension, and her military services in the field as a nurse were deemed sufficient to warrant this additional pension. That was the consideration that influenced the committee.

Mr. MATSON. I desire to say in addition that while the action of the committee was distinctly upon the ground of her services as a nurse, still so far as I was individually concerned I thought she ought to have an increase of $5 more than she gets here because other nurses had been pensioned at $25; and I thought she should have $45 instead of $40. So I remember distinctly that the action of the committee was based wholly upon the proposition that she deserved the increase of pension because of services as nurse.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I would much rather see the sum voted to this widow paid for her services as a nurse, and not confound pensions with service. There is a bill on the Calendar, and I trust it will pass yet this session and become a law, to pay all nurses $25 a month for the time they were employed as nurses less the sum they have already received. That would apply, of course, to this lady, as to all other nurses.

Now the distinction between a pension and pay for service is clear, and I do not think they ought to be confounded. I do not like myself this mixing of pensions, because they will be taken as precedents hereafter, say what you will on this floor. It will be referred to as a case where one widow of a captain has had a pension of $40 a month, and consequently we should give it to another.

The widow of a major-general who was a volunteer and killed in battle is entitled to only $30 a month under the law. I do not think it wise to combine pension and pay, which seems to be what is proposed in this bill, although it is claimed otherwise.

I think the pension should be left at $20; or, if you will, make it $30, and give as much as to the widow of a major-general under the law; but do not confuse pension and pay. Leave this widow to draw her pay under the bill which I believe will become a law. The House will be asked to pass it the first opportunity. Leave her to draw her pay under that with other nurses, and let her pension be separate and distinct from pay. I for one do not like the combination.

Mr. HORR. I do hope this House will not postpone this lady's case until we can pass the bill to which the gentleman from Ohio refers through the House.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is the gentleman from Michigan going to oppose it?

Mr. HORR. I am not going to oppose it; but I think the time would never come when this lady would get anything under it. I judge from my experience in passing meritorious bills.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the bill as amended be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I shall vote against it.

The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative.

The bill as amended was accordingly laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THOMAS M'GILL.

Mr. RYAN. I call up the bill (H. R. 8133) granting a pension to Thomas McGill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas McGill, late first-class pilot on the steamer Sally List.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 436) granting a pension to Thomts McGill, submit the following report:

We find that in 1864 the steamer Sallily List was employed by the United States Government and was used in transporting troops and supplies between Louisville, Ky., and the mouth of Red River. On or about the 25th of May, 1864, while the boat was under the orders of General A. J. Smith, commanding the Union forces at Vicksburg, it was ordered to Memphis. While on the river and near the foot of Yellow Bend, on the Arkansas side of the river, the boat was fired upon by a force of confederate soldiers, commanded by General Marmaduke. The boat was badly damaged and claimant was severely wounded. One shot entered the right shoulder, penetrating the body and coming out at the back; another shot pierced his left wrist. Claimant was at the time of receiving the wound pilot of the steamboat.

The proof seems conclusive that the steamer was in Government employ at the time that claimant was occupying the dangerous and responsible position of pilot, and while faithfully discharging his duty received the wounds as above described. The Pension Office could not grant a pension for the reason that he was not an enlisted man. The committee have uniformly recommended pensions to employés wounded in battle, and they therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. I suggest to the gentleman from Kansas that he should allow that bill to be passed over informally. It is for the pension of a man who never was in the military service; a mere employé in a civil department, that happened to be transporting troops.

Mr. RYAN. I think we ought not to do as the gentleman from Tennessee has suggested. The House has never yet refused to pension a man who, as a civilian, was employed in the military service during the war, and sustained injuries while so employed, especially when he was absolutely wounded. This man, in the performance of his duty, was wounded through the body and through the wrist, and has in consequence been wholly disabled.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I ask my friend from Kansas if this man was acting under military orders?

Mr. RYAN. Yes, sir; he was under the command of General A. J. Smith.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] that this man was performing a duty which an enlisted man could not perform, a duty requiring particular and special knowledge of the stream he was navigating; and no enlisted man could have been detailed for the work. They had to call on such men for that service.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And he was acting under orders in a military capacity.

Mr. MATSON. Not only was he acting under military orders, but he was in the performance of a military act at the time he was wounded. Not only that, but he was placed in perhaps as dangerous a position as a man could be placed in while acting as pilot under the circumstances. In addition to that, let me say there are a large number of precedents of pensioning men of this very class—I mean pilots—because they were engaged in an extremely hazardous service, military in every sense of the word. It seems to me this is as strong a case of the kind as can be presented, and it is necessary to appeal to Congress to get any remedy or aid at all.

Mr. McMILLIN. I shall not take the course with this case that I would take if it were the case of an exclusively civil employé. The service this man did may have been a forced service, as occasionally occurred at that time. If it had been a service which this man could have avoided at his will, he not being an enlisted man, I would have made the question of a quorum to the last.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

OLIVE W. PARKER.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I call up the bill (H. R. 3901) granting a pension to Mrs. Olive W. Parker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Olive W. Parker, widow of Stephen N. Parker, deceased, late of the Ninth Battery Massachusetts Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3901) granting a pension to Olive W. Parker, having had the same under consideration, report as follows:

The claimant is the widow of Stephen N. Parker, late a private of the Ninth Independent Battery of Massachusetts Light Artillery Volunteers, who was enlisted on July 20, 1862, and was mustered out June 6, 1865, and who claims to have been injured by the bursting of a shell at the battle of Gettysburg, Pa., July 3, 1863, and who died subsequent to his discharge from the service in consequence of inflammation of tonsils, and whose claim for pension was pending at the time of his death and since renewed by the widow of the deceased, but rejected February 8, 1882, on the ground that the disease of which he died was not the same as that contracted while in service.

The committee find that the deceased was probably injured at the time and place alleged, and while in service, as confirmed by the testimony of his captain, Daniel Marston, late of the Ninth Massachusetts Battery, and Horace Prescott, late a private in the same battery. The records of his battery are inconclusive as to the disability incurred, and the medical testimony from that source is, through inability of procurement or other cause, wanting.

But Albert H. Blanchard, M. D., late a surgeon of the Third Massachusetts Cavalry, shows that he was acquainted with the deceased both prior and subsequent to his service; that the deceased was a well man prior to his entry into service; that he treated him during the last three years of his life, and knew his condition subsequent to his discharge and up to the time of his death; that he was subject to frequent attacks of headache, with confused feelings and noises in his head, which amounted to disease; that he was incapable of performing ordinary labor in consequence, except with great difficulty; that this condition was precisely such as would result from concussion of the brain, and, in his opinion, did result from that cause. The deceased was also treated, subsequent to discharge, by Charles H. Boody, a practicing physician of Wayland, Mass., who confirms the testimony and opinion of Dr. Blanchard.

From all the testimony adduced the committee are of the opinion that, while the deceased came to his death from inflammation of tonsils, which disease might have been contracted subsequent to his discharge from the service of the United States, he evidently was also suffering from a disordered condition of his head, resultant from concussion caused by the bursting of a shell in the battle of Gettysburg, and should have been entitled to a pension therefor.

The committee therefore report the bill favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I would like to ask the gentleman who calls up this bill if this pension is based on the ground that the death of this soldier was the result of the wound that he received in the service or of disease contracted while in the service and in the line of duty, or is it based on the idea that the soldier himself would have been entitled to a pension for the wound, and, although he may have died from some cause that had no origin in the war, yet the husband having been wounded, being entitled to a pension for that wound, the widow should have a pension? Does this case go upon the idea that widows of all the soldiers who may have been entitled to a pension and who died are also entitled to a pension although the disease that caused the death may not have any connection with the war? That is the question I wish answered.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not so understand it, Mr. Chairman. I was not there myself; I did not see this man either get the wound or die; but I have some statements here from which I understand the case in this way: That this man was at the battle of Gettysburg there is no question; that a shell burst over his head and caused concussion of the brain there is, I believe, no question. Then, I understand that for three days after that he knew nothing at all, and that from that time up to the time of his death he was very often confused, sometimes out of his mind, and gave his family a great deal of trouble in searching for him when he wandered away. I understand, too, that he had a sore in his head which discharged frequently, and which some of the physicians testify (I believe that is in the report) was such a sore as would very likely be caused by a concussion of the brain.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, that is all I desire to know. If this pension is based upon that idea, then I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. If the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT] will give way for a moment, I will state that it is the opinion of the committee that the evidence in this case is such, that if this man had made application himself for a pension he would undoubtedly have obtained it, but he died before any application was made, and when it was made it was rejected upon the ground that the immediate cause of his death was this disease. But the committee think that if the man had made application in his lifetime he would have obtained a pension beyond any doubt, because the evidence is quite clear from his captain and from one or two comrades that he was injured in the way stated by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN]. Therefore, the Government having paid no pension at all in this case up to the present time, and the widow being poor and needy and an old lady, we are inclined to think that the pension ought to be granted.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, allow me to say one thing further. I understand that this man in one of his insane attacks wandered off into the woods; that while he was there one of these fits came upon him, and that being thus away, with no one to attend to him, he caught a severe cold, from which this trouble in the tonsils resulted and from which he died immediately after; so that in fact his death was directly traceable to his wound.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And that is the theory upon which this pension is proposed to be granted?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Yes.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. If that is the theory, I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. MILLIKEN. That is the theory.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LAVISA HETH.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I call up the bill (H. R. 7524) granting a pension to Lavisa Heth.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place the name of Lavisa Heth, widow of Wilford S. Heth, late a private in Company F, Forty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

The husband of this claimant was a good soldier, with a record extending through the whole war, having served in the Forty-ninth Indiana Volunteers and in the One hundred and Forty-fourth Indiana Volunteers. He incurred rheumatism in the military service and suffered therefrom up to the time of his death. The immediate cause of his death was a heart-clot, which occurred while he was suffering from a severe attack of pneumonia. The Pension Office could not, upon the certificate of the physician attending him in his last illness, grant the widow a pension, as rheumatism was not the immediate cause of his death. He states in his affidavit, however, that rheumatism rendered him more liable to heart-clot.

It appears to your committee, therefore, that there was a sufficient connection between the cause of death and the disease which originated in the service to enable us to justify a favorable report in this case, particularly in view of the faithful services of the soldier, and the needy and helpless condition of his widow, which is clearly established by abundant testimony,

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I understand that this bill is based upon the same idea as the last one, namely, that the disease, rheumatism, contributed to the death. That being so, I have no objection to the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

PRISCILLA J. SMALL.

Mr. MURRAY. I call up the bill (H. R. 2540) granting a pension to Priscilla J. Small.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Priscilla J. Small, widow of Andrew J. Small, late a lieutenant of company H, First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. LE FEVRE) is as follows:

Andrew L. Small was commissioned first lieutenant of the First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry March 18, 1865, but first enlisted on the 27th day of August, 1861, in Company I, First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry. He was finally mustered out of the service September 13, 1865. His record as a soldier is excellent. He died at Piqua, Ohio, November 4, 1874, and the claimant was granted a pension at the rate of $17 per month from November 4, 1874, the date of her late husband's death, and increased $2 per month from the same date on account of one child under 16 years of age at the date of the soldier's death.

The pension was originally granted upon the following evidence:

John B. Small, on November 25, 1878, in an affidavit, made oath as follows:

"I was duty sergeant in Company I, First Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, in the war of the rebellion. My brother, Andrew L. Small, was acting first lieutenant of same company. We served together over four years. I was with him before and at the time of the departure of said company from Hilton Head, S. C. My brother was afflicted with a dry, hacking cough during the most of our stay at Hilton Head, and had occasional fever, but did not call on or was not attended by the surgeon of the regiment or any other physician. I went with him from Hilton Head to New York by ship, and from thence to Columbus, Ohio, where we were discharged from the service at Camp Chase. All through the journey he was afflicted with a dry, hacking cough and occasional fever, and his expressed determination to bring the company home deterred him from employing a physician. The cause of the disease was exposure in the service, which increased gradually until we left Hilton Head, and was further aggravated by the crowded condition of the ship to New York and traveling in crowded box-cars from New York to Columbus, Ohio. Upon our arrival at home, in Piqua, he employed his old family physician, Dr. H. H. Smiley, who treated him before we separated. My brother never recovered from the disease above mentioned."

In a subsequent affidavit the same witness testified as follows:

"I was associated with Andrew L. Small almost continually after our return home, seeing him every week and sometimes oftener, until his death, and the disease which he had on returning home gradually increased until the time of his death."

Dr. H. H. Smiley, under date of November 30, 1878, testified as follows:

"I was called to prescribe for Andrew L. Small September 14, 1865, and found him suffering from attack of lung fever; found inflammation greater in the left lobe of lung. The case became chronic, and the patient was unable to take any exercise requiring effort for five or six weeks. Bronchial respiration became apparent, with dullness and more or less hectic fever. About the end of three months hepatization of left lobe of lung and adhesion followed. At the end of the first year the patient became able to attend to light duties, but continually suffered more or less pain; he was obliged to quit his occupation as a carpenter and tried to work upon a farm, but was never able to perform hard labor without bringing on palpitation of the heart. He suffered from night-sweats, and there was never a lapse of six months but I was called to treat him. He continued in this condition until the last year of his life when he became feeble and short of breath, could not breathe easily during the night, and was often obliged to sit up in bed. In the fall of 1874 he became confined to his bed and died on the 4th day of November, 1874. The immediate cause of his death was diffused suppuration of the lungs, diarrhea, and prostration consequent upon previous diseased condition."

G. W. Enbody and William F. Blood, comrades of Andrew L. Small's company, testify that—

"He had sickness and fever on his way from Hilton Head to New York, and from New York to Columbus, Ohio. The steamer was greatly crowded, and from New York to Columbus they rode in crowded box-cars."

J. M. Sellenberger, another comrade, under date of November 30, 1878, testifies:

"On what was known as Wilson's raid, in March, 1865, from the Mississippi to the Atlantic, Andrew L. Small was attacked with disease of the lungs, which manifested itself by almost constant coughing and some fever, and this condition seemed to increase until we were discharged from the service. He was a sound man previous to enlistment."

W. F. Blood, another comrade, testifies:

"I was with Andrew L. Small on the Wilson raid, and heard him complain of trouble with his lungs, and he had a hacking cough and fever. Was with him on the journey home, and he was sick all the way home, and from that time to the date of his death never recovered his health."

Charles Wolfram, another comrade, testifies in substance the same as affidavits already quoted of other comrades.

Casper Miller and Charles W. Alexander, both neighbors, testify that—

"We were intimate with Andrew L. Small while in the Army, and lived near him from the time of his return from the Army until the date of his death. When he returned from the Army he was afflicted with a lung disease, manifested by a severe cough, from which he never recovered, but grew gradually worse until the date of his death. There were times when he would be relieved temporarily, but not long at a time, and he always complained of disease of the lungs."

Dr. Kitzmiller, of Piqua, Ohio, May 21, 1878, testified:

"I knew Andrew L. Small to be a sound and healthy man previous to enlistment. I saw him after his return from the Army, and he had the appearance of one suffering from some organic disease, and he grew worse until his death in December, 1874. Dr. H. H. Smiley was his physician."

Against this great array of testimony, given by so many comrades and neighbors, a special examiner was sent in the summer of 1883, and upon his report Mrs. Priscilla J. Small was dropped from the pension-rolls. Some testimony was obtained tending to show that the immediate cause of Andrew L. Small's death was not what has been stated by his family physician and friends. In commenting upon this examination Stephen Johnston, an attorney of Piqua, Ohio, who stands above reproach both for integrity and ability, wrote to the Pension Department, August 20, 1883:

"I demand an investigation of Special Examiner Edmunds, and charge that in the pension case of Priscilla J. Small—

"(1.) That before he took any evidence in the case he declared in the presence of reputable witnesses that he would set aside this pension, no matter how much evidence she was able to produce.

"(2.) Because in taking the evidence he attempted to suppress evidence material in the case.

"(3.) Because he disregarded the usages of courts in taking evidence.

"(4.) Because he acted as a detective instead of a judge.

"(5.) Because he sought to obtain the testimony of witnesses that he knew to be swift and unfair in their evidence."

Your committee has examined this case with great care, and the conclusion is that Special Examiner Edmunds, in preparing his report, seemed to ignore the rights of the pensioner in order to gratify his desire to make a personal attack upon worthy and reputable persons toward whom he had obtained a personal dislike, and who, since his report, have been vindicated from all the charges he saw fit to make.

The charges made your committee have not deemed it necessary to repeat, because they have been triumphantly disproved in a court of justice.

The passage of the bill is recommended.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I would like to ask the gentleman whether that special examiner is still in the service?

Mr. MURRAY. I understand that he is, but I think he ought not to be.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And, if so, where he was during the last election? [Laughter.]

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

HARRIET M. BAILY.

Mr. HANBACK. I call up the bill (H. R. 7602) granting a pension to Harriet M. Baily.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Harriet M. Baily, widow of William P. Baily, late a colonel in the service of the United States of the Second Regiment of Delaware Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

We find that Harriet M. Baily is the widow of Col. William P. Baily, of the Second Regiment of Delaware Volunteers. Colonel Baily enlisted July 16, 1861, and was discharged May 16, 1864. January 12, 1877, he applied for and received a pension for paralysis. He died February 1, 1877, being at the time utterly helpless, requiring the constant aid and attention of another person, and receiving the highest pension allowed under the law. The immediate cause of his death was acute pneumonia, and the Pension Office was compelled to reject the application of claimant on the technical ground that the disease from which he died was not the result of his military service.

The attending physician, Dr. Monroe B. Long, of Plainfield, N. J., testifies that he was for five years the medical attendant of Col. W. P. Baily.

"He has been greatly affected with paralysis agitans and its nervous complications, such as paralysis of the eyelids, of the laryngeal muscles, of loss of control of the muscles of the limbs and body generally, requiring constant care and attention in dressing, eating, walking, &c. * * * Thus for years he passed a miserable existence, until the last illness terminated in death."

The doctor then describes the last illness as acute pneumonia, and adds:

"I have known Mrs. Harriet M. Baily for years, and consider her a lady to be admired for her long, patient, and faithful care of her afflicted husband, for honesty of purpose in the pension matters connected with herself, and as a lady of good standing in society."

Colonel Baily's terrible condition was caused by a wound received at Fredericksburg, Va., December 13, 1862. A few weeks would have probably ended his miserable existence had not the attack of pneumonia terminated fatally, and it is highly probable that had it not been for his enfeebled condition his system might have resisted the fatal disease.

Your committee recognize the fact that the Pension Office could not, under existing laws, grant the pension, but they believe that claimant is in equity entitled to it, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

MARK SPENCER VAN LOAN.

Mr. BAGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 7822) granting a pension to Mark Spencer Van Loan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mark Spencer Van Loan, of Catskill, N. Y., late a private in Company K, Eighteth New York Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. BAGLEY) is as follows:

The claimant enlisted in Company K, Eightieth New York Volunteers, as a private, February 26, 1862, and was discharged November 28, 1862. He filed a declaration for pension May 25, 1880, and it was rejected on the ground that the records of the War Department show that the alleged disability (left inguinal hernia) existed prior to enlistment.

The claimant, in his affidavit, alleges that the rupture was caused while on the retreat from Cedar Mountain the day after the battle; that his company, among others, was sent to Cedar Mountain to re-enforce some other troops, and upon arriving there ascertained that the confederates had gone, and that his company was then turned back to go to Rappahannock Station. He was detailed to guard some baggage-wagons, and while on a run he stumbled over a stone or rock in the road which was concealed from view by the wagon just ahead, and he fell to the ground. Upon arising he experienced a severe pain in the side, which proved to be a rupture.

Upon arriving at Frederick, Md., he told an officer he could go no farther; went to the hospital at that place, and was afterwards sent to Capitol Hospital at Washington, and afterwards transferred to Fort Schuyler, N. Y., where he performed some guard duty. Applied to Robert Barthalo, United States Army surgeon, who examined him, and gave a certificate stating that he found him incapable of performing duty because of a left oblique inguinal hernia. It is on this certificate that the entry appears, "Existed prior to enlistment," which fixes the record in the War Department.

Claimant states emphatically, under oath, that he "never made such a statement, and that it is positively untrue, but that the injury was received at Cedar Mountain. Never saw any of the company officers after that. The only one of my comrades who knew how I was injured was John Young, my tent-mate, who died many years ago." Captain of the company was killed at Gettysburg, and the first lieutenant was afterwards killed. Hence he can get no testimony of officers. Hernia kept growing worse until he got home and used a truss. Is now incapacitated for heavy labor.

Adjutant-General's report states: "January and February, 1862, present." Same report to June 30, 1862. July, August, September, and October, 1862, was absent sick in general hospital. Discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability November 28, 1862.

Surgeon-General's certificate states: "Entered general hospital, Frederick, Md., September 14, 1862, and was transferred September 24, 1862. Entered Capitol general hospital, Washington, D. C., September 25, 1862 (diagnosis not given), and was transferred October 7, 1862, to general hospital, Fort Schuyler, N. Y., October 10, 1862, with hernia, and discharged from service November 28, 1862."

Examining Surgeon J. Jewell says that from the evidence before him it is his opinion that the said disability did originate in the service in the line of duty, and that the disability is permanent. Claimant has a left inguinal hernia, and it descends into the scrotum.

Upon the question of prior soundness the testimony of Horace Barker, captain of a barge on which Van Loan worked during the year 1860, is presented. He says claimant's work was to assist in loading and unloading freight, which consisted of hay, butter, pork, leather, and other produce; that the work was such as to require heavy lifting and hard work, and that claimant was able to and did perform such labor, and that no man with a rupture could have performed such work. There were but three deck-hands on the barge, including Van Loan, who did the heavy work.

Samuel L. Penfield, owner of the barge on which Barker was captain, says, substantially, that claimant was employed by him, and corroborates the evidence of the captain, and that claimant did the work of a sound, able-bodied man; that after his return from the Army he was unable to perform hard work, and has been employed as a flagman at a railroad crossing part of the time during the summer and autumn, and that he has received small pay because of his inability to do hard labor.

Walton Van Loan, brother of claimant, says that nothing was known of the soldier having hernia until his return from the Army.

William L. Du Bois, druggist, testifies to having furnished claimant with a truss several times.

William P. McLawry, M. D., at an examination made January 3, 1885, says that Van Loan has a large inguinal, indirect hernia of one side, easily reducible, but very difficult to retain even with a strong truss. It incapacitates him from all heavy work, and even a slight cough brought it down in spite of well-directed and pretty firm pressure.

The claimant is very poor; has a family, consisting of wife and three children, and oftentimes is obliged to ask aid of the charitable. He is an honest, sober, moral man, willing to work, if able. He withheld his application for a pension to a late day for the reason that he had an aversion to appealing for such relief, but his necessities finally compelled him.

The committee think it a deserving case, and believe his disability was incurred in the service, and recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. BAGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I will state the facts of the case. This man entered the service in 1861, and was a good and faithful soldier. On the retreat from Cedar Mountain, while guarding a cattle-train and on the double-quick, he stumbled and fell over a stone, which caused hernia. The Pension Office rejected his application on the ground that the disability was incurred prior to enlistment. The only evidence in the War Department that goes to establish such a state of facts is the statement in his certificate of discharge that the disability was incurred prior to enlistment. The man himself swears positively that he never made any such statement; that the officer who wrote the certificate had no means of knowing the facts, and that the statement is entirely untrue. The evidence to show his prior soundness is full and complete. I am personally acquainted with this applicant, this being one of the very few pension bills that I have introduced. I know this to be a meritorious case. The man is poor, has a large family, and is in need of a pension.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

L. W. PITTS.

Mr. HOLMES. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 7803) granting a pension to L. W. Pitts. It is on page 52 of the Calendar.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of L. W. Pitts, late of Company B, Third Regiment Kentucky Cavalry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. HOLMES) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7803) granting a pension to L. W. Pitts, having considered the same, report as follows:

The claimant, L. W. Pitts, late a private in Company B, Third Kentucky Cavalry Volunteers, enlisted in October, 1861, and was finally discharged July 15, 1865. His declaration for pension was filed March 20, 1880. He alleges disability from injury received at Owensborough, Ky., in November, 1862, while on detached duty enlisting men, his horse falling and dislocating his left shoulder and finger. Claimant's application was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground of no record; meaning, we suppose, no record of injury, and that claimant has declared his inability to furnish satisfactory testimony to show that his alleged injuries were received in direct line of duty. The fact that claimant was a sound, healthy, able-bodied man when he entered the service admits of no question. There are no regimental hospital records on file, as shown by the report of the assistant adjutant-general. The report of the assistant surgeon-general in this case shows that there are no records of the Third Kentucky Cavalry, nor of the Twelfth Kentucky Cavalry, on file prior to March, 1864; hence the deduction of the Department that there is no record of the injury in the hospital records is evidently not the fault of the soldier but of the regimental surgeon in not keeping them at all.

The evidence in this case shows conclusively that the claimant was injured, that his horse fell on him, that he was absent on recruiting service, and also had an order to arrest a deserter, and that he was in the line of duty at the time. There seems to be very little point in the case to be put in issue, except it be the question of whether he was intoxicated or not; and this is only stated by one witness as a rumor, which, as the evidence shows pretty conclusively, was instigated by malice.

Dr. Littlepage, of the Twelfth Kentucky Cavalry (not claimant's regiment), was called to attend him immediately after the injury at the house of one Boyd, where he was taken, and gives an unqualified statement of the injury to claimant as alleged by him, and also of the serious character of the dislocation of the shoulder. The evidence of the examining surgeons and of all the witnesses is to the effect that claimant is from one-half to totally disabled.

Dr. Dowell, an eminent physician and surgeon, who examined him, says:

"The applicant for pension has the following symptoms: The head of the humerus is partly thrown off the glenoid cavity against the coracoid process. There is projection of the acromion and a hollow under it at the back joint. The head of the bone is prominent in front and may be felt to move in rotating the elbow. He has cramps of the hand, difficulty in raising the elbow, because the head of the bone strikes the coracoid process. Partial dislocation forward is what I diagnosed the trouble, and it is of long standing. I think he is disabled for the performance of manual labor; total, or $8 per month."

Dr. King, another examining surgeon, referring to the nature of the disability, says:

"That the head of the humerus does not enter fully into the glenoid cavity. I believe said cavity to contain an ossific or calcareous deposit. The applicant also has received an injury to distal articulation of left-hand third finger."

Both doctors give it as their opinion that the disability originated in the service, and that it is not aggravated or protracted by any vicious habits.

Claimant states that he had fulfilled the order of arrest which he carried by taking into custody one Galloway, and were both riding one horse when the horse became frightened, or, as claimant believes, one Adcock struck the horse. Whether the horse was struck or became frightened otherwise is not material. Claimant was unable to control him, and as a result the horse fell upon claimant, dislocating his shoulder and finger. This is testified to by Galloway.

Claimant mentions in a late affidavit the receipt of an anonymous letter, in which the statement is made, "We have owed you a grudge for twenty years; and after waiting impatiently we have met with an opportunity, and embraced it."

Your committee find that the claimant is a man of most excellent character, and the evidence of himself, the witness Calloway, Dr. S. B. Littlepage, assistant surgeon of Twelfth Kentucky Cavalry, that he was called to treat claimant at Boyd's farm about October, 1862, found his left shoulder dislocated, that he reduced it, administered to his wants, and returned to Owensborough, and did not treat him any more, we think prove this case. The doctor further says:

"I remember distinctly of treating L. W. Pitts at the Boyd farm, near Owensborough, Ky. My affidavit was made from memory, but is correct. Having to ride through a country infested with guerrillas to treat the said Pitts perhaps makes the matter more vivid to my memory than otherwise it might be. Pitts, in my opinion, deserves a pension."

It will be remembered that Littlepage was called in from another regiment, and resides now at Rockfort, Ind., and makes his statement without any prejudice against claimant or partiality for him. In view of the fact that claimant appears to be a man of upright character as a citizen, that he served nearly four years as a soldier, and is now in a very helpless condition, all of which is plainly traceable to the injury received while in the line of duty, your committee cheerully recommend him as a proper subject for a pension, and return the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I think we had better have some explanation of the case.

Mr. HOLMES. As the report is somewhat long, I will state briefly the circumstances. This man, L. W. Pitts, was a soldier in the Twelfth Kentucky Cavalry, and was detached for the purpose of arresting a deserter named Galloway. Pitts had arrested Galloway and was returning with him, both being on the same horse. They were accompanied by another cavalryman on another horse, when the horse on which Pitts and Galloway were riding became frightened. It is alleged in the evidence that the other cavalryman, Adcock, struck the horse of Pitts. But there is some dispute about that, and the fact is immaterial. At any rate the horse became frightened, threw the two men and fell upon Pitts, dislocating his shoulder and breaking one of his fingers. He was quite severely injured, and was taken to the house of a Mr. Boyd, where he was attended by Dr. Littlepage, surgeon of the Twelfth Kentucky Cavalry. It is testified by Dr. Littlepage, as well as other surgeons, that the shoulder of Pitts was very seriously dislocated, and that there is an ossific deposit.

There seems to be no question about the extent of the injury and the justice of the claim. It was rejected at the Pension Office because there was no hospital record; but it appears at the Adjutant-General's Office and the Surgeon-General's Office that no records of the Third Kentucky Cavalry or the Twelfth Kentucky Cavalry were kept; so that there was probably good reason for the failure to find any hospital record in reference to the injury of this soldier.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

RACHAEL A. QUEEN.

Mr. MATSON. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 8132) to restore to the pension-roll the name of Rachael A. Queen. Before the bill or report is read I wish to state that the report, which was sent to the Printing Office to-day, has been returned for correction. It embodies the original letter of the Commissioner of Pensions recommending the passage of this bill. This case comes from the State of California, and I know nothing about any of the parties. The bill and report are based on the letter of the Commissioner of Pensions, under the resolution of May, 1880, recommending this as a meritorious case.

This claimant is the sister of a soldier who was killed in battle. The Commissioner of Pensions represents to the committee that she is, and has been all her life, terribly deformed; that she was wholly dependent upon her brother; that she has no other relative, is now in a helpless condition, and is an object of public charity. This is the substance of the report. I call up the case because I regard it as one of extraordinary merit.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to restore to the pension-roll the name of Rachael A. Queen, dependent sister of Jonathan Queen, late of Company F, Fifth California Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE S. HAWLEY.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 8104) granting an increase of pension to George S. Hawley. This case has not yet been placed on the Calendar because it has been so recently reported.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That George S. Hawley, late a first lieutenant in the Twenty-third Regiment United States Colored Troops, now on the pension-roll at the rate of $24 per month, from and after the passage of this act shall be entitled to receive a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The report (by Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire) was read, as follows:

George S. Hawley served as a private Company F, Fifth Regiment Vermont Volunteers, from August 27, 1861, to December 15, 1863, when he re-enlisted in the same regiment and served until March 11, 1864, and on the next day (March 12, 1864) was mustered into service as first lieutenant Company E, Twenty-third United States Colored Troops, to serve three years or during the war. He was honorably discharged September 30, 1864, on account of wounds received in action before Petersburg, Va., July 30, 1864. The proceedings of a board of officers convened at Annapolis, Md., September 27, 1864, contain the following:

Case No. 813.

First Lieut. George S. Hawley, Company E, Twenty-third United States Colored Troops.

* * * The board find this officer now suffering from the effects of a gunshot wound in the face; the ball entered on the left side below the malar bone, passing through the hard palate and posterior nares, and emerged through the malar bone of the right side, carrying away the teeth of both sides of the upper jaw, interfering with the function of mastication. The board is of the opinion that this officer will not be fit for duty in the field again, and they recommend he be discharged from the service.

L. P. GRAHAM,
Brigadier-General Volunteers.
G. S. PALMER,
Surgeon, United States Volunteers.
T. HENDRICKSON,
Major, United States Army.

The claimant was pensioned at $17 per month from September 30, 1864, to May 3, 1880, and at $18 per month from that date to — 1883, since which time he has received $24 per month.

Examining Surgeon E. D. Warner, September 6, 1873, thus reports his condition:

"He was wounded by a musket-ball, which entered the left side of the face at the lower part of the antrum, passing directly through and emerging directly opposite. The teeth in the upper jaw were all removed except one back molar. The entire roof of the mouth was all carried away, leaving nasal passages entirely open. The result was a flattening of the antrum on both sides of the face, a long-continued discharge from the face, speech was almost destroyed, deglutition seriously affected in consequence of food passing directly into the nostrils. He can only masticate by artificial teeth and a large plate which covers the entire roof of the mouth. The face is greatly disfigured."

Dr. F. P. Wheeler, examining surgeon, May 3, 1880, reports his condition substantially the same, and adds that without an artificial upper jaw and roof of the mouth Lieutenant Hawley can neither articulate a word nor masticate and swallow food nor drink. Surgeon Wheeler further certifies that the pensioner is suffering with arthritic rheumatism, affecting all the joints and the extremities, and that the pensioner, on account of said rheumatic disease, has not been able for the last year to perform any manual labor, and but very little for the last five years.

Again Dr. Wheeler says:

"I can not resist the conclusion that the disease with which this pensioner is afflicted has been gradually induced by impaired digestion, imperfect assimilation of food, and blood-poison, caused by a lack of those secretions so essential in the preparation of food for the stomach in the first process of digestion, occasioned by the gunshot wound through the mouth."

The same surgeon, November 14, 1881, reports Hawley—

"In nearly a helpless condition; can not walk nor bear his weight upon his feet; has but little use of his hands and arm; can not sustain himself upon crutches; his joints enlarged and stiff from chronic arthritic rheumatism. Pensioner is rendered completely helpless by this rheumatism and can not make a move of any kind without assistance. I find his disability equal to and entitling him to $50 per month."

The pensioner is now in the Soldiers' Home in Montgomery County, Ohio, totally disabled and without property, except his pension. He has a wife and family of young children; has gone to the Soldiers' Home, in order that his dependent family may have the entire benefit of his pension. We call attention to the following statement of Hon. JOHN W. STEWART, member of Congress from Vermont, who has personal knowledge of the facts touching Lieutenant Hawley's unfortunate condition.

To the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

GENTLEMEN: House bill 8104, introduced by me and referred to your committee, granting increase of pension to George S. Hawley, is, in my judgment, meritorious, and I beg leave to submit a brief statement of facts within my personal knowledge.

The nature and extent of the wound and its immediate evil results to the pensioner are sufficiently shown by the records of the case from the Pension Office now before you.

Mr. Hawley is a resident of the town in which I live. He has a wife and a family of young children. He has left them and gone to the Soldiers' Home in Montgomery County, Ohio, in order that his dependent family may receive the entire benefit of his pension, $24 per month. He is totally disabled, and is only able to move about slowly and with great difficulty upon crutches. He can do nothing by way of support, and needs help and care from others. His rheumatic difficulties began when in the service, but his terrible wound so overshadowed lesser complaints that the surgeon was not called upon to notice or treat him for rheumatism, so that the record evidence required by the Pension Office when he made application there for increase of pension could not be produced. Yet from the date of his discharge to the present time this disease has made steady progress, until it has reduced him to helplessness, and he lives a life of daily suffering, from which there will be no release but death. His imperfect mastication, resulting from his wound and the consequent incomplete digestion, have no doubt eminently contributed to aggravate the disease he contracted in the Army. He has no property. I personally know him to be an intelligent, honest, and upright citizen, whose habits are and always have been exemplary.

I do not hesitate to commend his case to your favorable consideration.

I am, very respectfully,

J. W. STEWART, M. C.

JANUARY 27, 1885.

We also append Dr. Hall's affidavit and the affidavit of other citizens of New Haven, Vt., having knowledge of the facts, showing Lieutenant Hawley's soundness before going into the Army and present helpless condition.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill granting him an increase of pension to $50 per month from and after the passage of the act.

Strike out, in line 5, the word "twenty-four" and insert the word "fifty."

The undersigned, a physician of New Haven, Vt., being duly sworn, hereby deposes and states that he knew George S. Hawley, a former resident of this town, before he entered the military service of the United States; he was then a strong, sound, healthy man; that after his discharge he suffered from rheumatism; that he was for years unable to perform manual labor; that he stated repeatedly to affiant that he suffered pain when he made any movement; that affiant believes that his disability is the result of exposure while in the military service.

E. D. HALL, M. D.

Subscribed and sworn before me this 26th day of December, 1884, at New Haven, Vt.

ALFRED M. ROSCOE, Notary Public.

I personally know Dr. Hall, above named, to be a reputable practicing physician of my county.

J. W. STEWART, M. C.

The undersigned residents of New Haven, Vt., being duly sworn, hereby depose and state, that they knew George S. Hawley, a former resident of this town, before he entered the military service of the United States, war of the rebellion, and knew that he was a sound, healthy man; that after his discharge he suffered from rheumatism, and for years was only barely able to walk; he grew more and more lame; he was finally obliged to use crutches; he appeared to suffer pain when making any movement; that it is believed that his disability was caused by exposure during his military service.

Subscribed and sworn to before me at New Haven, Vt., this 27th day of December, 1884.

ALFRED M. ROSCOE,
Notary Public.

I have examined the list of names appended to the within affidavit and personally know every one of the persons named. They are all, without exception, reputable men, residents of the town adjoining my own on the north, whose statement of any fact within their knowledge is entitled to full credit.

J. W. STEWART,
Member of Congress.

JANUARY 27, 1885.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. This man is now perfectly helpless; his joints are all stiff. He is an inmate of a soldiers' home, and requires the services of an attendant.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

DAVID BRYAN.

Mr. HILL. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 4216) granting a pension to David Bryan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of David Bryan, late a private in Company B, Seventy-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteers.

The amendments to the bill were read, as follows:

Insert "N" after "David," and strike out "B" and insert "D."

Amend the title so as to read:

"A bill granting a pension to David N. Bryan."

The amendments were severally agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. There ought to be some report or statement about this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The report covers three or four pages.

Mr. HILL. The bill, which I call up by request of my colleague

[Mr. LE FEVRE] who is absent, is based upon the following facts: The report goes on to show, Mr. Chairman, that this soldier was affected with paralysis and became totally paralyzed. He made application to the Pension Bureau for a pension on the ground that he had contracted chronic diarrhea and rheumatism in the service. The proof showed that he was not so afflicted but had paralysis, and that paralysis had not ensued necessarily from those diseases. The report recites that his family physician, a score of his neighbors, and a number of his comrades testified that when he entered the service he was a perfectly sound man, and that when he came home he was disabled from these causes and still remains so. The case has been rejected by the Pension Bureau on account of the technicality I have named. I had not given this case any attention at all until it was put into my hand by my colleague, when I read the report and have made this statement from what I read in that report.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ALMIRA K. PARKER.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. I call up the bill (H. R. 7722) granting a pension to Almira K. Parker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Almira K. Parker, dependent mother of Ira J. Adams, deceased, formerly a private in Company A, Third Regiment of New Hampshire Volunteers, at the rate of —— dollars per month, from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill H. R. 7722, having considered the same, make the following report:

The claimant is a widow and is the mother of Ira J. Adams, deceased, formerly a private in Company A, Third Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers. He enlisted August 15, 1861, and served until his death, July 2, 1864, caused by a gunshot wound received in action at Drury's Bluff, May 13, 1864. He was her only son, and but 18 years old at the time he enlisted.

The claimant is utterly destitute of property, and is now old and in feeble health. She was allowed a pension as a dependent mother at the rate of $8 per month from July 3, 1864, to August 16, 1864, the date of her second marriage. Her second husband, one Douglass Parker, died November 21, 1879, leaving an estate worth only $21. Her first husband left her no property whatever.

By letters on file in the Pension Office from the soldier to his mother, during the war, it clearly appears that he contributed from his bounty and wages considerable sums toward her support. Her pension was stopped solely on account of her second marriage. Mrs. Parker has no relatives or friends who are able to provide for her and furnish her a home in her declining years.

Your committee think that she ought to be pensioned now, and report the bill (H. R. 7722) granting her a pension back to the House with an amendment, striking out all after the word "volunteers" in the seventh line, and inserting the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendments of the committee were read, as follows: Strike out "at the rate of —— dollars per month, from and after the passage of this act," and insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I should like to ask the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. RAY] why the Commissioner of Pensions dropped her from the roll?

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. Because she was married six weeks after the pension was allowed, in 1864. The law cut off her pension at that time.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. A dependent mother?

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. Yes; that is so, as I understand it.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I think the gentleman is mistaken—the widow it cuts off, but not a dependent mother.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. That was the reason given in the papers. I think she was a widow, or she could not have been married a second time without previously having been a widow.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Remarriage cuts off the pension of a widow, but not that of a dependent mother.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. The marriage of a dependent mother cuts her off. She may be dependent on that son for support, and therefore is entitled to a pension.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

DAVID PETERSON.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. By request I call up the bill (H. R. 3185) granting a pension to David Peterson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of David Peterson, of Keokuk, Iowa, on the pension-roll, on account of his services in Company G of the Ninth Iowa Regiment in the war of the rebellion.

The report (by Mr. HOLMES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred bill H. R. 3185, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to report:

David Peterson enlisted as a private in Company G, Ninth Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, on the 30th day of September, 1863, and was discharged May 10, 1865. In July, 1864, while stationed with his company at Keokuk, Iowa, and while on guard at night, he was overcome by sleep and was surprised in that condition, resulting in his court-martial and his sentence to confinement for six months at Fort Snelling, Minn. While in such confinement he contracted the disease for which he applies for a pension. There is no question as to the fact that the applicant is disabled, and from the evidence certainly to a three-fourths degree. The only question is whether he shall be given a pension under the circumstances named. He himself frankly testified that the disability was acquired while in confinement at Fort Snelling. His application was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that his disability, originating while in confinement at Fort Snelling, was not acquired while in the line of duty, while in military service. This undoubtedly on the view that he is not entitled to any relief for disabilities arising while he was under sentence of court-martial.

Your committee, however, think that the sentence of court-martial was all the sentence that he received, and that the loss of his health was not included in such sentence, and, as will be noted, the soldier was not at the front, but doing guard duty at Keokuk, in the State of Iowa, at the time he was found asleep at his post. While an infraction of duty should be punished, and has been in this case, the claimant having served his full sentence, we do not think that the rigor of the Government should be exercised further, and that if the claimant, as seems clearly proved, became disabled while serving out such sentence, that he should receive a pension. Your committee therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LYDIA WETHERBEE.

Mr. HAYNES. I call up the bill (H. R. 7724) granting a pension to Lydia Wetherbee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Lydia Wetherbee, dependent mother of George L. Wetherbee, deceased, formerly a private in Company B, Fourteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7724) granting a pension to Lydia Wetherbee, having duly considered the same, respectfully report:

Lydia Wetherbee, a widow 72 years of age and without means, is the daughter of a Revolutionary soldier. Her son, George L. Wetherbee, a private of Company B, Fourteenth New Hampshire Volunteers, was killed in battle near Winchester, Va., September 19, 1864. She was largely dependent on said son for support before and up to the time of his death. The deceased left a widow, but no children, who drew a pension until her second marriage, three or four years after her first husband was killed. Mrs. Wetherbee's claim was rejected at the Pension Office because the soldier left a widow. (R. S., section 4707.)

The Commissioner of Pensions, in a letter announcing the rejection of Mrs. Wetherbee's claim, September 26, 1884, says:

"The needy circumstances of the claimant and the sacrifices made by her during the late rebellion, in giving up her sons to the country's service, appeal strongly to the sympathy of every one, but the law governing her claim is imperative."

Your committee think that since the widow has remarried and her pension stopped on that account, it is equitable that the soldier's mother, whom he largely aided in his lifetime, now poor and old, should receive the same pension.

Your committee accordingly report favorably and recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment striking out all words after the word "volunteers," in line 7, and inserting the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out "at the rate of $12 per month from and after the passage of this act" and insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. IDA P. BELCHER.

Mr. MATSON. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. SMALLS. Mr. Chairman, I call up House bill 7836, for the relief of Mrs. Ida P. Belcher.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Ida P. Belcher, widow of the late Capt. Edwin Belcher, of Company E, Seventy-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, on the pension-roll, and that she be paid a pension at the rate of $25 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Strike out in line 7 and 8 the words "and that she be paid a pension at the rate of $25 per month from and after the passage of this act" and insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws as applicable to widows of deceased officers and soldiers."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ABIGAIL HONEY.

Mr. SMITH, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5929) for the relief of Abigail Honey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Abigail Honey, widow of Joseph W. Honey, late a private in Company H, Twenty-sixth Regiment Iowa Infantry.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. SOPHIA A. MORGAN.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HISCOCK. I call up the bill (H. R. 1091) granting an increase of pension to Sophia A. Morgan, widow of the late Charles H. Morgan, a brevet brigadier-general in the United States Army.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Sophia A. Morgan, widow of Byt. Brig. Gen. Charles H. Morgan, at the rate of $50 per month.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

In lines 6 and 7, after the words "brigadier-general," insert the words "and brigadier-general of volunteers."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Sophia A. Morgan, widow of the late Charles H. Morgan, a brevet brigadier-general in the United States Army and brigadier-general of volunteers."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PETER M. HAGLER.

Mr. CULLEN. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 252) granting a pension to Peter M. Hagler.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Peter M. Hagler, late a corporal of Companies B and G of the One hundred and ninth and One hundred and eleventh Regiments Illinois Volunteers, respectively.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. MARY K. S. EATON.

Mr. BAGLEY. I call up Senate bill 468, granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Mary K. S. Eaton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the pension of $30 per month heretofore granted and now allowed to Mrs. Mary K. S. Eaton, widow of General Amos B. Eaton, late Commissary-General of the Army of the United States, be, and the same hereby is, increased to the sum of $50 per month; and that the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, directed to pay to her the sum last mentioned per month from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. It seems to me that that bill had better be amended by inserting the words, after $50 per month, "in lieu of the pension now received by her."

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask that the bill be again reported, to see if there is any necessity for returning it to the Senate with an amendment.

The bill was again read.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I see that it is not necessary to offer that amendment.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CAPT. VINCENT PHELPS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 7805) granting a pension to Capt. Vincent Phelps.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Vincent Phelps, late a captain and assistant quartermaster in the United States Army, and to pay him a pension from his resignation from the service.

The committee recommend the following amendment:

Strike out, in lines 7 and 8, the words "and to pay him a pension from his resignation from the service."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE W. CLARK.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I call up the bill (H. R. 8033) granting an increase of pension to George W. Clark.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of George W. Clark, late a private in Company E, Twelfth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, to $50 per month, from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I think the report in that case had better be read.

The report (by Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire) is as follows:

George W. Clark, private Company E, Twelfth New Hampshire Volunteers, enlisted August 19, 1862; discharged June 2, 1865. He was wounded by the explosion of a shell while in the line of duty at the battle of Swift Creek, Virginia, at or near Bermuda Hundred, May 9, 1864, which resulted in the amputation of his right arm and right leg. The stump of his leg is some six or seven inches in length. The arm is amputated just below the elbow. He now draws a pension of $36 per month. He is compelled to have an attendant to assist him, more or less, every day, in dressing and undressing and otherwise. He is without any means except his pension.

Your committee make a favorable report, and recommend the passage of the accompanying bill granting him $50 per month hereafter.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I would like to ask the gentleman what is the pension of a soldier who has lost both arms or both legs?

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. That would depend upon the length of the stump left.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Where both arms were lost, or both legs?

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. No; not in that case.

Mr. MORRILL. Where both legs or both arms were lost the pension is $72 per month.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. Yes; but this is a case where the soldier lost one arm and one leg.
